Nominated by acclamation for the three year-seats open in Dorm Women's district were Misses Pat Hamer, Patty Wall and Christy Farnham. Candidates for the three six-month-seats are Misses Beth Coy, Connie Bernstein and Betty Kay Johnson.

Erwin Fuller was chosen by acclamation to run for the year-seat in Dorm Men's district 1. Candidate for the six-month seat open in Dorm Men's 1 is Bob Matthews, winning the nomination over Charles Coley.

Nominated by acclamation as candidates for the two year-seats from Dorm Men's III were Dave Jones and Dennis Rensler.

Held over for legislative action until next week's meeting were candidates for legislative seats in Town Women's district (two year-seats open), Dorm Men's II (three year-seats open), Town Men's I (six year-seats open), Town Men's III (four year-seats and two six-month seats open), and Town Men's IV (one year-seat open.)

Nominated for vice-president of the freshman class was Charles Graham.

Nominations for secretary and social chairman of the freshman class were postponed until the next meeting.

The lack of nominations for many of the vacant legislative seats in several districts brought words of criticism from party leaders.

Midway during the meeting Don Furtado stressed the lack of preparation shown by the members present, and stated that "everybody at this meeting should be ashamed of themselves."

Strauss Operetta Is Featured Show Today

"Die-Fledermaus," John Strauss' sparkling operetta, will be presented Tuesday at 8 p. m. in Hill Hall by the National Grass Roots Opera Company.

The performance is the second program in the Tuesday Evening Series presented by the Dept. of Music in conjunction with the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

The group, under the direction of Alfred Popper, will perform the opera in English. The soloists, who are young professional singers, will include Orrin Hill, tenor from New York, singing the role of Eisenstein; Arlene Sanders, soprano from Ohio, in the role of Rosalinda; Blossom Craft, sprano from Georgia, as Adele; and Fred Patrick, baritone from New Jersey, as Falke.

The operetta was written in 1874 and is set in the Vienna of that day. Colorful costumes and sets add to the charming music and witty plot, full of mistaken identity and practical jokes.

The public and students have been cordially invited. Admission is free.

MEDICAL SCHOOL BULLETIN

Indian Medical Practices Traced In Article

An article telling how medicine was practiced by the Indians early in the history of this state is the lead article in the current issue of The Bulletin of UNC School of Medicine.

The bulletin is published four times yearly by the School of Medicine in cooperation with the Whitehead Medical Society and the Medical Foundation of North Carolina. It is published with private funds.

The editor of the current issue is Dr. Fred W. Ellis associate professor of pharmacology of the School of Medicine.

The bulletin is received by all members of the faculty of the University, alumni of the School of Medicine, members of the Medical Foundation, members of the Parents' Medical Club and other health institutions throughout this area.

"Indian Medicine in Early North Carolina' was written by Dr. Warner Wells, who is assistant professor of surgery in the School of Medicine.

The cover of the bulletin carries a photograph of Dr. David Gordon Sharp with a new electron microscope. Dr. Sharp recently joined the faculty of the Department of Bacteriology. The new microscope maks it possible for the scientist to see particles as small as one ten millionth of an inch. The publication contains an article on Dr. Sharp and the new biophysics laboratory at the School of Medicine.

"Dandelions and Mushrooms" by Dr. G. C. Kyker is a tribute to Dr. James C. Andrews who retired this year from the faculty of the School of Medicine. Dr. Kyker is a former faculty member of the School of Medicine.

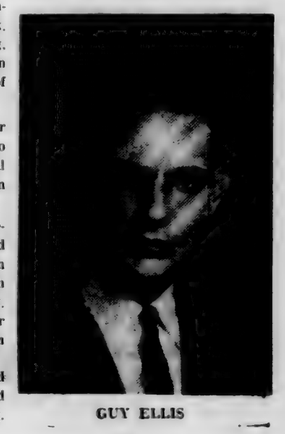
Student's Leg Broken In Weekend Collision

A UNC junior suffered a broken lege and abrasions in a two-car collision Sunday but his two companions escaped injury in the wreck.

Being treated at a Fredricksburg, Va., hospital following the collision was William G. (Guy) Ellis, of Penns Grove, N. J.



His two companions Carl Keller and Roy Wood — returned to Chapel Hill after the accident. All three are members of Delta Upsilon fraternity.

Reports here said the trio was returning to UNC after a weekend stay at Ellis' home when the car in which they were riding collided with another vehicle near Fredricksburg.

Ellis, rushed to the hospital after the wreck, is expected to remain there for several weeks.

Wood said no charges were lodged after the accident, which occurred on highway 301 near Fredricksburg.

GUY ELLIS

1957's Anachronism... Hoffa's Hoodlumism...

The election of James R. Whooping-Head Hoffa to the presidency of the National Teamsters' Union replacing Dave Beck was a living example of the old adage:

"From the frying pan into the fire. . ."

Strong arm racketeers like Bullet Beck and Whooping-Head Hoffa have too long tainted and corrupted organized labor.

Big business demands big labor. But Americans everywhere demand that such labor be clean and free from raging racketeering.

The Teamsters are currently defending their election of Hoffa before Federal Court Judge F. Dickinson Letts. Unless they satisfy Letts, the judge may issue an injunction restraining Hoffa from assuming office.

Judge Letts acted on the request of 13 rank and fike teamsters who had guts enough to assert that the Miami convention which skyrocketed Hoffa to the head of Teamsters, Gangsters, Inc. was fixed by Bullet Beck.

The Miami convention obviously was rigged. And Federal Judge Letts should nullify all proceedings which transpired there.

We are apppalled that big labor continues to run its racketeering course without more interference from the good old United States government.

The strong-armed hoodlumism and gansterism of the Twenties is an anachronism in 1957.

But Bullet Beck and Whooping-Head Hoofa must be taught.

They—and many other big labor leaders—are living in the past, in the era of tommy guns and speak-easys.

It's time the government served them a rude awakening in the form a bitter pill—a court injunction—without a grain of salt.

Perhaps the regurgitation will be a little labor honesty.

State Student Solons And Responsibilities...

The University's delegation to the State Student Legislature in Raleigh has slated a meeting for tomorrow night to discuss prospective measures to be introduced at the legislative gathering.

University delegations in the past have been among the most active at the session. Last year, the delegates received an award for "the best bill" introduced.

This year should be no exception.

There should be no bickering concerning the University's representatives.

We have not agreed with SSL Interim Committee Member Tom Long's method of selecting delegates. It looked like a little collusion to us.

But the selection is now over. And we wish the delegation much success.

We feel certain that this Year's University delegation will be as good as, or better than, any previous delegation sent to Raleigh.

Bon Voyage . . .

Dorm Executives And President Evans' Plan

We look forward to a good deal of discussion from men's dormitory presidents and Interdormitory Council representatives at tomorrow night's IDC meeting.

The IDC will endorse or defeat President Sonny Evans' proposal for placing a University-paid counselor in each men's dormitory with the stipulation that they counsel a minimum 15-20 hours a week.

The counselor plan would, on the surface, provide a valuable addition to dormitory life. But we contend—and hope the contention will be incorporated in Evans' pproposal—that such a counselor should be given no judicial authority.

Any presentation of judicial authority to a University-paid man in men's dormitories is establishing a dangerous precedent.

Evans' proposal for establishing a tradition of study in men's dormitories should be weighed heavily and with a well-peeled eye by dormitory executives.

It has merits. But judicial power must be excluded from the proposal.

Otherwise it's dangerous . . . .

'Scuse Us, Flash, Etc.

In response to the University News Bureau's statement that The Daily Tar Heel had "demanded" that school be suspended until the 'flu bug's spread subsided, we would like to say:

The Daily Tar Heel has not held a gun on the administration. Nor would we. We merely felt the University might be willing to take a little advice from the students—who are a devil of a lot closer, alas, to the flu epidemic than the administration.

Of course, the University's mouthpiece—the News Bureau—attempted to make the epidemic into a black and white, hero and villain story.

The University was made the great white father—and mother—and students requesting that their clas load be lightened until they recovered were made villains.

Students were and are being denied proper medical care—through inadequate facilities—during the epidemic. And no amount of villification from the University's mouthpiece can rectify or conceal this situation.

"The 'flu epidemic is being handled with highest medical efficiency . . . ."

• Pardon us while we cough, sneeze, wheeze—and flash.

Rameses XXI

Is the University simply attempting to ride through the flu epidemic with a series of glowing press releases without actually combating the dreaded bug's spread? Many think so. And so does the old Rameses.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

$ Diplomacy & American Dichotomy . .

By GANS

At the very core of the American foreign policy lies the inconsistency that has brought doubt, scorn, mistrust, and even wrath against the United States—even by their closest allies. This inconsistency is that of the fusion of democratic idealism and the Realpolitik into a foreign policy that smells of materialism and specious motive—dollar diplomacy.

This policy is not limited to any particular administration nor does it involve the word dollar in any literal sense. It is the policy of advancing the best interests of the United States and covering up this with platitudes about democracy.

This type of policy has gone far in the past, but the trouble with the American handling of this type of policy is that the U. S. wants to be sincrere and back up the platitudes with fact. The result is a compromise policy that has led to American diplomatic reverses throughout the world.

Typical of the compromising situation the U. S. has been getting itself into is the Yalta and Potsdam Conferences in which there was some awarness on the part of the American seeretary-of- state and the two presidents involved as to Russia's desire to split up the world into two spheres of influence, one for the U. S. and one for itself. There should have been and was some resentment on the part of the U. S. to this very undemocratic way of settling the peace. However, despite the outward protest, the United States proceeded to divide up a limited portion of the world into three spheres of influence.

This same kind of diplomacy is evident in the Eisenhower Administration's edition of "dollar diplimacy". Currently when the U. S. gives aid it expects not only an accounting for the money spent so that Congress can have a basis for reextending or limiting such aid, something it could expect, but also the U.S. expects these countries to put this aid to the fields which the U. S. deems vital to U. S. welfare and further expects wholehearted political and diplomatic allegiance to the point of voting with the U. S. on every major issue brought before the United Nations.

One has only to look at the recent voting in the U. N. to judge the results of this type of policy. Now more countries than ever before are voting against the United States because they no longer trust the United States or they no longer are sure when the U. S. mean what it says or when it doesn't. The attempt to bridge the dichotomy of the Realpolitik and democracy was destined to be and is a failre.

The Realpolitik is a German word used extensively in Hitler's times and whose meaning is borrowed from Machiavelli. It means simply that a nation should face the realities in any political situation and apply any manner of diplomacy in order to get what it wants. In an ugly manner of speaking it is the philosophy of the end justifying the means.

However, if the U. S. sincerely wanted to pursue this policy, it should have started at the end of World War II. It should have, at that time, followed what was, in the minds of many Germans the smart thing to do—o unite with beaten Germany and drive east against Russia, or to accept the Russian proposal for two spheres of influence. However, the brand of the nations pursuing a brand of the Realpolitik is that the countries using it made great gains, but eventually ha dto resort to a war which was its undoing, soooner or later.

Integrity may be considered a virtue. Integrity is rare and in politics is extinct. A foreign policy which in no way compromises American integrity might win back a few of the wavering allies of America. Integrity in foreign policy that never been tried. Who knows; it might work.

CHIMPS AT TOP

Chimps are the cleverest of all animals, British biologists have established. The difference between them and the next cleverest apes or monkeys is as great as that between a 5 year-old child and a college professor. Next in line when it comes to IQ are the cats and the dogs. Pigs are dumb but horses are still dumber; elephants have a very poor memory and ants are lazy, the United Kingdom researchers say. —Dagens Nyheter, Stockholm.

THE LARK:

PlaymakersDramatique Smoothly Professional

The Carolina Playmakers opened the Chapel Hill theatre season Wednesday night with a smoothly professional performance of Lillian Hellman's adaption of The Lark by Jean Anouilh. The play concerns itself with the perennially recurring story of Joan of Arc.

Anouilh's version takes place in the courtroom during Joan's trial and ends with her death at the stake.

A trifle long, and a trifle talky, in the French fashion, The Lark, nonetheless, is an important literary achievement and manages to offer an enjoyable evening of good theatre at the same times.

The pace was well-maintained throughout, a fact which added considerably to the total dramatic effect of the production. Kai Jurgenson's direction, although obviously expert and perceptive, nevertheless showed, perhaps, too heavy a hand. The bludgeoning technique was too often used when the feather touch suggested by Anouilh's dialogue would have been sufficient.

Peter Sinclair, as Warwick, gave a sufficiently convincing performance, but seemed to lack the extra spark and movement his lines call for. Great depth and sympathy were offered to Cauchon by Ben Clymer, while Taylor Williams produced a terrifying, but monotonously angry Inquisitor. Ken Callender romped exuberantly through the part of Beaudricourt to the obvious delight of the audience while Al Gordon bellowed out an admirably convincing La-Hire.

Amanda Meiggs, as Joan, turned in a top-flight performance. Coolly competent, she handled the difficult role as though it had been written for her. There was, possibly, too much acting "business" in her portrayal, but such an objection is no doubt the frantic quibbling of a critic trying to find a fault in a near perfert performance. John Sneden, was magnificent as the Dauphin. Not only did he skillfully milk the surface humor from the part, but he brought mature understanding to a difficult role.

Tommy Rezzuto's simple platform set was effective and functional while the costuming by Irene Rains and the lighting by Lewis Goldstein offered considerably more than adequate support to the production as a whole.

WANDERING THOUGHTS:

Of Quail And Of Dale & Etc.

Walt Thomas

This morning in class as often happens I began to daydream. One minute I was faithfully taking notes in an economics course and the next I had happened to look out the window at the way the trees were turning color and the way the soft wind caused leaves to cascade down to the bricked walks and a woman had walked by wearing a soft brown coat and she had reached out to catch a leaf and I had remembered doing that my self once . . . and I let myself drift . . . .

. . . Your Father and the other hunters had walked back across the large field with their shot guns crooked in their elbows, they had talked and laughed as they walked through the knee-deep grass. Yad walked a little behind them because there had been something about all that was there

. . . there had been the way the air was thin and crisp in the evening, and the way the sky was red and yet cold with sunset, and the way the woods beyond the parked car on the country road had been black-green with mist shrouds already gathering there in the tops of the trees, there had been the way the bruised grass had smelled, and the clear sharp sound of a shot gun being snapped shut with a ribbed red shell inside. These things had made you walk slowly and apart. They had made you want to be a laggard, so that you might watch and feel instead of being in the group and being stifled there. You had wanted to drop out of the company for awhile, to be yourself and to be yourself alone, seeing and feeling for yourself alone.

You had only fired three times all day and had only two quail to show for those shots. You had the smallest bag of game of anyone in the party, but you hadn't felt too bad about it, in fact you had felt pretty good. You had felt good because you were feeling things, and were not trying to figure anything out, you felt good because you were just letting things happen to you. You felt good when things were left up to your senses, you liked to feel things under foot and under hand. You liked to be able to probe and know things with your hands and eyes and nose and to let your mind then accept them as they are, not changing them. It was a good feeling to no longer plan or expect or hope anxiously, but only to experience patiently and savouringly every occurrence.

You had experienced the way a cup of coffee bites your togue and lips and the way the fire warmed your outstretched hands and the way the smoke curled up and made your canvas hunting coat smell of hickory or oak, you had experienced the shoulder smack of the gun and the jolt when you squeezed the trigger. You had experienced the way a companion nods his head after you've made a good wing-shot. And later you experienced the feeling of your "Old Man's" arm around your shoulders while he kidded you about your girl and had winked at the others, laughing. You had experienced the good warm laughter with all these men.

And then in the evening you had known why you wished to be a laggard and walk behind, no longer a part of the group. You had known that it was to drink this all in and that it was to try and keep this day, those happenings a part of you, for you had known that it would not always be that simple and naural, you had known it was not always to be, that it was just for awhile. You had wanted to remember all that.

And the woman had crumpled the leaf up in her hand and had dropped it on the walk as she entered a building. And I had returned to the economics lecture.

Procedure Given For Reporting Violators

The Men's Honor Council issued a report yesterday emphasizing the procedure for turning in a violator of the Honor System.

The Council said the report was forthcoming because of the large number of students during Orientation Week who did not know this procedure.

The actual process, as outlined by the report, consists of: 1) approaching the violator and asking him to turn himself in, 2) giving the violator a reasonable length of time to turn himself in, and 3) reporting the case to an Honor Council member or to Sam Mcgill in the Student Affairs office.

The report contends that one of the student's basic rights is that he be given an opportunity to turn himself in, since leniency is often granted an individual who reports his own violation.

The Honor Council feels that the attitude of an individual is important and his attitude should be taken into consideration in determining the sentence.

Speaker Group Seeks Members

Sonny Hallford, chariman of the Carolina Symposium, yesterday reminded all interested students, faculty members and townspeople interested in the 1958 Symposium that they may now sign up for committes at the student government office in Graham Memorial.

"I would like to extend a cordial invitation to all those interested," Hallford said.

Hallford pointed out that the available committees may be ascertained by contacting Miss Staples, executive secretary of student government.

"We need good and capable committee heads as well as committee members," he added.

YACK PICTURES

Juniors, Graduate Students, and First, Second, and Third year medical students have been granted an extension until Wednesday to have their pictures taken for the 1958 Yackety Yack for a late fee of one dollar ($1.).

The Schools of Dentistry, Dental Hygiene and Public Health are scheduled to have their pictures taken this week Monday through Friday from 1:00 until 7:30 p. m. in the basement of Graham Memorial. Also German Club, Dance Committee, and ROTC oficers will have their pictures made this week. Girls are requested to wear dark sweaters and boys dark coats and dark ties.

IKE "RESPONSIBLE"

WASHINGTON, Oct. 21 (AP)—Democratic spokesmen said today President Eisenhower failed to take an early firm stand in the integration crisis at Little Rock and so was "substantially responsible for the trouble."

The Democratic National Committee's Advisory Council included the charge in a statement on civil rights. Thus civil rights, along with inflation, foreign relations relations and national defense, shaped up as a major subject the Democrats will emphasize in next year's congressional election campaigns.

Noted Writer To Speak Here

Israeli philosopher and writer Dr. Nathan Rotenstreich will appear on the UNC campus on two occasions Wednesday. He is to address a class in the Dept. of Religion and a meeting sponsored by the Dept. of Philosophy, the latter at 8 p. m. in the faculty lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

Dr. Rotenstreich, a native of Poland, heads the philosophy department at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. He has previously studied at the University of Chicago and has written many articles for American Philosophical journals.

"Between Past and Present. An Eassy on History," his latest book, is scheduled for publication next year by the Yale University Press.

Dr. Rotenstreich is the guest of B'Nai B'Rith Hillel Foundation in North Carolina. His present visit is the first of several Hillel programs this year celebrating the 21st anniversary of Hillel in this state and the 10th anniversaray of the founding of the State of Israel.

While in the state, Dr. Rotenstreich is also visiting Woman's College in Greensboro and State College in Raleigh.

The petite sovereign took it all in with a big grin and a sightseer's roving eye.

"Isn't it exciting?" she said to Gov. Averell Harriman.

With Harriman at her side, she rode up Broadway in President Eisenhower's bubble-topped limousine. They went at a brisk pace—too brisk for many among the onlooking throng who cried, "Slow down—we want to see her."

Speaking of the "apathy" of the group, Joel Flecishman said that the party "should not be compared with the University Party which has a tradition of apathy."

Fleischman continued by hailing the "new era of student government, when the administration is finally recognizing the position of student government as a co-partner in the University process."

Calling the party the "sole contact between the executive branch and the students," Fleischman strongly urged its members to think seriously about the candidates.

What Makes Pop Corn Pop?

We're not passing this information along as a public service. Actually we're up to the same old game.

You see, popcorn makes most people thirsty. Fortunately, when most people get thirsty they hanker for the good taste of Coca-Cola.

Upset Plague Hit Tar Heels Saturday

Saturday was a day of upsets around the nation and the royal fiasco up in College Park, Md. was one of the points of such an occurrence.

That game of football sometimes becomes mighty hard to figure. A team unexpectedly springs loose and knocks off some of the nation's best teams and they're heroes. Then that club gets beat by a "lesser" opponent and is once again reduced to mere mortality.

Such is the forte of the Carolina Tar Heels. Now the Tatummen will have to go out and prove themselves again. That one loss will probably overshadow their achievments of the previous three weeks when the weekly poll boys start trying to figure who's who on the football scene.

Loss Might Get Team "Up" Again

Maryland was the better team Saturday. The Terps were inspired such as the Tar Heels were against Clemson, Navy and Miami. But, in our opinion, Carolina is still the better ball club. Were Carolina to play Maryland again next week, there's a good chance that history would not repeat itself.

That is not to detract from the ability of Tommy Mont's assemblage at Maryland. Certainly Carolina has played no better team on a given Saturday. The Terps were out to win themselves a ball game and they bore down in the second half with the tenacity of a saint and the aplomb of a bowl veteran.

The loss, however, should not be entirely detrimental to Carolina as regards morale for the rest of the season. It could serve as a boost in fact. Incentive should be high Saturday in Winston-Salem when the Tar Heels move in on the hapless Wake Forest Deacons.

Long Run Was First Against Tatummen

It is generally conceded that the big break for Maryland was Ted Kershner's 81-yard touchdown gallop early in the fourth quarter. That was the touchdown that put the Terps ahead to stay and from there out, it was all Maryland.

The play was a quickie. Kershner broke off the right side with Carolina in a six man line and picked up some good blocking in the Tar Heel secondary. Before anybody knew what was happening, the Maryland halfback had zoomed up the right side and left everybody but Daley Goff standing back at the line scratching their heads. Goff gave chase but to no avail.

That was the first time this season that anyone had been able to move for a tremendous gain against the Carolina defense and this perhaps was a demoralizing factor for the Tar Heels. It must have stunned the Tar Heel defense for anyone to move like that.

After that run, Maryland moved the ball with ease and a little over five minutes later, came up with another score.

Second Unit Has Done Well All Season

One thing we noticed Saturday was that Tatum platooned more than usual. It seemed that he was using his first unit more or less as the defensive unit and his second team as the offensive outfit. This occured frequently in the first half. In fact, it was the second team backfield of Curt Hathaway, Daley Goff, Emil DeCantis and John Haywood which scored Carolina's only touchdown.

While we're speaking of the second unit, it might be good to give it a few favorable comments. All season long, the "second eleven" has performed well, and it did so against Maryland. Things of this nature are often overlooked in lieu of the glamour of the first team.

Actually, one cannot really consider Carolina as a bonafide first and second string team. Tatum could probably switch his teams around without an appreciable loss of efficiency.

It is to be hoped that the Tar Heels will not let the Maryland game get them down. After all, this ball club has already far exceeded its pre-season predictions. Now is no time to let up.

Cagers To Get Color Spread In S I

We were talking to some Maryland students after the game Saturday, and one of them was a football holdout. The conversation got around to halfback Ted Kershner, the boy who made the 81-yard run.

"That's the first time he's done that," our new acquaintance told us," but we've been waiting for him to break loose like that. When he was a freshman, he averaged three touchdowns per game."

Congratulations are in order to Maryland sports publicist Joe Blair. Joe had his hands full Saturday, but he handled it with real finesse. He was constantly flittering around to make sure things were okay for the numerous sportswriters and sportscasters on hand.

Everybody wanted a picture of the Queen. If would have been a novel feature for someone to have got a shot of the bevy of photographers gathered around the Queen's box. The boys were jockeying for position throughout the game.

"Sports Illustrated" has finally recognized Carolina as national basketball champs. The weekly magazine, which didn't do the Tar Heels justice in March when they won the NCAA, is here with a maze of photog equipment and writers.

They've taken down the goals in Woollen Gym and put shades over the window in order to get a color spread of the Tar Heel cagers. The article is slated to hit the newsstands the latter part of November.

The Lonely Man In The Topcoat; That's Just One Of The Memories

By BILL KING

Everybody who follows sports with any degree of consistency has stashed away in the back of his mind some incidents that will remain permanently.

Undoubtedly, the many Carolina students who sat in Byrd Stadium Saturday afternoon gathered a collection of memories amid the existing pomp and circumstance brought about by the presence of Queen Elizabeth and Prince Phillip.

Truly it was a memorable occasion as well as an historical one. Of course, the pleasure of the caravan weekend would have been accentuated greatly had the Tar Heels been victorious. But that football can take some crazy bounces. Carolina was beaten because it was outplayed by an inspired Maryland team.

Nevertheless, the memories linger. Some pleasant, and some unpleasant.

What Carolina student could help feeling remorse at the end of the game when a hulking fellow with the collar of his topcoat turned up strode dejectedly by himself toward the visiting team's dressing room alone, seemingly without a friend. While across the way, a fellow who had learned his football from the aforementioned person was being congratulated by the Queen of England for a "Wonderful" win.

Yes, Jim Tatum was a man alone. His succesor at Maryland, a fellow he had once coached had the spotlight. This was Tommy Mont's day.

Carolina Co-captains, Dave Reed and Buddy Payne can tell their grandchildren about the time they England and the Duke of Edinshook hands with the Queen of bourgh. Certainly, this was an occasion that both will always cherish.

Who can forget the thrill of standing there and listening to the bands of the two schools join in playing "Hark the Sound"' and following with the Maryland Alma Mater. Then, moments later it was "God Save The Queen," followed by "The Star Spangled Banner." All this as 43,000 fans stood in reverance—a tribute to the warmness of the American people.

Then there was the ball game.

A fellow named Ted Kershner suddenly breaking loose for 81 yards and a touchdown in the fourth quarter. It was the straw that broke the camel's back. There was the feeling that this might bring to a temporary end the winning ways of the Tar Heels.

Maryland suddenly coming to life. Actually seeing the light for the first time in the ball game. And taking advantage of this inspiring opportunity. Carolina yielding to the hard charging Terps, giving ground as the Tar Heels had not done in the last three games.

The final gun and the Maryland players and fans going wild with exuberance. Pracitcally every single person remaining in the stands until the exodus of the royal party. Then the victory celebration at mid-field.

Carolina students leaving Byrd Stadium, heads hanging low, but spirits raised a little by the prospects of a victory over Wake Forest next Saturday. Alcholic stimulants later Saturday night, the Redskin game on Sunday for some, and the long ride back to Chapel Hill late Sunday night. Another week of classes and the hope that this Saturday will be a better one.

These are the things you remember.

Powerful Duke Leads ACC In 4 Departments

GREENSBORO (AP) — Duke's ground-devouring Blue Devils, who have now successfully moved past five 1957 opponents, lead the Altantic Coast Conference in four of the six major team statistical divisions after last Saturday's victory over Wake Forest.

Duke, according to ACC Service Bureau figures, tops total offense, rushing offense, total defense and rushing defense. Only the two passing leads evade the Blue Devils, Virginia claiming the top in both.

The Blue Devils, who gained 410 yards overall to 168 for Wake Forest, currently are riding the unbeaten crest on the following figures of leaderships:

Total offsense - 356.4 yards per game.

Total offense - 336.4 yards per game.

Total defense - 178.4 yards per game given up.

Rushing defense - 110.2 yard per game give up.

Virginia has picked up an average of 87.4 yards per game passing, at the same time yielding only 44.6 per contest through the air lanes. Both are easy leads.

Duke, though in a commanding lead in four divisions, this weekend faces what, from a statistical point of view, is probably its No. 1 test to date-the challenge of N. C. State defense, which is second overall at an average yield of 198 yards a game and also second rushing with an average yield of 126 yards per contest.

Flu Halts Harrier's Meet

The varsity and freshman cross-country meet at State College, scheduled for today, has been cancelled.

Coach Dale Ranson said yesterday that the cancellation was recommended by the university physician. He added that flu had hit the squad so hard only four of 12 members could practice at all last week.

Ranson said the trackmen will resume practice cautiously today. He added only supervised workouts will be held. He requested that all cross-country and trackmen meet at 4 p. m. today.

Ranson stated that how well the boys will resume early-season form is anybody's guess. He remarked that only four weeks remain until the ACC championship meet, and only one week is available for practice for a triangular meet with Duke and Tennsessee here Nov. 2.

Deacon Ducats On Sale Until Friday Afternoon

The ticket office announced yesterday that, due to the widespread flu epidemic here at Carolina, tickets for the Carolina-Wake Forest game to be played in Winston-Salem Saturday will remain on sale until Friday afternoon.

Rod, Gun Date Changed To October 29th

The 1957 Rod and Gun Field Meet has been postponed one week, until Oct. 29, due to the Flu epidemic.

The Intramural Department announced the postponement yesterday. The events will be held as scheduled at the Durham Wildlife Club next Tuesday.

BAND HIT BY FLU

The UNC band will suspend operations for this week and will not perform at the Wake Forest football game due to the illness of many band members, according to band director Herbert Fred.

The next band rehearsal will be Tuesday, Oct. 29, at 4:30 p. m.

Frosh Booters Lose, 2-1 To Blue Imps In Opener

Carolina's freshman soccer team opened its 1957 season with a heartbreaking 2-1 loss to the Duke Frosh in a double overtime on Fetzer Field yesterday.

It was a thrill-packed match for five quarters before Richard Reynolds booted over the winning goal a few minutes after the second overtime had gotten underway.

It was a rugged battle all the ways as neither team was able to tally in the first half.

The Tar Babies drew first blood in the third period as Joe Perkins put the locals ahead 1-0 with a goal. But the Baby Blue Devils battled right back to knot the count early in the fourth quarter when Fred Ritz was true with a boot.

Then the two teams battled evenly until Reynold's match-winning kick, neither team yielding any ground.

It was a tight battle as Coach Chuck Hartman's booters gave promise of good things to come with their defensive ability.

The freshman match overshadowed a scheduled varsity soccer match which was supposed to take place between Carolina and Virginia in Charlottesville yesterday. The match had to be called off, however, due to the fact that many of the varsity players are still out with flu.

It was the second varsity match to be called in a week as flu continued to plague the athletic program at Carolina.

Coach Marvin Allen's varsity squad has a record of one win and one defeat. Its next match is scheduled for Friday, October 25 at Davidson College.

FORUM PLANNED

The initial Student-Faculty Forum will be held Nov. 4 at 7:30 p. m. in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial, according to Bill Jones, chairman. The topic of the Forum will be the Russian satellite Sputnik, Jones said.

Four speakers, as yet unannounced, from the university academic departments are being invited to give short expository speeches and serve as a panel for a subsequent question and answer session, Jones said.

Murals, Phy. Ed Suspended For Another Week

All physica l education classes and intramural games have been suspended at least through this week, officials in Woollen Gym announced yesterday.

Tommy Johnson of the Intramural Department emphasized that the cancellation of activities is causing a week's postoponement of the Rod and Gun Field Meet, scheduled for today. He said the meet will be held next Tuesday.

The Physical Education Department said all classes will be suspended "until the inframary tells us we can go ahead and hold them." No indication was given as to when classes will be resumed.

When intramural activity is resumed. Johnson said teams will play the same schedule that was set up for last week. He added that new copies of the schedule will be distributed to organizations.

McGovern, Morgan Stress Need For Educational Aid

That an education for all people in a democracy is a fundamental right inherent in that system was agreed upon by noted American Broadcasting Commentator Edward P. Morgan and former assistant to the Attorney General William McGovern in an informal discussion held last night in Morehead Planetarium. The discussion was the last event in the YW-YMCA forum on the topic: "Human Rights: Their Challenge to America.

Morgan expressed doubt, however, that all students should be given an education all the way through College and said that some sort of willingness and intellectual criteria should be set up to ferret out those incapable of college work.

McGovern felt that such a system would create an intellectual oligarchy and felt that a college education should be guaranteed to all those wanting attain this goal.

Citing the case of British concern for civil rights, Morgan expressed the feeling that education of the British school might be fundamentally involved in the average Briton's concern for the rights of others. He thought that this might be one of the weaknesses in the American educational system.

McGovern stressed the need of paying teachers more money and trying to equalize their social status with other better paid members of the community. He cited West Hartford's efforts to better its educational system by bettering the teacher's wages so that they could be equal to the average wage level of the community.

The question of whether it takes a sputnik or something milder was brought up by Morgan, who pointed out the lethargy of Americans in taking the problems of education seriously.

Earlier in the day both men attended several classes and McGovern spoke to a small seminar group on the relationship of the U. S. security system to civil rights. He said that the entire security system should be thrown out, and that the U .S. should have in its stead an efficient counter-espionage force.

Quiet Hours Proposal Set For Action By IDC

The IDC will meet tonight to act upon a proposal by Student Body President Sonny Evans that counselors be placed in the dormitories, and to announce appointments to the chairmanships of the IDC committees.

The meeting will be held in Phi Hall, fourth floor of New East, at 7 o'clock.

Evans' proposal calls for stricter enforcement of quiet hours in the dormitories and for the placement of counselors in the dormitories to aid dorm residents with their problems.

The proposal was tabled at last Wednesday night's meeting until copies of it could be made and placed in the hands of every IDC member. Tonight the proposal will be amended and deleted as the assembly sees fit, and acted upon by the body.

The committees to which IDC President Tom Walters will announce Chairmen are: The Social Committee; Dormitory Improvement Committee; The Publicity Committee; Intra-murals Committee; Contest Committee; and the Vending Machine Committee.

A report will also be heard tonight from the IDC Traffic Committee. This is a special committee recently appointed at the request of Ralph Cummings, Chairman of the Traffic Advisory Committee.

IDC President Tom Walters has the following to say about tonight's actions on the recent proposal by Student Body President Evans.

"I feel that the IDC will pass this proposal in the event that a few amendments are brought about. I am thinking specifically of that section of the proposal which deals with the judical powers of said council. This article needs reworking and it needs to be more specific in the statement of duty."

Parked Truck Causes Wreck

Collision with a parked truck resulted in injury to three UNC students Friday as they made their way to the UNC-Maryland game in College Park.

Pace, the driver, said three other cars crashed into the truck—parked on the highway—shortly after his accident. None of these accidents, however, involved UNC students, he said.

Pace suffered a cut on the nose that required seven stitches; Agner's left wrist was fractured and he received abrasions of the forehead, and Morgan received a minor contusion of the forehead.

The 9 p.m. accident occurred near Fredricksburg, Va., Pace said, when he came unexpectedly upon the truck as it blocked the highway. No flares were marking the obstruction, he said.

The student's car was termed a "total loss."

World In Brief

Flu Increase

RALEIGH (AP)—"Influenza like" diseases are "very rapidly spreading" throughout the state according to reports of the State Board of Health. Dr. Roy Norton, State health officer, said flu has reached epidemic proportions in some parts of the state.

Dr. Fred T. Ford, director of the epidemiology division, stated today 336,984 cases of the flu type of disease were reported for the week ending Oct. 18 from 72 counties.

Middle East Debate

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—The U.N. General Assembly plunged into a bitter Middle East debate late today after Turkey had sought to have the discussion postponed to permit mediation efforts by King Saud of Saudi Arabia.

Syria and the Soviet Union vigorously opposed any postponement and Turkey declined to press for a vote on the question.

Syrian Foreign Minister Salah Bitar opened the debate by insisting that Turkish troop concentrations along the border were a threat to Syria's security.

Missile Pool

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles today outlined proposals for a Western scientific pool they reportedly favor in the missiles and satellites race with Russia.

They discussed this during a 70-minute White House meeting to lay the groundwork for Eisenhower's conference starting tomorrow with British Prime Minister Macmillan.

Macmillan, accompanied by his top scientific and foreign policy advisers, is due to arrive by plane tomorrow morning for three days of secret strategy talks.

For UnifiFcation

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. W. Kerr Scott (D-NC) today called for a "unification of our efforts in the missile field" to regain losses in the "race to develop push-button war machines."

In a statement, issued from his office here, Sen. Scott charged President Eisenhower with "insulting the intelligence of the American people when he tries to downgrade the importance of the first

Seeks 'Good Faith'

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y. (AP)—The United States late Tuesday appealed to Syria to "match the good faith" of Turkey and agree to accept the offer of Saudi Arabia's King Saud to mediate the Turkish-Syrian crisis.

U. S. Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge also urged the U.N. General Assembly to defer further debate on the Middle East problem pending the outcome of mediation efforts.

UP Nominates For Fall Election

Meeting Moved To Gerrard

By SARAH ADAMS

Nominations for student legislature seats and sophomore class officers were held last Night at the scheduled meeting of the University Party.

Due to the large number of students present at the meeting, the group was forced to move from Roland Parker Lounge to Gerrard Hall. The nominating convention finally got under way shortly before 8 p. m. with Jim Alford opening the meeting with a motion that the candidates be limited to only one speaker in order to save time.

Candidates for ther three year-seats open in Dorm Women's district were Misses Lucy Forsythe, Virginia Pierce and Diana Johnson. Nominated for the three six-months seats were Misses Ann Harvey, Lou White and Martha Wilkinson.

Nominated by acclamation to run for the one year-seat open in Dorm Men's district 1 was Bill Sayers. The nomination of the candidate to run for the six-month-seat open in Dorm Men's 1 will be held next week.

George Langford, George Davis and Doug Murray will run for the three year-seats in Dorm Men's II.

Nominated by acclamation to run for one of the two year-seats from Dorm Men's III was Jerry Freeman.

The candidate to run for the second year-opening in Dorm Men's III will be nominated next week.

Candidates for the two year seats open in Dorm Mens V were Mike Lanham and Bob Foxworth.

From the Town Women's division Nancy Llewellyn and Dannie Miller were nominated to run for the two open one-year-seats.

Nancy Royster was nominated by acclamation for social chairman of the sophomore class.

Elections will be held Nov. 12.

Balloting Will Fill Key Posts

By ANN FRYE

UNC students will go to the polls November 12 in the year's first campus-wide election to fill top student government, class and judicial posts.

Elections Board Chairman Art Sobel, in disclosing the election today, said day-long balloting will determine freshman, sophomore and junior class officers, membership on the Men's and Women's Honor Council and Student Council Seats.

Candidates for the three councils, Sobel said, must file their petitions by October 29. They must be selected by the Bi-Partisan Selections Board.

Deadline for filing petitions for the other class offices is November 1, the chairman said.

Any student wishing to run for an office, who has not been okayed by the Selections Board or nominated by either political party, may submit a petition to the elections chairman.

Sobel said the petitions must be signed by 25 qualified voters and should be turned in by November 1 at 6 p. m.

A compulsory mass meeting of all candidates has been scheduled for November 4 at 8 p. m. in Gerrard Hall. Attendance by candidates is compulsory at this meeting.

Ballot boxes on election day will be located in each dormitory. Other polling places are: town men's 1, Carolina Inn; town men's 2, Scuttlebut; town men's 3, Graham Memorial; town men's 4, Victory Village; and town women, Gerrard Hall.

Sobel said expense accounts for all candidates are due November 11 at 6 p. m.

Response To Asian Flu Shots Falls Short Of Expected Mark

Student response to Asian flu shots available was less than expected Monday night when the vaccine was distributed, according to Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, university physician.

Shots were given last night and will be available another night this week to be announced later by Dr. Hedgpeth.

The flu situation on campus Tuesday had not changed considerably from Monday's report on the cases, according to Dr. Hedgpeth.

Twenty new patients were admitted Tuesday, while 12 were released. The total number of students in the infirmary yesterday was 60.

Dr. Hedgpeth has urged the cooperation of students in taking advantage of the flu vaccine available.

He said that he called several fraternities and sororities Monday night to ask their members to come to the infirmary for flu shots Tuesday.

If the students do not cooperate with the infirmary in getting the flu vaccine, Dr. Hedgpeth said, the infirmary with cease giving out the shots.

Meanwhile, Student Body President Sonny Evans congratulated university officials for "an all-out effort which has caused the flu epidemic to subside."

"I congratulate the medical authorities on an efficient and outstanding job," he declared.

Evans particularly cited the efforts of Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, university physician, Chancellor Aycock, Dean Weaver and Ray Jeffries. He added that competence of the hospital staff "can in no way be questioned."

"The university officials have no choice in this matter but to listen to informed medical opinion; and until such time as those who know best recommend that classes be postponed, it seems obvious that no action should be taken," he said

Disc Jockey Expected Last Night In Bermuda

MOREHEAD CITY (AP)—A seafaring disc jockey in a 17-foot outboard motor boat hoped to land in Bermuda tonight to end a 580-mile ocean-tossed voyage that started here six days ago.

When Melvin West, 28, departed, he expected to reach his destination in 40 hours in his boat, The Impossible. Sunday, when he was three days overdue, West was sighted by the merchant ship S.S. Alderman, 240 miles east of Cape Lookout.

After refueling his 30-horsepower outboard motor and taking on more provisions, West continued his trip.

West, the father of two children, draws 10 per cent disability because of a stomach ailment suffered while in service during the Korean War. He is a disc jockey at a Jacksonville, radio station.

West said the purpose of the trip was to prove the seaworthiness of outboard motors and small boats.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Doris Teeter, Phyllis Krafft, Sara Williamson, Ina Ridley, Mable Wallace, Mary Stansbury, Claudia Barnes, Carolyn Durham, Nancy Meiggs and Norma Alexander and George Martin, Robert Phillips, George Turnipseed, Ambers Whittle, Pete Poules, Lee Weinstein, Benjamin Taylor, Kenneth James, Tally Eddings, George Grayson, Rowell Burleson, Micheal Kannon, Roy Searcy, Frank Heinsohn, Robert Quackenbush, William Roth, Michael Deutsch, James Amond, Phillip Crutchfield:

Ross Baumstone, Robert Stevenson, James Teague, Thomas Fisher, John Brooks, Robert Thomas, Linden Winburn, James Womble, Thomas Grimes, Rea Miller, Ronnie Pruett, Walter Wright, Robert Haire, Otis Hendren, Howard Kahn, Thomas Fraley, Joe DeWee, Edward Jennings, Leonard McGraha, Charles Hartman, Michael Widolf, Eddie Bass, Elmer Hughes, James Pittman, Leon Witherspoon, Joseph Herring, Robert Keller, Kenneth Walker, Gary Smiley, Virgil Early, Gerhard Leibscher, Thomas Durham, Lonnie McDonald, Hiram Seatef, Donald Shaw, Donald McGregor, Robert Cookie, William Yarborough and John Curtis.

POLGAR SAYS:

'One, Two, Three'—And Then Comes Sleep

"Look into my eyes . . . forget about everything . . . one, two, three, close your eyes . . . you are going into a deep sleep. . . ."

Polgar said these words as he coaxed several Daily Tar Heel staff members into hypnosis yesterday in a special interview session.

Polgar, sponsored by Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity, will appear at UNC next Tuesday in Memorial Hall. Tickets are on sale for $2, but students presenting ID cards may purchase tickets for $1. Proceeds from the show will go to the campus chest.

When asked where he learned hypnosis, Polgar replied, "You have to do your own research, there is no school." He stated that he took psychology courses which dealt with hypnosis, but that he developed his own technique in using hypnosis.

Polgar began hypnotizing people when he was 20 years old, but he has never been hypnotized. He said it does not take as long to hypnotize a subject as is commonly believed.

"I can hypnotize anyone in a second as well as I could in 30 minutes," he commented. He added that atmosphere is extremely important in hypnosis.

"The secret of hypnosis is YOU: you have to forget everything," he stated. Polgar only uses subjects who are not afraid, and he said that it would not be possible to hypnotize everybody. "I do not want to hypnotize someone who is afraid," he commented.

Dr. Polgar, who will appear here next Tuesday evening with his "Fun With The Minds" show, shows his magic glasses — which can see through any fabric — to Eugene Parker. Parker is co-chairman of the Campus Chest, which will receive proceeds from the Polgar show, sponsored by Lambda Chi Alpha fraternity.

Polgar explained that he never uses hypnosis to embarrass subjects. He also said that hypnosis wears off in half an hour: if a subject is left in hypnotic sleep in a room alone, he will wake up in half an hour.

Reactions from students hypnotized yesterday were all very similar—Richard Love, chairman of the committee sponsoring Polgar, and Eugene Parker appeared dazed; Ruth Whitley, junior from Wendell, felt "complete oblivion"; Bill Cheshire, senior from Hillsboro, experienced a "tingly" feeling.

Asked about his program for next week, Polgar smilingly replied, "I have some magic glasses!" He went on to say, "I can challenge the ping pong champion of the school and beat him."

Polgar announced that he will use new memory stunts and some new hypnosis, too.

NOTICE

Bill Michael, editor of the "Ram & Ewe," said that advertising solicitors were sorely needed. All those interested in working in this line should come to a meeting at the "Ram & Ewe" office in the basement of Graham Memorial today at 2 p.m. The meeting will be short and all interested are urged to come.

Ever-Lasting Epidemic Is Propaganda Study . . .

It's up to the student body now.

The University Infirmary has finally procured dosages of Asian 'Flu vaccine for distribution among students.

Students should now take advantage of the available serum.

There is little doubt that much of the epidemic could have been avoided had the vaccine been procured earlier.

Infirmary officials reported that the vaccine was ordered in July. But the fact that impressed us was that other members of the Consolidated University got dosages, but University students were not given them.

Perhaps this was the fault of the pharmaceutical laboratories. Reports from the administration were that serum was ordered from Lederle Laboratories, and that Lederle's first shipment of vaccine was not acceptable. Consequently, the University switched to another pharmaceutical house.

This seems particularly and peculiarly paradoxical to us, since Woman's College and State College are both using Lederle vaccine.

The entire vaccine situation boils down to this, in our opinion:

University Physician Hedgpeth demonstrated foresight in July when he ordered the vaccine. And the University administration demonstrated foresight in approving Dr. Hedgpeth's suggested order. But the order was not pushed, and the plan was not carried through. Consequently other schools and institutions received their vaccine orders in preference to the University — because they harassed and continually pressed the pharmaceutical houses.

Throughout the epidemic, we have never criticized the University Infirmary because of lack of immediate effort to alleviate student suffering. The staff worked hard and late.

We criticized the Infirmary and its staff for failing to be frank and open.

The attitude seemed to be:

"Maybe if we talk — in glowing terms — through the University News Bureau, and maybe if we talk in subdued tones and ignore the massive incidence of 'flu on campus, the whole, blooming thing will blow over without students complaining so danged much."

Infirmary officials glossed over the flu epidemic. And administration officials aided and abeted them.

And student health suffered unnessarily.

We shall always contend that students could have received adequate and prompt medical care had classes been suspended for a couple of days, and had said students been allowed to visit their own family physicians.

But classes were bludgeoned through. And the situation was apparently glossed over well enough. Hardly any complaints were heard throughout the state . . . except here.

The epidemic was a study in inefficiency . . . rather than "highest medical efficiency."

Doctors were conscientious, but inadequate.

Perhaps this will be a lesson. Perhaps such inadmission of inefficiency will not cloud the next epidemic . . . If we're unfortunate enough to have another.

Study in propaganda and ineffeciency . . . bludgeons & ostrich eves . . .

Unselfish Public Servant: Ready Raymond Jefferies

The work of Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of student affairs and official question and answer man for the student body, during the 'flu epidemic can hardly be minimized.

Ray—a ten-year man with the administration and the University's most candid and open representative—conscientiously endeavored throughout the epidemic to speed supplies to students in residences throughout the campus.

Student government people have for years relied on Ray for help and counseling. And Ray has always gladly devoted his time and service.

Our hats are off and our typewriters tipped for an unselfish servant of the studnt body:

The Facts: Lenoir's Liquid Eggs

Modern Living in Chapel Hill suffers considerably each morning when empty student stomachs are treated or mistreated to Lenoir Hall's liquid brand of scrambled eggs.

Here are the facts behind Lenoir's liquid eggs:

(1) They do not look good.
(2) They do not smell good.
(3) They do not taste good.

They are the facts. Director Prillaman.

Investigate the eggs too, Rep. Adams.

Honor And Excuses . . .

There has been talk that students submitting excuses for class absences have been required to sign pledges that their absences were condoned by the University Infirmary.

This seems ridiculous to us, since we — and others — never went to the Infirmary — but to private, not-so-overworked, physicians.

Thus, excuses should be accepted merely upon the word of honor of students — without the Infirmary's being involved.

Such questioning by faculty members indicates a lack of confidence in the great University Honor System.

The word of sick students should be sufficient.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

PPP's And Lil' PPP's Added To PPP's

Gail Godwin

Being fairly green in the newspaper world, it was just recently that I discovered a most disheartening fact: It is forever the fashion to stomp on, romp on and clomp on those unlucky persons who have dared to express their views through the medium of a newspaper.

This includes editors, Columnists, guest writers, ghost writers, and even writers of letters to the editor.

I have just about come to the conclusion that some pseudo—intellects sit down with their Daily Tar Heel or their New York Times not to learn anything that would improve their bean brains, but for the sole purpose of picking apart the efforts of others. This is not hard to do, because when one is looking for faults, they never look in vain.

These Petty Pickers of Papers are satisfied with anything from misprints to opinions that run contrary to their own. The latter is inexcusable.

"That damn David Lawrence," splutters the radical. "He must think he is something." The sad fact is, friend, that he is very much somebody. And just who are you?

Maybe the PPP should ask himself this question every once and awhile?

I am not much of an analyst, but it seems to me that the whole crux of the problem is that people are different (than God), and as a result have different ideas. Since different editors edit different newspapers employing entirely different staffs of different reporters, different copyreaders, and that most despicable animal - the columnist - who everybody knows is different, the result is doing to be one thing - DIFFERENCES.

Much has been written about the smart editor letting both sides of a question appear on his editorial page. (I can just feel a PPP picking apart the 'his editorial page' now!)

I would like to endorse the development of a similar habit on the part of readers. It is not my original thought, but that of the dean of journalism here. "A great many people will not even read an opinion that differs from their own," he said, and added that he himself always made it a point to read the ideas of men with whom he disagreed.

But please, PPP, when you condescend to read those conflicting ideas, must you always explode on stationery afterwards?

The most regrettable result of the PPP's temper tantrums on paper is that, added to a million more of them, it tends to foster a feeling of discouragement in the editorial office. "Can't we do anything to please them?" is the general sentiment. For some reason, complimentary letters are as rare as a unicorn in the dormitory.

Nevertheless, PPP's will keep on reproducing more little PPP's, and Journalism schools will keep on turning out more victims to satisfy the PPP's insatiable appetities. In fact, if I get over a hundred letters from PPP's because of this column, I am going to change my major to animal husbandry. At least cows don't talk back.

Honorable Coffee & Sputnik, Putnik...

Something new has been added!

Have you tried the New Honor System coffee at Graham Memorial? It's the greatest innovation yet. Exactly what it is, no one knows just yet. Beside the bright new copper dispenser in the kitchen is a sign reading:

HONOR SYSTEM COFFEE
10 cents

This Is Maxwell House Coffee for one dime. (Note here that they don't say what it is for two, three, or more dimes, so you know there's something suspicious underfoot.) Please place dime in box. (Something else suspicious—there is no box at all, just a used coffee cup. Something sinister brews. One literal-minded chap had been in there for two days looking for a box. He thought it was a game. They locked him up.)

HONOR SYSTEM HONOR SYSTEM

Thank You,
The Management

This is all well and good, but what is Honor System Coffee? Is it some secret formula perfected by the chefs at Lenoir for the administration? Is truth serum injected into the coffee beans before grinding? Or does the Honor Council have concession rights in Graham Memorial? Does Campus Stores get a cut? If so, how much? What percent goes to scholarships? These and many other questions remain unanswered about the new product. Probably the best way to find out these answers is to set up a committee to investigate the whole situation and report to the campus in a few months. Til then the mystery remains a mystery.

Reader Reels And Rocks In Disagreement

DEAR EDITOR:

Why should you be so disinclined to have The Daily Tar Heel investigated? Is not your purpose to serve the student body as well as you can? Are you adverse to improvement? Do you think the paper could use no improvement? Should we, the students, not have the best possible in our publication?

It seems to me that such an investigation is extremely timely. I have seen no improvement in The Daily Tar Heel over last year! Conversely, there seems to be a decline in the prestige, effetiveness, capability, and intellectuality in our paper.

As to the method of selecting editors: is it not true that a strong politician could easily swing a majority, whereas he may not have proper qualities to put out a major publication? He well may not be able to head his staff effectively, to hold them together, to create and maintain a proper working atmosphere, to serve and to stimulate the readers.

There is much talk now of pseudo-intellectualism. Who is guilty? Who is guilty of "pomposity" and "power-grab?"

I hope the press' policy of printing letters to the editor still exists.

ERIC THE RED:

Is Sweden Back Of Communism?

Harry Kirschner

Do you know that Sweden is behind Soviet Communism? Yes, it is true.

In a letter I received from someone called Eric The Red, who says he has defected to the West, the story was revealed to me. Eric mentioned that he reached our shores by sailing from Greenland in an open boat. He expects his son, Lief, to follow shortly by the same route. I will recount a part of his letter here:

In the year 862 A. D. Rurik Jansson and his Vikings of the Stockholm IWW swept across the Moskwa river at the site of Muskovy (Moscow) shouting, "Peace, Land and Bread!" Wearing horned helmets and armed with throwing hammers, bows, spears and two-handed swords, they attacked soldiers of Slav Chieftan Nikolski Alexanski in a cleverly contrived plot to overthrow his government by force. Months spent in pulling their Viking ships over the steppes had toughened Jansson's men, and they found no difficulty in putting the established government forces to rout.

Jansson had trained his men until they were up to the mark of crack insurgents. Following a town with dispatch, herding all captives into well organized plan, they sacked and burned the quickly constructed pens. Loot was concentrated in one pile for redistribution.

It was no accident that Jansson's revolution was successful. He was a big man, 7'6", with a big mind, 1700 c.c. He had turned to communism at the age of ten while working in a Lappland sweat shop carving dragon heads for the prows of Viking ships. It was not that he minded sweat shops, the truth is that he liked them. In Lappland the best place to be was working in a sweat shop, there being no other way to keep warm. He liked his work, being a union member. He worked only seven hours a day, received free lunch and got old age pension benefits.

What bothered him was the way raiding parties would return from having ravaged a coastline somewhere. If they had been able to bring back only one woman captive then a fight always ensued between the members of the pirate crew to see who would own her. It generaly turned out that only one Viking would survive, his comrades being either dead or wounded. Jansson saw that the only solution to the problem would be that of sharing the wealth so as to avoid the conflict, in other words, communism.

Because he was only ten no one would listen to his radical ideas. He tried to influence older members of his union, but they only laughed. He grew bitter and left his work, thereby forfeiting his old age benefits. He went to Stockholm and got a job selling evening rune stones on street corners. It was a hard life there, with no warm sweat shops to shelter him. In four years he had grown tough and clever, but had not lost his idealism. He began voicing his ideas in public in local mead halls. Public opinion was aroused against him. People held that their fathers and their father's fathers had always killed each other over captive women and it was the way to live. Finally he was imprisoned.

He was put into a cell with a scribe named Karl Marxson. Marxson turned out to be in sympathy with his ideaology and agree to write it in a book which would be entitled, DIE FRAU. This was the first communist cell meeting ever held.

Jansson spent two years in prison. When he got out he was determined to find a way to put his plan into action. In a mead hall he met a group of anarchists. He proposed that they take him as their leader and together raise an army, telling them of his plan worked out in prison to take and hold the vast lands east of the Baltic Sea.

He and his army raided an area immediately north of Stockholm called Russland for ships. Then they crossed the Baltic and took Estonia as a trial training measure. In Estonia, Jansson spent a year training his troops, both in insurrection and ideology. Each man was required to memorize the handbook, DIE FRAU. When Jansson thought his men ready they set out for Muskovy, dragging their ships.

Jansson's hopes were realized when only one woman was found to be among the captives. Thus communism was established in Russia. The system did not work out too well, however. Within a short time the woman died and the men set out on forays about the countryside to replace her. They became greedy, thinking one woman not enough, and began to accumulate them. When Jansson objected he was assasinated. The men accumulated so many women that they began to trade them, and capitalism developed.

With the passing of centuries Rurik Jansson's beliefs were misunderstood, due to the fact that Old Norse became a dead language. When Karl Marxson's book was discovered it was incorrectly translated by scholars who thought it was entitled, DAS KAPITAI, and concerned economic systems, the author's name being misconstrued as Karl Marx. They spread this idea to the people who took it to heart. In 1917 another revolution was staged and economic communism was instituted in Russia.

The American public should be warned of Sweden's brain child. Although she did bear a different kind of communism than that we are faced with, it is enough that she bore any at all. Steps must be taken to prevent a Viking plot in northern Europe. As it has been empirically proven at Senate un-American Activities Subcommittee hearings that once a communist, always a communist is true then Sweden must be watched as a potential threat and perhaps even the power behind the Kremlin.

Kappa Sig: Football Or Sunbathing?

Kappa Sigs had a choice this weekend—to see the Queen or to house party at Morehead. So half the group journeyed up to College Park while the remainder turned their eyes toward the ocean.

Phi Delt Doings

Included in the Carolina cheering section at College Park were about 20 Phi Delts and their dates, who later joined in the round of parties at Maryland.

Recently-elected pledge officers are Bill Stem of Chattanooga, Tenn., president; Pete Austin of Chattanooga, vice president; Rhodes Corbett of Charlotte, secretary; Rudy Walldorf, of Chattanooga, treasurer; and Jack Mitchell of (you guessed it!) Chattanooga, social chairman.

Well, at least one officer who isn't from Tennessee!

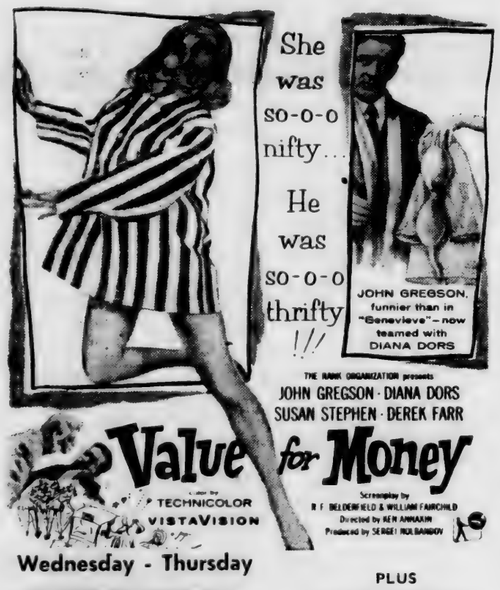
Phi Delt Don Andrews of New Bern is engaged to former Salem student, Mary Dunn McCotter of New Bern.

TEP Hospital?

From the sounds of things the Asian flu bug has taken over the TEP House, thereby putting the breaks on many social activities. However, the pledges, between coughs and sneezes did manage to elect a steering committee for the coming months of pledgdom.

Officers elected are Frank Shaeman of Lumberton, president; Jim Friedman of Asbury Park, N. J. for vice president; Bill Ashendorf, of Charlotte, secretary; Herb Ross of South Orange, N. J., treasurer.

And those well enough to make the trip treked up to College Park for a gala weekend.



Sigma Nu — The Sick And The Social

For the social there was the trip to Maryland and a gala round of parties during the weekend, and for the poor unfortunate flu bitten patients, Sigma Nu brothers set up a "Flu Ward" at the house were radios and refreshments so they could join their healthier brothers and dates via air at College Park.

With hopes that all can make it to the Wake Forest game, the boys have chartered a bus to the game and are making plans for a party next Saturday night.

Pledge elections have centered around the following boys: Steve Wilkerson of Greenville, president; Dan Moore of Kings Mountain, Tenn., vice president; Buzzy Russell of Raleigh, secretary; Morris Bernstein of Raleigh, treasurer; and Harvey Hamrick of Rutherfordton, chaplain.

Dr. Ashby To Address Conference

The annual Y Conferenee will be this weekend at Camp Moon Elon.

The guest speaker for the weekend will be Dr. Warren Ashby, chairman of the department of philosophy at Woman's College.

Also present for the weekend, which has as its theme "Our Changing World," will be the Y study groups and their faculty advisors.

Students who are interested have been urged to notify the Y by Thursday by the latest.

The group will leave Friday and return Sunday, and the cost for the weekend is $6.75. This includes six meals, two nights lodging, and round trip transportation. Persons taking their cars will be refunded $1 per person carried, not to exceed $4.

A schedule of discussions, question and answer periods, and recreation has been planned. The purpose of the conference, according to the printed program, is "to provide an oppoprtunity to view the world in the light of its ever changing social, political, and economic issues and the place of the student in it.

Dr. Warren Ashby, above, chairman of the department of philosophy at Women's College, will be the speaker at the fall Y conference this week end. The conference, which will be at Camp Moon Elon, will have as its theme, "Our Changing World."

GM's Slate

Symposium, 2-4 p.m., Grail Room; Polls Committee, 4-5 p.m., Grail Room; Panhellenic, 5-6 p.m. Grail Room; State Student Legislature, 9-11 p.m., Roland Parker 1; Jehovah's Witnesses, 8-9 p.m., Roland Parker 1; University Club, 7-9 p.m., Roland Parker 2; GMAB Forum, 4-5 p.m., Woodhouse Conference Room; Women's Honor Council, 3-6 p.m., Council Room.

Covering The Campus

GMAB

The Graham Memorial Activities Board is sponsoring free bridge lessons for interested students, starting this Thursday evening in the Rendezvous Room of Graham Memorial at 7:30 p.m.

Student members of the bridge club will serve as instructors, and all interested students who are beginners or intermediates have been invited.

NAVY OFFICER PROCUREMENT

Representatives of the Naval Officer Procurement office will be at the YMCA Building from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m., Nov. 4-5.

They will interview candidates for naval officer programs and will dispense pertinent information concerning these programs. The visit will be the first this year.

STATE STUDENT LEGISLATURE

The State Student Legislature will meet Wednesday at 9 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge No. 1 in Graham Memorial to discuss bills to be presented at the SSL in Raleigh Nov. 7, 8 and 9.

Men are asked to wear coats and ties to the meeting, as Yack pictures will be made.

SYMPOSIUM COMMITTEES

Sonny Hallford, on behalf of the Carolina Symposium, has extended an invitation that all interested students, faculty members and townspeople who would like to serve on one of the Symposium committees come by the student government office in Graham Memorial and sign their names to the committee interest sheets.

GMA BPolls Committee Headed By John Lewis

Chairman of the Graham Memorial Activities Board polls committee this year is John B. "Jack" Lewis, Jr., senior history major from Farmville.

The polls committee is responsible for determining student opinion on various issues which arise during the year. Methods used in obtaining this information include individual personal questioning and questionnaires.

The polls committee then tabulates and interprets results of the different polls and publicizes the outcomes to the student body through leaflets and the Daily Tar Heel.

"This committee renders a very valuable service to the campus in that it lets all the students know the opinions of the other students on various issues," commented Benny Thomas, president of GMAB.

Though the polls committee is already functioning, any interested students have been asked to fill out applications at the information desk in Graham Memorial as soon as possible.

JOHN LEWIS, JR.

Bridge Match Lists Winners

Joe Converse and Richard Hicks were the winners of Monday night's Master Point bridge tournament, it was announced today. Officials also reported that attendance Monday night set an all-time record.

Converse and Hicks were just a plus out of first place and won second place East-West.

Other student winners: third place-Navel Crawford and Gene Whitehead; fourth place - Malcolm Clark and Mike Atheneos; fifth place - Bill Caison and Dana Dixon; and sixth place - Jean and John Earnhardt.

Altogether, 15 tables were in play with a total of 30 boards that were played by each couple. Next Monday will be regular Duplicate bridge night again.

Speaker Group Still Looking For Members

Positions are still open for members and chairmen of committees for the Carolina Symposium, according to symposium chairman Sonny Hallford.

Hallford has urged all students, faculty and townspeople interested in some phase of symposium work to sign interest sheets in student government offices on the second floor of Graham Memorial.

Committees for the Carolina Symposium are Classroom and Departmental Seminar Committee, Organization and Administration Committee, Handbook Committee, Social-Hospitality Committee, Finance Committee, Physical Arrangements Committee, Publicity Committee, Exhibits Committee, and Office Staff.

Hallford stated, "We need good and capable committee heads as well as committee members. I strongly urge you to let us know your interest as soon as possible."

Elgart Booked Dance Week

Les Elagert, top Columbia recording star, will play for Germans Friday, Nov. 8, John McKee, German Club vice president, announced today. Elagart's band will play in a concert 3:30-5:30 Friday afternoon and for the dance 9-12 Friday night.

Leo de Lion, well-known New York wit, will be featured as an added attraction. De Lion will be best remembered for taking over here in the fall of 1955, when Stan Kenton failed to appear.

Elgart's band is one of the largest dance bands in the country right now. Their specialty is old songs with a new twist.

Symposium Is Planned Here

Plans are now being completed for the fifth UNC School of Medicine Symposium to be held here Nov. 21-22.

Registration for the program will be held in the lobby of N. C. Memorial Hospital beginning at 8:30 a.m. Thursday, Nov. 21. The two-day program will begin an hour later. The sessions will end Friday afternoon.

Since the Carolina-Duke football game is on the Saturday following the symposium, many physicians are expected to remain in Chapel Hill for this athletic contest. Because of the large crowd expected for the game, persons attending the symposium are requested to make hotel reservations well in advance.

Taking part in the scientific sessions will be faculty members from the UNC School of Medicine, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine and the School of Medicine of the Johns Hopkins University.

A social program has been planned for the wives of physicians attending the symposium.

Veterans Housing

WASHINGTON (AP)—The veterans housing program was dealt a further blow today when the government announced it no longer will commit itself in advance to buy new home mortgages carrying the Veteran's Administration rate of 4½ per cent interest.

The announcement was made by the Federal National Mortgage Administration, a federally controlled corporation which buys government - backed mortgages from banks and loan companies to supply these lenders with additional funds for home loans.

Viet Nam Bombings

SAIGON, Viet Nam (AP)—Terrorist bombs injured 13 U. S. servicemen and 5 Vietnamese today in the first anti-American outburst in Viet Nam in two years.

The time bombs ripped a U. S. Information Agency library, a military bus and a hostel.

Comeback Try

PARIS (AP)—Socialist Guy Mollet agreed today to try a comeback as premier. Prospects were good he would be able to form a cabinet ending a 22-day crisis.

Mollet was thrown out last May by the same rightist groups that now agree to let him try again. He had set a postwar record for a French premier by staying in office 15 months.

President Reny Coty called in the man he had wanted all along and asked him to atempt the task of forming a government.

SPEAKS TONIGHT

Dr. Nathan Rotenstreich, head of the philosophy department and associate director of undergraduate studies at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, will lecture tonight at 8:00 o'clock in the Faculty Lounge of the Morehead Building. His topic will be "The Historical Character of Human Existence."

Dr. Rotenstreich's recent book, "Between Past and Present: An Essy on History," is to be published in 1958 by the Yale University Press.

DR. DAVID MONROE SAYS:

Monroe Speaks At Television Conference

"Television has something important to offer in alleviating the impact of three critical education problems: how to provide for a larger and more effective use of our undermanned teaching staffs, a more effective utilization of classrooms and other plant facilities, and the offering of a larger measure of services to the people beyond the campus gates."

This view was advanced in a Monday adress here by Dr. David G. Monroe, profesor of political science at UNC and lecturer for college credit courses over WUNC-TV, UNC's educational station.

Dr. Monroe is attending a three-day Conference on Teaching by Television in College and Universities being held on the campus of the Pennsylvania State University. His speech was entitled "Educational Television at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill: An Appraisal."

The pressures exerted upon educational resource according to Dr. Monroe are (1) the multiplying demand inherent in a complex society, (2) a competitive personal market with business and industry for college-trained men and women, (3) the growing need for leadership, (4) a rapidly mounting school enrollment, and (5) limited resources caused by budgetary difficulties.

DR. DAVID G. MONROE

Dr. Monroe continued by citing the station for educational TV on the three campuses of the Consolidated University in Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro was being considered.

"Those who believed that televised education is one of the important answers to the serious educational problems . . . stressed the fact that television provides real means of satisfying two important educational needs: utilizing present teaching staffs and classroom facilities to their maximum extent," he said.

In appraising educational television in Chapel Hill, Dr. Monroe commented, "I think we have made significant progress both in the multiplication of teacher effectiveness on the campus and of broadening the extension program of the University off campus."

In illustrating the fact that educational television increases teacher effectiveness, Dr. Monroe told the group about the closed circuit television arrangement at the UNC School of Dentistry whereby 50 or a 100 students can watch certain procedures which can be viewed in person by only five or six students.

In terms of the extension activities and con's facing North Carolina in 1953 when the establishment of a ties carried on by UNC. Dr. Monroe pointed out total eight credit courses have been completed or are in progress over the University's television station. The second development he mentioned which extends teaching frontiers of the faculty beyond the local campus to that of the state and beyond was the in-school television experiment which is being conducted for the first time in North Carolina this year.

"Today about 7,000 students in junior and senior high schools in North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, and Tennsessee are taking televised courses in American History, World History, General Science, and Eight-Grade Arithmetic through the facilities of "WUNC-TV," he stated in reviewing this new approach to public school education.

Dr. Monroe in his closing remarks said that the two underlying problems of televised education at UNC are money and academic interest. "Parallelling the budget dilemma," he said, "is the problem of cultivating a greater faculty participation in televised education."

Tatum Tries Smile After Maryland Defeat

Jim Tatum walked into his press conference yesterday with traces of a smile on his face. He was singing the tune, "Here Comes the Bride," but he was substituting the last word with "Queen."

Yes, the veteran football mentor was attempting a smile after the Tar Heel's loss at Maryland Saturday. Deep down you knew he was feeling the oppression of the loss. Trying to "buck up" and forget College Park and turn his thoughts to Winston-Salem and the Wake Forest Deacons.

Tatum pretty well summarized the Maryland weekend when he avered that "we played a poor football game."

Tatum stated that his club had not gone into the game well prepared because of the incapacitating affect of the flu bug during practice last week. "But," he added, "Maryland played a good ball game."

Not Surprised By Terp's Power

"It was unfortunate that we weren't able to cook up something special for Maryland, but that's just the breaks of the game," he added.

"The Maryland coaching staff did a fine job in preparing the Terps for the game," he said. "They made the team aware of our pass defense and they didn't throw many passes."

Paradoxically, Tatum stated that he wasn't surprised at the Maryland power. "In fact," he added, "I was disappointed in them in the first half."

Tullai Likes The Way Deacs Hustle

Assistant Coach Fred Tullai was on hand at the conference to give his views on the Wake Forest Deacs.

Fred saw Coach Paul Amen's club in its 34-7 loss to Duke Saturday. Believe it or not, he was impressed with the Deacs.

"I've never seen such a bunch of hustlers." Tullai said it and Tatum concurred .

Tullai continued that he was greatly impressed with the way Wake Forest came back in the second half 34 points behind and never let up for one minute.

"Amen has done a wonderful job of keeping up the team spirit," Tullai said.

Tullai added that the Deacon's main handicap is lack of depth "After the first string," he said, "they are short of experience and manpower."

Tatum too was impressed with the Deacons and even went so far as to say that, with the exception of All-American Bill Barnes, the Deacs were playing better ball than they did a year ago.

"I agree with Amen," Tatum said while the subject was turned to Barnes. A fellow like that makes everybody else on the team better. Every good ball team has a leader," he continued. Barnes was a boy that the rest of the fellows could depend on and that made them play for him, thus play harder."

Kearns Featured On Cover Of Cage Magazine

The 1958 "Street and Smith" Basketball Yearbook bears a full page picture of Carolina's Tommy Kearns and like many other cage magazines, is predicting that the little Tar Heel guard will be an All-American this year. The issue is now on the newsstands.

The story of Kearns is indeed a heartening one. He turned from a hot-headed' 'kid" his sophomore year to a finished ball player with all the ability a fellow could want. Last season Tommy was a sparkplug as the Tar Heels copped the National Basketball Championship. This season he'll be expected to lead the Tar Heels in defense of that title. . . . And he can do it.

The magazine also predicts Carolina to finish first again, followed by Bradley, Kansas, Kentucky and San Francisco.

Flu Bug Has Retarded Athletic Program

That flu bug has certainly been devastating to Carolina athletics the past couple of weeks.

Two varsity soccer matches and two varsity and one freshman track meets have been either postponed or cancelled because of the widespread disease.

In addition, the rest of the fall athletic teams have been weakened by the epidemic, and the physical education and intramurals programs have been brought to a temporary halt to aid in speeding the clearance of the disease.

To this writer's recollection, there has never been a period of this length which so completely halted action on the sports front at Carolina.

But things are looking much better now, and officials of the various department are confident that the athletic program will get back into high gear at least by the first of next week.

Carolina-Wake Forest Game Could Be Sellout

Sports notes gathered from here and there.

Looks like the Oklahoma Sooners are back home to stay now. Home, of course, is first place in the national football polls. The pressure of occupying first place was too much for Michigan State Saturday as they dropped a 20-13 decision to Purdue. Naturally Oklahoma moved right back in. Wonder if the Sooners will ever lose again?

Frank Spencer, Proxy of the Atlantic Coast Sportswriters Association and veteran sports scribe of the Winston-Salem Journal and Sentinel, predicts that the Carolina-Wake Forest game Saturday will be a sellout. Spencer figures the fans up Winston-Salem way want to see the ball club of Jim Tatum's.

And that reminds us, don't forget to buy your student tickets for the game. They'll be on sale until Friday afternoon down at the gym.

What Did You Call It?

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Oct. 22 (AP) — Coach Tommy Monte was briefing his Maryland squad on the Tennessee style of football for Saturday's game and mentioned the tailback.

"What's a tailback? asked Rod Breedlove, sophomore guard.

"I then asked the whole squad how many had seen or played against the single wing and half of them hadn't," said Mont.

He used the point today to explain the difficulty of getting ready for the only single wing team Maryland faces this season.

Making it tougher is wholesale absenteeism on the jayvee and freshman squads because of flu. These units are supposed to copy Tennessee's system and run against the Maryland varsity in practice.

"If they aren't able to do it and help us get a good defense, it's going to take three to four touchdowns to beat Tennesee," Mont predicted.

Last week before the North Carolina game he forecast that the team which scored two touchdowns would win. He was correct, with Maryland scoring one for good measure in its 21-7 upset.

Frosh Harriers Are Victims Of Repetition

By JIM PURKS

History doesn't often repeat itself, but it did Monday, much to the woe of the Carolina freshman soccer team.

The booters were defeated here in a heart-breaking 2-1 loss to the Duke freshman team.

The game, hard fought all the way, found the teams deadlocked 1-1 at the end of regulation time. Two overtime periods were called for, and in the second overtime a Duke player scored the winning goal for the Blue Imps.

Now, take what happened at about this same time last year. The Duke and Carolina freshman teams met here on Fetzer Field.

That contest was a hard-fought one too, almost indentical to Monday's contest. At the end of regulation time, the two teams were deadlocked, 1-1.

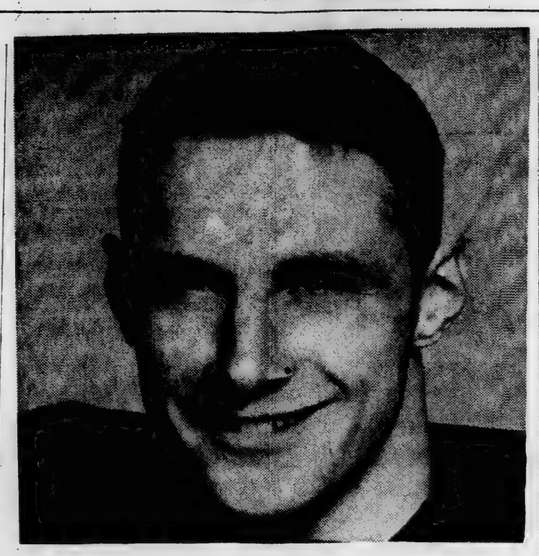
As in Monday's game, two overtime periods were held and, as in Monday's game, the Duke freshman team emerged victorious, 2-1.

Freshman coach Chuck Hartman, however, is now counting on history repeating itself again. Last year's freshman squad, fired-up against Duke, later went to the dusty Duke soccer field and soundly attained revenge.

There is still a noticeable lack of familiar faces at the scrimmages of the Carolina varsity soccer squad, which has had its last two scheduled games called off because of the flu bug.

However, most of the players are expected to be back in action Wednesday as the team gets ready for its match with Davidson, to be held Friday.

Among those on the forward line who were attacked by the flu last week were Mike Thompson, the Tar Heels speedy center forward who is leading the team in scoring, and right wing Charles Whitfield, who missed only a couple of days action.



On defense, first-string goalie Jim Rattay was out of action last week, but returned to practice yesterday. Also on defense, Carolina would have had to play Virginia in Charlottesville Monday without the services of its hustling captain, Bill Blair, who was also hit by the flu.

Coach Marvin Allen's squad hasn't played a game since its 4-3 loss to Lynchburg College on October 8. Its last two games, with Washington & Lee and Virginia were called off. Coach Allen said that the game with Virginia has been re-scheduled.

MAJOR COLLEGE FOOTBALL

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Eleven major college football teams and 30 minor teams still can boast all-winning records with about half the season left. Last weekend's epidemic of upsets took a heavy toll of the unbeaten and united elevens.

WADE SMITH
Should See Action Saturday

PHYSICAL REPORT

Tatum Will Probably Make Lineup Changes

By BILL KING

Look for some lineup changes when Carolina goes against Wake Forest in Winston-Salem Saturday.

Jim Tatum gave every indication at his press conference yesterday that he is planning to make some personnel changes.

Tatum cited two reasons why he would probably do some shaking up.

1-Because of injuries suffered in the Maryland game.

2-"I'm like Casey Stengel. When you lose a ball game, it's time to change the batting order a little bit."

For the first time this season Carolina is faced with the problem of physical fitness. Maryland gave the Tar Heels quite a beating physically, although it is not known at present who, if anybody, will miss the Wake Forest game.

Tatum stated that his right guard situation looked so bad right now, that he might have to reach into the student body to come up with a man of back up Jack Lineberger. Lineberger is the only man at the position who is not hurt. Ed Furjanic and Ellis Woolridge are both out with bad knees.

Another physically incapacitated gridder in the Carolina front is second string center Jim Davis, who Tatum describes as "so banged up he probably won't be able to play against Wake Forest."

In the backfield, halfback Jim Schuler is resting a leg injury and fullback Ed Lipski is out with a bad hip.

Both center Ron Koes and halfback Ron Marquette are still suffering from the flu bug but both should be ready Saturday. Koes played against Maryland and Marquette did not.

UNC Holds Big Lead Over Deacs

Two lettermen ends, who were expected to play a lot of ball for the Demon Deacons this season, have been counted out for the year after undergoing leg operations last week. Bary Hines, a junior from Charleston, W. Va., was operated on Oct. 14 while Henry Martin, a junior from Goldsboro, underwent surgery on Oct. 19.

The Wake Forest-Carolina game here Saturday afternoon in Bowman Gray Stadium will be the 54th between the two schools. The rivalry, dating back 69 years, is one of the oldest in Dixie. These two schools introduced football to the state in 1888. The first game was played on Thursday of Fair Week, Oct. 18, 1888, at the Fairgrounds in Raleigh. Wake Forest won by a 6-4 score.

Carolina's Tar Heels hold a string of 17 consecutive victories in their series with Wake Forest while the Demon Deacons have been able to put together only three wins in a row. The Tar Heels won every year from 1893 through 1923 with the Deacs putting together their three-game skein in 1950-51-52.

Brownell Quits Post In Cabinet

WASHINGTON. Oct. 23 (AP)—Herbert Brownell Jr. resigned today as U. S. Attorney General.

President Eisenhower accepted the resignation and the White House said Eisenhower intends to name Deputy Atty. Gen. William P. Rogers to the cabinet post.

No date was for the change.

But it apparently will take place in about a fortnight, in compliance with Brownell's wishes.

The White House said Brownell plans to return to private law practice with the firm he left when he joined the cabinet nearly five years ago. This is the New York City firm of Lord, Day and Lord.

Brownell plans to serve as counsel to the firm rather than as a partner, because of legal restrictions on former government officials engaging in practice involving government cases.

Brownell not only was Eisenhower's chief legal arm in the government but also one of the chief executive's top political advisers. He managed the Eisenhower campaign for the Presidency in 1952, as well as the losing campaigns of former New York Gov. Thomas E. Dewey in 1944 and 1948.

There have been recurrent reports in recent weeks—all of them officially denied or ill today—that Brownell was about to step out of the Cabinet.

A few minutes before the resignation was announced at the White House, Rep. Celler (D-NY) announced at the capitol that he had received advance word from Brownell that he was quitting.

In its announcement the White House said Brownell's resignation had been under discussion for some time.

Dean Gives Report On Asian-Vaccine

All of the Asian flu vaccine received by the University has come from Lederle Laboratories, and no vaccine has been found unacceptable.

As of October 23, 3,500 doses of the vaccine were received, all from Lederle Laboratories. Of this number, 1,000 doses were turned over to North Carolina Memorial Hospital, and 2,350 doses were made available to students.

The total number of students vaccinated as of October 23 was 612, according to the report.

FLU IS RAMPANT

Flu and colds continue to play havoc with citizins of the community as they continue in epidemic proportions.

Sixty nine students were reported absent at Hillsboro High school yesterday, the lowest number in over a week. The absentee 153, as spokesman reported.

Debate Likely On Four Bills

The Student Legislature will convene tonight at 7:30 in Phi Hall on the top floor of New East for the third meeting this year.

The following bills are expected to be put on the floor tonight for debate:

Al Alphin's (SP) bill "requesting that the campus stores committee examine carefully the reasons for the high prices charged students by the UNC Book Exchange."

Pat Adams' (SP) bill "to establish a committee to study Lenoir Hall." and Al Goldsmith's (UP) "to appropriate funds ($1000) to the Carolina Symposium."

The first three bills have gone to the ways and means committee, which will meet at 4 p.m. today in the Grail Room of Graham Memorial.

The last bill is being considered by the finance committee, which will meet at 4 p.m. today in the Woodhouse Room of GM.

The committees will present these bills to the legislature, will report favorably or unfavorably on them and will suggest changes in the bills or their prefaces.

Yack Pictures

Juniors, grad students and first, second and third-year medical students may have their pictures taken through Friday, Oct. 25, for a late charge of $1.

ROTC and ROTC sponsors, German Club members, dentistry students and dental hygenists, and dance committee members are regularly scheduled through this Friday. Pictures will be taken in the basement of Graham Memorial from 1 to 7:30 p.m.

Talk On Civil Rights Planned Here Monday

Socialist Norman Thomas will visit the UNC campus next Monday to discuss civil rights in connection with U. S. foreign policy and position in the world.

Sponsored by the Carolina Forum, Thomas will speak in Carroll Hall at 8 p. m.

The Forum speaker has been a six time candidate for the Presidency on the Socialist ticket.

A Socialist since World War I Thomas became a member of the party because he believed it was the only organization "realistically facing the problems of war and the need for economic change."

His Socialist activities following the war included free speech fights and struggles in support of the rights of the workers to organize.

During World War II Thomas fought for a peace based on the cooperation of free peoples and rejection both of "vengeance and imperialism."

His campaigns since that time have been for world disarmament, with international control and inspection, and against both "get tough" imperialism and appeasement of Russia.

Thomas is curently a columnist for the Mirror Enterprise Syndicate of Los Angeles and is the author of several books and pamphlets

Response To Vaccine 'Lagging'

The university physician today noted a lagging response to available supplies of Asian flu vaccine and called on students here to "take full advantage" of shots now being offered.

In the final analysis, said Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, student response to current vaccine clinics could avert a major outbreak of the dread disease on the UNC campus.

At the same time, Dr. Hedgpeth made these announcements in the wake of a still unidentified flu epidemic which continued to loose its grip here Wednesday:

1. All physical education classes and intramural activities will be resumed beginning next Monday.

2. An additional supply of 1,000 Asian flu vaccine dose was received here Wednesday morning.

Dr. Hedgpeth said the new supply gives the infirmary sufficient vaccine to inoculate 1,500 students, free of charge, only for the asking.

It will be distributed again Friday night between the hours of 7:30 and 9:30 o'clock, he said.

Only a disappointing 42 students treked to the infirmary Tuesday night for shots administered then. Response still remained far short of university expectations.

Meanwhile, however, the flu siege showed a continuing decline here. Infirmary officials said 112 persons were treated by 4 p.m. Wednesday and some 60 patients remained at the infirmary.

Stock Market Has Big Jump

The Associated Press average of 60 stocks gained $5.80, closing at $156.70. This was the biggest one day advance since Nov. 13, 1929, when the gain was $9.10.

The estimate of increase in the quoted value of stocks is based on the gain in the AP average.

In crowded brokerage houses throughout the financial district many market analysts and customers attributed the resurgence in the market to president Eisenhower's statement last night he would give talks on the national economy.

"Eisenhower's statement was far and away the dominating factor," one broker said, adding, "The market was ready to rally anyway."

The hugh rise also was attributed to technical factors involved in an expected rebound from an oversold condition. Stocks have been declining since mid-July and yesterday reached the lowest levey in 2½ years.

Whatever the cause, brokers reported buying orders came virtually from everywhere, including the mutual funds and financial institutions which are a major factor in the modern stock market.

Some brokers felt Eisenhower's statement last night was reassuring to foreign investors who have sold American stocks in recent weeks, and particularly since Russia's Sputnik was started whirling around the earth.

American Telephone and Telegraph, very weak earlies this week, jumped $5.50 to $16.60. Lukens steel gained $10.50 and Du Pont $8.

Other big gainers included Gulf Oil, up $5.12; International Paper, up $4.50, Republic steel, up $4.62; Chrysler, up $4.37; Zenith, up $4.25; Goodyear, up $4.25; International Nnckel, up $3.37; and Southern Pacific, up $2.62.

New York, Oct. 23 (AP)—A skyrocketing stock market made its biggest one day advance in 28 years today as buying orders swept into wall street from all sections of the country.

Major stocks jumped $1 to 10 a share and the quoted value of all stoiks listed on the New York stoik exchange boomed an estimated $7,200,000,000.

IDC Defeats Proposed Dorm Plan Originated Last Week By Evans

Plan To Pay Counselors And Increase Authority Fails By Narrow Margin

By Davis Young

The Interdormitory Council defeated a resolution calling for the re-organization of the dormitory advisory system las night by a vote of 18-13.

The resolution had been introduced the previous week by Student Body President Sonny Evans and Student Body Attorney General Sonny Hallford.

The resolution had stated: All dormitory advisors are to be paid at the rate of $1,000 per year; these dormitory advisors shall be required to take a lighter academic load; and these advisors will be required to spend 15-20 hours a week in their rooms counseling students.

It went on to state: The advisor shall be charged with the responsibility of giving out the keys to the rooms and in keeping quiet hours; They shall have the power to ask a resident to leave a dorm, who shall in turn have the power of appeal to the IDC Court; and that the advisor shall exercise his power only when the dorm officers show a laxity.

IDC representative, Clarence Simpson, was the main opponent to the passage of the bill. He rose to the floor of the meeting to say that each dorm resident will be taken by the hand and led toward his degree.

"If a student wants counseling it is very possible for him to get it under the present system. The offices in South Building and Graham Memorial are always open."

Aycock Dormitory President Cliff Mann stated that he thought the plan had many merits and that the thought behind it was good. He stated that the resolution had awakened the dorm leaders to their responsibilities. He agreed with of those present at the meeting, that the bill was however, in many ways a slam at the IDC.

IDC Vice Presiden: Bob Carter was the chief supporter of the bill. He expressed the opinion that students have little respect for one another. He called for the start of a tradition of study in the dorms, but felt that if the IDC could handle the problem, that there was no need for the bill's passage.

IDC President Tom Walters gave the following statement to the DTH at the conclusion of the meeting. "I was surprised at the vote, but think that it is important that the IDC feels that it can handle its own problems.

"We have appointed a committee to look into dorm conditions and I am confident we can handle the situation. I would like to thank Sonny Evans and Sonny Hallford for their sincere efforts to work in conjunction with the IDC."

Lax Satellite Program Aired

Meeting Tuesday night, the Dialectic Senate passed by a vote of 3-2 a bill condemning the Eisenhower Administration for letting the Russians defeat the United States in the satellite race.

Senator Frederic Wolfer introduced the bill and said that Eisenhower's administration had been lagging in the satellite program.

Senator Gary Greer, speaking for the negative side, said the United States Navy was competent to carry out the program and that our satellite would gather more information than the Russian one.

Claiming we had lost a psychological advantage with the nations which are on the borderline between the United States and Russia, Senator Pat Adams spoke affirmatively.

Senator Andy Canoutas said he did not think the United States had lost too much of a psychological advantage and that the highest quality of the U. S. satellite would compensate for Russia's earliness.

Senator Rudolph Alberts spoke in favor of the bill. Senator Gerry Boudreau condemned the Eisenhower Administration for its slowness.

HOUSE, AYCOCK ON TV

Former Chancellor Robert B. House and newly-inaugurated Chancellor William B. Aycock will be featured on the first program in the fall series of "Ideas" on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, Thursday at 9:30 p. m. The Chancellors will discuss "The Role of the University."

Teamsters

WASHINGTON (AP)—Federal District Judge F. Dickinson Letts ruled today that teamsters union bosses conspired to rig their recent union convention. He issued a preliminary injunction against President-elect James R. Hoffa's taking office, but refused to put the union in receivership.

Letts said he hopes for early trial on the basic charges in the case—that Hoffa and other teamsters leaders handpicked delegates to the Miami convention so as to throw the balloting to Hoffa.

The preliminary injunction which he signed will remain in effect until such a trial.

MacMillan, Ike Begin Talks On Red Challenge To World

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Eisenhower and Prime Mnister Macmillan today opened a three-day conference on joint moves to meet Russia's scientific and diplomatic challenge to the free world.

Within minutes after the British leader arrived by plane, Eisenhower telephoned him at the British Embassy for a brief chat on the problems they will tackle.

They arranged to being formal discussions at the White House this evening with a full complement of foreign policy and scientific advisers to assist them.

Both men were reported confident they could forge a new British-American partnership to speed up the free world's drive to overtake Russia's missiles and satellite developments.

Dulles talked with him for 30 minutes at the embassy and arranged to renew the talks during the afternoon in advance of the full-fledged discussion with Eisenhower.

On arriving, Macmillan said his chief aim was to "improve our friendship and extend cooperation between our two countries in all fields—and there are many."

Macmillan, who sported a red carnation in his buttonhole, and Dulles stressed that the interests of the 13 other Atlantic pact allies would be kept in mind during the talks.

To reenforce this, Eisenhower arranged to meet Friday with Paul-Henri Spaak, secretary-general of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization who is visiting the capital now.

Spaak also is to be kept informed during the meeting, informants said, to ease fears of other allied countries that an exclusive British-American partnership deal was in the making.

Dulles pointedly noted that the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks involve "not just two nations, not just the United States and the Commonwealth nations, but all free nations."

Despite the [illegible] there was every sign that both MacMillan and Eisenhower were thinking chiefly in terms of sharing atomic-hydrogen and military secrets between their two nations.

Such a British-American partnership, it was felt, would operate on behalf of all free nations and with less chance that secret data might leak out than if the information were spread among several nations.

Eisenhower was reported considering a request to congress for broad permission to exchange secret data with NATO countries with the understanding that he would decide how much information to give to each.

British informants sought to minimize the scientific phase of the discussions with the assertion that added cooperation in this field has been virtually assured by Eisenhower's remarks during Queen Elizabeth's visit here.

At that time, Eisenhower toasted the Queen and called for a mobilization of free world scientific, economic and diplomatic resources to offset the Russian threat.

INTERVIEWS BEGIN—

The Dean of Women's office will begin interviewing all undergraduate women today.

Information obtained from these interviews will be added to personnell folders on each student.

Freshmen and transfers will be the subjects of interviews during this semester. Second semester, interviews will be held with seniors.

Conducting the interviews will be Miss Luanne Thornton and Miss Martha Decker.

Students will be notified by mail of the time and date of these interviews.

Labor Probe

WASHINGTON (AP)—An executive of one of the nation's biggest baking companies lashed out at the Senate rackets investigating committee today, accusing it of airing "slanderous and unwarranted" insinuations against his firm.

George Faunce Jr., vice president of the Continental Baking Co., testified before the committee shortly after Chairman McClellan (D-Ark) said there is "perfectly plain evidence of collusion" between a continental subsidiary and the bakery workers union.

Scientists In Dither Over Sputnik's Course

Sputnik is as unpredictable as a woman. After nearly three weeks of observing the Russian-made satellite, this seems to be one of the few things about it of which U. S. scientists are sure.

According to Tony Jenzano, director of Morehead Planetarium, even the "electronic brains" blow fuses when presented with data concerning the orbit of the erratic manmade moon. The only way of determining its orbit yet found, he said, is to approximate Sputnik's path through the use of data obtained by means of visual observation.

Shortly after the Russian moon was launched, Jenzano wrote to the Naval Research Laboratory requesting Sputnik's timetable. Since the visually-secured data is so inaccurate, however, no such timetable has been received.

Jenzano believes, though, that given a long enough period of time U. S. scientists wil be able to assemble sufficient information to enable them to establish a rough "Sputnik timetable."

Jenzano cautioned amateur "moon watchers" that even with such a timetable they will have said.

Jenzano also advanced a theory regarding the "strange force" that difficulty in sighting the satellite.

"Even under the most favorable conditions," he said, "it will appear no brighter than the faintest star."

Sputnik's rocket, however, will be as bright as a star of the first magnitude, Jenzano said. (First magnitude stars are the brightest). The rocket precedes Sputnik in its orbit by about 30 minutes and is gradually increasing this lead.

Those interested in observing th Soviet satellite will have a good deal of time to do so, according to Jenzano. He explained that U. S. scientists calculate that Sputnik may continue its travels for over a year. The proposed U. S. satellite, which will be launched into more dense atmosphere, is expected stay up for at least a year, he has been reported throwing Sputnik off its orbit. He said this force may be nothing more than the gravitational pull of the earth.

He pointed out that one of the primary functions of the U. S. satellite will be to determine the exact size and shape of our world.

Variations in the shape of our unevenly shaped globe may well account for variations in Sputnik's "flight pattern," he said.

It is by means of these orbital variations that U. S. scientists hope to determine more about the dimensions of the earth, he added.

World In Brief

Hungary Silent

VIENNA (AP) — The Hungarian people marked the first anniversary of their anti-Soviet revolt today in sullen silence under the guns of police.

The Communist government of Premier Janos Kadar warned them would be crushed. He had nine Russian army divisions to back him up.

Reportsf rom Budapest said the day was drab and rainy as Hungarians trudged to work or to school.

Turkey Kept Boiling

DAMASCUS (AP)—Syria kept the Turkish issue boiling today, giving a formal rejection to King Saud's mediation offer and in effect accusing the U. S. Navy of sending planes deep over Syria.

Maj. Gen. Afif Bizry, army chief of staff, said reconnaissance planes fly almost daily over the city of Homs, midway between Damascus and the Turkish frontier.

Aid To Tito

WASHINGTON (AP)—The State Department disclosed officially today that "We are reappraising" United States programs of economic and military aid for Communist Yugoslavia.

University Party Is Off To A Fast-Rolling Start

It is indeed encouraging to witness such political participation as was evidenced at Tuesday night's University Party meeting.

Gerrard Hall, where the party moved after it was found that Roland Parker Lounges were too small to accommodate the crowd, was over-full.

Much of the representation was made mandatory by fraternities and sororities. But at any rate, the articipation was fabulous.

The crowd was the largest at a nomination session in years.

In recent years, from 50 to 70 per cent of the campus population has been casting ballots. This is far too small. And it is a violation of a sacred Democratic tradition.

Things look brighter this year.

Maybe the Student Party sessions will continue to get larger, as the UP meetings are doing.

And maybe participation in the fall election Nov. 12, will be the largest in the history of the University's student government.

The Student Legislature has a large responsibility, as does all student government. And there are more than enough qualified students around to make this the most prosperous year in student government's history.

Student government has many friends in South Building, but it also has enemies who will make a superb show of any irresponsible action on the part of governmental officials.

Thus student autonomy depends on student responsibility.

Participation at the University Party nominating session was encouraging.

The rest of the campaign and election should witness such enthusiasm.

Autonomy is responsibility.

Ol' Ez Benson And, Yes, His One-Sided Mouth . . .

There is one thing which may be truthfully said about Secretary of Agriculture Ez Benson:

There aren't two sides to his mouth.

He's just against the farmer—to his face and behind his back.

Speaking before the Fayette County Farm Bureau in Lexington, Ky., Ol' Not-So-Elegant Eb said he felt the federal price support and production control programs threatened to price American tobacco out of world markets.

Of course, those close to the agricultural situation realize that without production controls and price supports, farmers will lead the way to a depression such as Herbert Hoover never saw.

Farmers are currently getting too little for their tobacco, but they'd get practically nothing—and would be at the cigarette companies' mercy—unless the government guaranteed them certain percentages of parity.

As for production controls, it would be a mad race to see who could plant most—with the economic law of supply and demand going out the window lopsidedly—unless the federal government regulated planting through crop allotment acreages.

But Ol' Ez goes merrily along—advocating that crop controls and price supports be abolished—so that the farmer will be at everybody's mercy.

Currently, farmers are practically at the botom of the economic ladder. But most of them are eating.

Here again, Ez plans to remedy the situation.

However, there definitely aren't two sides to his mouth.

Both of them preach starvation for the farmer.

Long's Ego Should Go: Legislature Merits More

The Legislature is slated to debate the fate of Rep. Tom Long's infamous investigation bill tonight.

We would suggest that if Rep. Long is truly interested in the campus newspaper, he come and talk with us. And we'll very gladly help him investigate the editorial policy of other newspapers. We volunteer our services.

But we think it was extremely underhanded and characteristically conniving of Rep. Long to suggest investigating other papers—indicating he wasn't satisfied with The Daily Tar Heel—without even speaking to us.

We volunteer our help to Rep. Long if he plans to come forth with another measure.

But his current stab at The Daily Tar Heel—his investigation bill—should be defeated. And Long's ego should be punctured.

His conniving is bad for him, the Student Party and any responsible legislative body.

There are too many worthwhile causes around the campus—better social facilities for dormitories, an additional fraternity court, lower date ticket prices—for Long to attempt a personal publicity through stabbing The Daily Tar Heel.

Perhaps the University Party legislative majority can puncture the Long ego and come up with a constructive measure.

And maybe the Student Party will vindicate itself of the blame for Long's ego-building bill. The SP is certainly much more responsible than member Long's bill would seem to indicate.

At any rate, Long's ego should go.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Indonesian & Indian Roles & U. S. Failure

By GANS

India and Indonesia are two of the most crucial areas in Asia and highlight one of the basic deficiencies in U. S. policy—that of not understanding the basic motivating forces behind the nations that it has to deal with.

India, with the second largest population of all countries in the world and who forms the dividing line between the Middle East and the Far East, is in position to be the bulwark of a military or ideological offensive by either Russia or the U. S., and from the results of the election in the province of Kerala, it may well be a communist bulwark.

In a recent article in the New York Times, A. M. Rosenthal outlined some ofthe misunderstanding between the U. S. and India. He cited the U. S. attitude toward Red China, the donation of arms to Pakistan and Pakistani Kashmir, the failure of the U. S. to realize the economic necessities of the Indian people, and the difficulty of the U. S. in understanding the ethnocentrism of the small Indian states.

There is no question about the misunderstanding by the Indian people of the U. S. motive, but clarification by the U. S. in form of action should be sought.

The Indian fear of arms aid to Pakistan is founded in the historical religious feud that caused the separation of the two countries. It cannot be allayed by U. S. words that Pakistan will not launch an attack against India, and probably can only be allayed by equal support for Indian defense.

Moreover, about ten years ago the U. S. made what may be considered the biggest diplomatic blunder of the era, when it hedged around sending wheat to India and let the Soviet Union make a token offer before the U. S. sent any, in that time of Indian drought. Moreover, the U. S. has been exceedingly stingy with economic aid over since. And the U. S. wonders why Krishna Menon does not embrace the U. S. with open arms.

There are people in the U. S. state department who think that India is but a collection of separate entities joined together by the force of one man called Nehru, and they talk in terms of the void that will be created after Nehru departs. However, what they do not realize is that there was enough nationalism in India to form the nation, and probably enough to sustain it as a nation. Yet, they fail to take into consideration the fierce area consciousness of the Indian people with respect to India, Asia, and also their individuals districts. All these drives must be taken into consideration when formulating a foreign policy.

Here as in so many other places, the state department fails to realize the realities of the situation and has acted soley in accordance with U. S. self-interest. The U. S. has tried to exploit the potentialities of this country without noticing that Java has the highest population density of any place in the world and consequently is one of the most impoverished areas in the world today. Furthermore, the U. S. has ignored to a large extent the driving force of nationalism which must have been necessary to unite that island republic and which must be prevalent today in order to keep it united.

The government at Jakarta has taken a long step on the road to ccommunism. Unless the U. S., in the true spirit of giving, starts alleviating some of the Indonesian problems, this vital area may be lost to the free world.

To look at the facts behind of the political situation in the world today might be difficult, but it must be done.

"We Have A Kind Of Outer Space Problem Too"

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Ready Retraction & Able Advances All . . .

Gail Godwin

It seems that Oct. 17's column headed "Male Meets Female-Teeth Get Cleaned" has caused some disturbance. Therefore, a couple of items ought to be cleared up. In paragraph one, the yonng dental student's very first remark was something concerning a coed's Stratford blazer. A game of "Do you know" followed after which the famous, "Would you like to have your teeth cleaned?" was uttered.

Also, in the last paragraph, the writer urged all coeds to follow the beaten path to the University Hospital to get their teeth cleaned. I have been informed by way of letter from an anonymous dental student that "The cowboys at the University Hospital wouldn't know a bicuspid from a molar." I apologize. More distinction should have been made between University Hospital and Dental School. I had stupidly assumed that since the former housed the latter one would necesarily have to go to the first to end up in the second.

It is always refreshing to have one's mother down for the weekend. She sheds an entirely new light on commonplace campus occurrences. For instance:

On hearing about the food situation during the flu epidemic -

"Why don't they serve sandwiches and orange juice in the classes? Then everybody would go for free food."

On seeing the Moorehead Sundial - "Oh, I wish we could get one of those for our back yard!"

While eating in the Coffee Shop, flanked on both sides by tables of college boys -

"But darling, why don't you ever eat at the Monogram Club? I thought you came here to meet boys."

You know, if somebody had the nerve to try it and the luck to get by with it, he could get thoroughly educated at Carolina without ever going to a clas. All he needs in a bright spark of interest and plenty of time. I guarantee if he chose the Intimate Bookshop and the Bull's Head for his hangouts, attended all lectures and speeches of visiting notables at UNC, and just talked to people, he would emerge a true well-rounded intellect.

It is really too bad that some system hasn't been devised in which interest rules over Academic Protocol. What a wonderful schedule it would be - dividing one's time between contemporary novels, great philosophies, Hi Fi symphonies and personal relations with as many of the 7,200 other students as possible. But who has time for this, what with monotone lectures from unchanging, time-worn notes, and quizzes in which you parrot back the lectures. This generation is screaming for fresh outlooks an interesting material:

DADA NADA:

The New Cult And Rituals . .

Frank Crowther

Since other people have their political parties, fraternities, sororities, dormitory organizations, the IDC, classes and letter writing, I would like to propose something for those unfortunates who have none of the above. In this day of the decline and fall of almost everything—precipitated by the heartless dismantling of New York's Third avenue "El"—we must not lie down in darkness like strangers in our brave new world (whatever that means). It has been proposed, by nobody in particular, that a new cult be established, the cult of Dada-Nada.

To give you a brief histoy, the Dada half of the cult was established by Tristan Tzara who says that it was born in 1916 at the Cabaret Voltaire in uZrich. He wrote the Dada Manifesto in 1918 and was invited to Paris in 1920 by the founders of the magazine Litterature, the Dadaist review. In explaining what Dada was, Tzara said, "I am by principle against manifestos, as I am also against pripciples . . . To explain is the amusement of red-bellied numbskulls. Dada Has No Meaning." So, this makes everything much simpler . . . no studying involved. All you have to be is an extremely obscure individual who believes in absolutely nothing. One must crusade to pursey this, however.

Now the other part of our little pocket revolution came from nothing at all. Nada actually isn't much at all, in fact, it is infinity inside a room wth no doors and the keys thrown away. This is simple enough. One here must memorize the epistle: "Our nada who art in nada, nada be thy name thy kingdom nada . . . ," There aren't really any rules as to how you say this, as long as it is not in English (it's very unfashionable)). Remember to say your 'hail nadas" and face the South and north three times a night to say "Nada be praised."

After you have done this for several days you may consider yourself a chartered member of the Dada-Nadaists (nadabepraised!). Now you will be eligible to attend the unscheduled meetings which are to be held somewhere at almost any or no time. You many miss as many meetings as you wish, so long as you are there.

At the last meeting, they had quite a success. One of the members read "A Farewell to Arms" while loud sirens were being sounded and several of those attending cut off their neighbor's arms. I understand that they branched out after that meeting. Another fantastic success came about when the president held a meeting at which there was nobody present and read an extensive essay on the positiveness of negation. This was later acclaimed as "absolute art" and "puré poetry" by all concerned and he was awarded his third "Croix de Nada."

Here is a wonderful chance for those of you who have next to nothing. Have nothing at all! If society is oppressing you, arise and be nothing. If you are convinced that humanity is hopeless and contains nothing (Nada be praised) but incorrigible, ignorant bipeds, here's your chance to let Nada know that you have rejected all and embraced nothing.

Hail Dada Nada . . . nada be praised!

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Study Tradition & Indifference

I read that someone is trying to establish a "tradition of study" in the dormitories. I understand that if it works they'll try it in the library.

A couple of Carolina gentlemen were on their way to their respective 8 a.m. classes when they spied one of the local coeds semi-sleepwalking her way to class at a pace that would make a terrapin (non-Maryland type) envious.

Since the 8 a.m. bell had already rung; one of the gentlemen turned to the other and said: "Now there goes my nomination for an example of 'supreme indifference.'"

So, curiousity piqued, they drew up on either side of the girl and started to interview her.

"Young lady, are you going to class?," asked one of the gentlemen.

Her eyelids opened about a quarter of an inch wider. She didn't look up or in any apparent direction and her expression remained the same. After a long pause of silence had passed she finally murmured a resigned: "Yes."

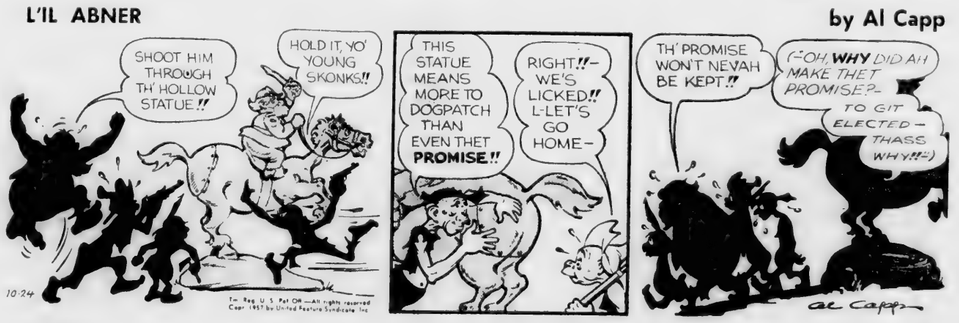
Her eyelids then resumed their previous almost closed position. She still maintained the same pace which she had held ever since coming into view.

The three shuffled onward while the would be interviewers searched their minds for more questions.

"To what do you credit your capability for this amazing indifference?" one of the gentlemen asked.

A little quicker on the uptake this time, the coed replied: "Practice. I have six 8 a.m. classes." The men nodded at this sage bit of observation and the second thrust the following question at her as she reached the building in which she had her class:

"What do you say to your professor when you come in late?"



Coed: "Nothing. I just smile."

Well, you know the old saying about asking silly questions

You know, it seems to me, if you are going to have a queen at your ballgame it's a lot simpler and more convenient to just have the judges pick one for you.

SCIENCE MADE SIMPLE: No. 1

Though this column is intended to be a source of innocent merriment for all sexes and not to concern itself with weighty matters, I have asked my sponsors, the makers of Marlboro, whether I might not, from time to time, use this space for a short lesson in science. "Makers," I said to them, "might I not, from time to time, use this space for a short lesson in science?"

They agreed with many a kindly smile, the makers of Marlboro, for they are the most agreeable of men. Their benevolence is due in no small measure to the cigarettes they smoke, for Marlboro is a cigarette to soothe the most savage of breasts. I refer not only to the flavor which, as everyone knows, is a delight to the palate, but also to the Marlboro container. Here is no fiendishly contrived device to fray the fingernails and rasp the nerves; here, instead, is a flip-top box that opens like a charm, and inside you find a handy red tape to lift out the cigarettes with ease and dispatch. Add to all this the best filter ever made, and you can see that you get a lot to like.

Let us begin our series of science lessons with chemistry. It is fitting that chemistry should be the first, for it is the oldest of sciences, having been discovered by Benjamin Franklin in 468 B.C. when an apple fell on his head while he was shooting the breeze with Pythagoras one day outside the Acropolis. (The reason they were outside the Acropolis and not inside was that Pythagoras had been thrown out for drawing right triangles all over the walls.)

They had several meetings outside the Acropolis, but finally Franklin said, "Look, Pythagoras, this is nothing against you, see, but I'm no youngster anymore and if I keep laying around on this wet grass with you, I'm liable to get the breakbone fever. I'm going inside." Pythagoras, friendless now, moped around Athens for awhile, then drifted off to Monaco where he married a girl named Harriet Sigafoos and went into the chuck-a-luck business. (He would certainly be forgotten today had not Shakespeare written "You Know Me, Al.")

But I digress. We were beginning a discussion of chemistry, and the best way to begin is with fundamentals. Chemicals are divided into elements. There are four: air, earth, fire, and water. Any number of delightful combinations can be made from these elements, such as firewater, dacron, and chef's salad.

Chemicals can be further divided into the classes of explosive and non-explosive. A wise chemist always touches a match to his chemicals before he begins an experiment.

A variety of vessels of different sizes and shapes are used in a chemistry lab. There are tubes, vials, beakers, flasks, pipettes, and retorts. A retort is also a snappy comeback, such as "Oh, yeah?" and "So's your Uncle Oscar."

I have now told you the most important aspects of chemistry, but there are many more—far too many to cover in the space remaining here. However, I am sure there is a fine chemistry lab on your very own campus. Why don't you go up some afternoon and poke around? Make a fun day out of it. Bring ukeleles. Wear humorous hats. Toast frankfurters on the Bunsen burners. Be gay. Be merry. Be loose... For chemistry is your friend!

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Mary Alys Voorhees, Editor

Delta Psi—Coons And Royality

The fellows over at St. Anthiny Hall have a'lot to talk about these days—first there was the big annual coon hunt weekend before last and then the trip to Maryland last weekend.

Seems the hunt was a great success for everyone——including the coon—who only got treed but not killed!!- And during the course of the big game hunt one of the brothers nearly got lost. Then thse who hadn't encountered the bug from abroad headed up to Maryland to take a look at English royality and that thar game Andy Griffin calls football.

Phi Gam News

A chat with the Phi Gams informs us of the brothers trip to Maryland plus the election of pledge class officers.

Lin Church of North Mecklenburg is the new president while John Bryant of Winston-Salem is vice president and Richard Doughten of Bay Head, N. J. is secretary-treasurer.

Phi Gam Smith Bradfield of Asheville has given his pin to Stuart Pegram, also of Asheville.

DUs To Rutgers

Faithful Tar Heel followers, the DUs took a jaunt up to College Park for a weekend of fun with seven brothers journeying on up to the Rutgers chapter in Jersey after the game to spend the weekend.

New pledge officers are Buddy Gardner of Salisbury, president; Buddy Spoon of Charlotte, secretary; Bill French of Charlotte, treasurer; and Bob Leonard of Henderson, sergeant-at-arms.

Lambda Chi Card Section

The football team probably didn't know it, but the Lambda Chis had the card section in action Saturday during the game right here in Chapel Hill. Out came the radios and out came the cards for a lively bridge session while the footballers jousted before Queen Liz.

ZBTs From Miami To Maryland

Travelingitis has hit the ZBT House. Four brothers were just back from a Miami weekend when 35 brothers and dates headed to the Maryland-Carolina game Saturday for a weekend party Terp style. On the slate next weekend is a "Flu Party" at the House where they'll follow the boys in blue on the radio.

ZBT pledge class officers are Chuck Meltsner of Toronto, Canada, president; Garry Huddles of Baltimore, Md., vice president; and Don Kunian of Nashville, Tenn., secretary-treasurer.

SPE Bus Stop

Forgetting the books, the Sig Eps chartered their own bus this weekend and headed for a "royal" College Park weekend. After the game the fellows and their dates journeyed over to the Maryland SPE House for a party, where the brothers spent the night.

Next weekend they'll be off again to Winston-Salem where they'll party at Larry Winecoff's farm after the Deacon-Tar Heel game.

Students On Bridge

In today's hand North-South reached a game contract in no-trump after bidding every suit but spades. South might have bid one spade on the second round of bidding over Norths one heart, but she chose instead to rebid her club suit.

West's natural opening was a low spade, since he had four cards in the unbid suit. Declarer played low from the board, and East took the trick with the king. East must now return another spade to knock out the ace, which is not only a stopper but is also an entry to the board.

Neither side vulnerable; South deals.

NORTH

C 5 2

EAST

H A 4
D 8 6 3
C J 7 6 4 3

SOUTH
S Q J 8 5
H J 10
D J 10
C A K Q 10 9

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 club	Pass	1 heart	Pass
2 clubs	Pass	2 diamonds	Pass
2 notrump	Pass	3 notrump	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: 4 of spades.

On the third trick declarer must decide which suit to attack first. She chose to attack the heart suit, although the diamond suit might have proved to have been a better choice. A low heart from the board is ducked by East, South winning the trick in her hand. South leads a second heart, which East is forced to take with the ace.

East now leads his last spade in the vain hope that he can set up a trick in his partner's hand. South wins the trick in her hand with the queen, and she is now faced with the problem that she has all the tricks she needs to make the contract but she has no way of entering the dummy in order to cash the hearts. South first laid down the ace of clubs, and then she led a diamond which was taken by West's king. West returned his last spade, declarer taking the trick in her hand. East discarded a diamond.

South can now force a lead to the board by playing the king of clubs and then leading a diamond. However, she decided instead to lead a diamond right away. West takes the trick with his ace, and he now has one club left with which to make an exit. He must lead his last club in spite of the fact that he is leading into declarer's strong suit, because any other lead will result in North taking the rest of the tricks. The club lead is the only hope.

Now comes a crucial play for East. "Third hand high" is one of the rules which the beginner at bridge first learns, but in this case East must ignore this rule. By the bidding South is marked with an original holding of five clubs, which means that she has nothing left but clubs. Also West cannot have any more clubs, since he could have started with no more than two if South had five. Thus East can figure out South's exact holding, and so his correct play is a low club, not the jack. Declarer must now lead out the rest of her clubs, and her contract is set when she loses the thirteenth trick to the jack of clubs.

'Flight Angels' Begin Busy Year With AFROTC

By NANCY MILAN

Harps and white feather wings belong in heaven with celestial angels, whereas a friendly smile and a pert blue uniform belong to the UNC Flight Angels. But don't be mislead, for the exterior polish is only a manifestation of the work for and with the AFROTC. With meetings and teas and drills, the 1957-58 season has been successfully launched.

The main project this year is the complete redecoration of the Arnold Air Society Lounge. Leather chairs and sofas, smart draperies, and a much-needed coffee bar will transform the drab room into a comfortable meeting place for cadets.

Efforts are not altogether concentrated on indoor activities, for the Angels have spent and will continue to spend a good bit of time outdoors preparing for Federal Inspection and the Armistice Day Parade. They will be marching this year!

The squardron will be strengthened by the addition of about eight new Angels this month. The Selection Tea for prospective Flight Angels is to be held this afternoon from 4:30 to 5:30 p. m. in the main lounge in Graham Memorial. Interviews for the girls nominated will follow, and new Angels will be chosen by the Selections Board.

The Angels have already been hostesses at two "Coffee Breaks" for cadets, and a tea honoring the Air Science officers and their wives. There will be more coffee breaks for cadets throughout the year.

The calendar of events for the squardon is quite full and nicely varied. But with all the odds and ends, teas, meetings, and drill practices, the Angels find somewhere, and extra minute to lend a listening ear and a helping hand to the cadets who sponsor them.

Hillsboro Girl Wins Corn Meal Event In Area

Patricia (Pat) Jones, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur N. Jones of Hillsboro, was declared the Western District winner in the new North Carolina Junior 4-H Enriched Corn Meal Program.

The Western District is composed of 19 counties. Pat won the District Honor by baking and sending six blue ribbon enriched corn meal muffins to the State Fair, along with a record of accomplishments. It has been found that no item in southern meal patterns appears as often as hot bread. For this reason this program attempts to develop in junior 4-H girls an appreciation for good quality cornbread, and to realize the importance of using an enriched product. It also teaches skills in food preparation and improved personal and family health through the development of better food habits. In addition to having the opportunity of thousands of people to see her blue ribbon muffins at the State Fair Pat will receive a $5.00 District Award. The State Award in this program is $50.00.

Physics Summer School Gets Praise Of NATO

A summer school in Physics at Les Houches, France operated under the direction of a UNC physicist, Dr. Cecile DeWitt, recently received praise by a NATO committee, according to the UNC Dept. of Physics.

Henry M. Jackson (D-Wash.) headed the committee set up to investigate the training of scientists and technologists in NATO countires. These have to meet the challenge of the high quality of Soviet instruction, the large number of trained technicians graduated every year and Russia's new invention, Sputnik.

The committee pointed out that the institute at Les Houches could serve as a model for other summer study institutes. Research scholars could be brought together to solve particular scientific problems.

The institute ates Houches was founded by French-born Dr. DeWitt and has been under her direction for the past seven years. She and her physicist husband, Dr. Bryce D. DeWitt, came to UNC in Nov. 1955, as first members of the Institute of Field Physics.

Operating within the UNC Dept. of Physics, the institute concentrates on the study of the relationship of gravitation to physics in general and the elementary particle problem in particular. Agnew H. Bahnson, Jr., of Winston-Salem is president of the institute.

Selections Board To Hear Council Hopefuls

Men interested in running for seats on Men's Honor Council and the Student Council will have an opportunity to meet with the Bi-Partisan Selection Board next Monday through Wednesday, George Ragsdale, chairman of Men's Honor Council, announced yesterday.

Ragsadle urged all student interested in running for these seats in the fall elections to be present at one of the Selection Board meetings. These meetings will be held Monday through Wednesday, 2-3:30 p. m., in the Men's Council room on the second floor of Graham Memoiral.

The seats open for election include: Men's Honor Council: three junior seats, two sophomore seats and one freshman seat; and Student Council: two junior seats and one sophomore seat.

Ragsdale said further, "I strongly urge any student to run if he is willing to sacrifice some time and to expend some effort in order to help further a system which is fundamental and vital to the life of all student government."

The Bi-Partisan Board is composed of the chairman of the Men's Honor Council and the Student Council, an additional member from each council, the chairmen of UP and SP and the chairmen of IDC.

The purpose of the Board is to endorse those candidates who, they feel, will uphold those things for which the Honor Code and the Campus Code stand. It is the selection board which tries to select those whom it feels will be best suited for office.

It is not necessary, however, for a candidate to be endorsed by the board in order to run for election.

Tar Heel Earthquakes Are Theme Of Article

Prof. Gerald R. MacCarthy of the Department of Geology and Geography at UNC has recently published "An Annotated List of North Carolina Earthquakes" in the Journal of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society.

A total of 81 earthquakes occurring from 1774 to 1956 are recorded in the article. "This paper," states Dr. MacCarthy, "is an attempt to list, insofar as possible, all quakes which have been felt in North Carolina whether or not they originated within the state."

In bringing his information up to date, Dr. MacCarthy points out that there have been three quakes felt in the western part of the state this year, two of which occurred in N. C. and one in Tennessee.

There have been about 16 quakes generally felt throughout North Carolina; the area in which most earthquakes occur is the state's western section. In Piedmont North Carolina seven earthquakes have been recorded, and in the eastern part of the state around six quakes have been felt.

Four earthquakes in the largest number of quakes felt within one year. In both 1884 and 1928, four earthquakes in N. C. were noted. There "Important" earthquakes listed by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey occurred on Feb. 21, 1916, felt over 200,000 square miles; Oct. 20, 1924, felt over 56,000 square miles; and Nov. 2, 1928, felt over 40,000 square miles.

Y Conference Date Altered

The time for the eighth annual YW-YMCA conference to be held at Camp Moon in Elon has been changed, according to Margaret Daughtridge, chairman of the YW-YMCA Conference Committee.

The new starting time will be 1 p. m. Oct. 26, instead of Oct. 25, Miss Daughtridge announced. She added that he meeting will close at 2:30 p. m., Oct. 27.

Students wishing to go must register at the Y before leaving, she said. The group will leave at the Y at 1 p. m., and arrive at the conference shortly afterwards, she announced.

Costs for the trip have been reduced from $6.75 to $3.75, according to Miss Daughtridge, and she invited as many people on campus as want to go.

The topic of the conference will be "Our Changing World".

Federal Judge Enjoins Hoffa, Others

WASHINGTON, Oct. 23 (AP)—Federal district Judge F. Dickinson Letts ruled today that teamsters union bosses conspired to rig the recent convention which elected James R. Hoffa president of the union.

Letts issued a preliminary injunction continuing a ban on Hoffa and the other newly elected union officers from taking office until there is a trial of the case on its merits.

The 82-year-old judge set Monday as the deadline for pre-trial motions and said he will fix the actual trial date as soon as possible thereafter.

In his order, however, Letts refused to put the giant union in the hands of court-appointed receivers and tie up its funds. This had been sought by the 13-man New York Teamsters group which took the case against Hoffa's election to court.

Martin O'Donoghue, the teamsters attorney, bitterly protested the judge's findings. He said he would appeal to the U. S. court of appeals tomorrow.

Judge Letts, O'Donoghue said has practically branded as illegal the entire union convention and everything it did—without hearing proof.

Even more trouble seemed in store for the teamsters tomorrow, when the AFL-CIO executive council meets to follow up its threat to suspend the 1 ½-million-member union on corruption charges. The teamsters is the biggest union in

The AFL-CIO council has labeled the 15-million-man AFL-CIO. both Hoffa and Dave Beck, retiring teamsters president, as corrupt and unfit to remain in the labor movement. Its findings followed testimony given the senate rackets investigating committee headed by Sen. McClellan (D-Ark). Beck and Hoffa say the teamsters want to stay in the AFL-CIO.

Letts said in his decision following two days of arguments:

Defendants arranged . . . or passively tolerated a common plan, effort or conspiracy to rig and to otherwise improperly conduct, upon a dictatorial basis, the said 17th convention" of teamsters which overwhelmingly elected Hoffa at Miami Oct. 4.

"Defendants, by their conduct of the 17th convention and by other misconduct, despite the warning implicit in the (pre-convention) order of the court of appeals (that only qualified delegates be seated) have demonstrated that they cannot be trusted to apply the constitution honestly and impartially during the pendancy of this action."

Letts said analysis of the convention proceedings and of minutes of the credentials committee shows an admission by the defendants that at least 478 of the 1,753 delegates were seated in violation of the union constitution.

This leaves Beck as teamsters president for the time being. Hoffa had indicated he had planned to take over right away. The other new officers' terms don't begin until Dec. 1.

Letts' new order also prohibits compensation to the new officials from the union treasury, bans any action by Hoffa, Beck or other top officials in violation of the union's 1952 constitution, bars the spending of any union money in violation of the constitution, and restrains top union officials from reprisals against the 13 rank and file New York plaintiffs in the case.

WILL FACE BABY DEACS—Bob Cambell a, 6-3 210 pound end for the Tar Babies is expected to see a lot of action tomorrow night when the Tar Babies meet the Wake Forest Freshmen at Greensboro.

WAKE AT GREENSBORO

Tar Babies Play Tomorrow Night

Carolina's freshmen footballers thus far holding a 1-1 season record, will go back into action against the Wake Forest freshmen next tomorrow night in Greensboro.

The Tar Babies opened their season with a 14-7 win over the Maryland yearlings. The Maryland fresh were rated as one of the top teams in the nations before that contest based on the recruiting job the Maryland coaches did. The Tar Baby camp was in high spirits after that victory and pointed for an undefeated season.

The following week the Tar Babies met the State Wolffets. The week between the two contests was a week of sadness for the Carolina frosh as "Carolina flu" crept into their locker room and began taking its toll. By game time five of the first stringers were not able to play. State took advantage of the situation and rolled over them to the tune of 33-19.

The Tar Babies did not have a game last week end and should be able to heal all their wounds completely by Friday. Their spirit is up again as they go after revenge for their misleading loss.

Over at Wake Forest, head varsity coach Paul Amen is hoping that this year's freshman squad will hang around and play ball for him during the next three years. Last season the Wake Forest mentor saw 80 per cent of his freshman starters drop out of school for one reason or another.

Wake dropped their first game this year 18-0 in hands of South Carolina. They came back to edge Clemson 26-20.

Top performing Deaclets this year have been halfback Winston Futch and quarterback Norman Snead. Futch, a Wilmington boy, weighs only 155 pounds but makes up for his lack of size in speed. He was an All-Stater and a star at the Shrine Bowl last year. Snead, a very sharp passer, is eagerly awaited by the varsity.

The Tar Babies feature what Coach Bud Carson calls one of the best running backs in the country in the person of halfback Sonny Folckomer. Folckomer, who comes from York, Pa., was an All-American in high school. He is the fastest man on the squad and his coaches have heaped much proaise on his running abilities.

Probably the most missed player in the State game was the squad's number one quarterback Russ Hollers. A Durham boy, Hollers is a convented halfback. "He took to quarterback like a duck to water," Carson stated. He can pass brilliantly and is going to make a great quarterback."

The game wil be played in the Greensboro Senior High Stadium under the sponsorship of the Greensboro Kiwanis Club which will turn their proceeds over to the Youth Charity Fund. Last year the two clubs met for the same reason with Wake Forest the owner of a 14-12 win.

First Tar Heel-Deac Game Was In 1888

On October 19,1888. Thursday of Fair Week in Raleigh, there was played what is generally credited as being the first intercollegiate football game in North Carolina.

It was between a "sophomore" aggregation of Carolina and Wake Forest. The Tar Heels had challenged and Wake Forest had accepted. Wake Forest won by 6-4.

It was the beginning of the Carolina-Wake Forest gridiron rivalry which will be renewed at Winston-Salem Saturday in a 2 p.m. game which will have the color and intense rivalry of all North Carolina-Wake games.

Since 1940 the two teams have swapped victories rather regularly with the Deacons springing the most upsets. One of them occurred when Charlie (Choo Choo) Justice played here and the Tar Heels were in the big road. That was in 1947 when the Tar Heels dropped only [illegible] game—the latter to Texas—and then finished as what many believe to be the finest football team ever to represent North Carolina.

Clyde (Peahead) Walker was coaching the Deacons then and he had directed his charges to other upset wins over the Tar Heels previously. Carl Snavely was coaching the Tar Heels.

The teams have new coaches now, Jim Tatum at Carolina and Paul Amen at Wake Forest, and are in the rebuilding process now after some lean years.

The Deacons are hungry after a luckless start of four losses against strong foes. The Tar Heels have been beaten by two ACC teams, N. C. State and Maryland, but collected upset triumphs over Clemson, Navy and Miami.

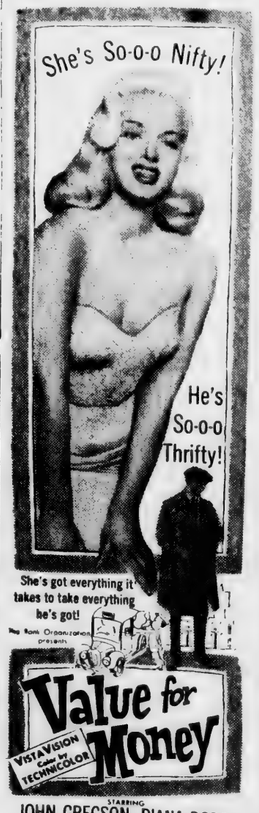
Terp Lineman Soph Of Week In Conference

RALEIGH, Oct. 23 (AP) — The defensive play of Maryland guard Rodney Breedlove in the Terrapins 21-7 win over Carolina has been singled out by the Associated Press today in naming hom the Atlantic Coast Conference Sophomore of the Week.

The 215 pounder, hailing from Cumberland, Md., played a key part in stopping the Tar Heel offense as he made many tackles as linebacker on defense.



His coach, Tommy Mont, praised Bredlove for his play and said that in his two years at Maryland no Terp lineman had made more out right or solo tackles in a single game.

Breedlove broke through to toss quarterback Dave Reed for a loss in the second period to stop a Carolina threat. He repeated this performance again in the third period and on both occasions Maryland took possession of the ball.

On the offense, Breedlove made several key blocks, one of them on Ted Kershner's 81-yard scoring sprint.

Also recognized among sophomores last week was Bunny Bell of Rocky Mount, Duke halfback, who carried the ball 14 times for a total of 96 yards against Wake Forest in the Blue Devil's 34-7 win.

UNC-Wake Affair Could Be Tight

The pet peeve of pigskin prognosticators: the rivalry between Wake Forest and Carolina football teams whose exploits on the gridiron have drowned the "experts" in their tears and made liars out of statistics.

More specifically, anything can happen when the teams clash as they do Saturday at Bowman Gray Stadium in Winston-Salem in the 51st meeting since the first visit of the Tar Heels since the Baptists made the Twin City their home.

Duke, the ACC dynamo, last week generated enough volts to jolt the Demon Deacons 34-7 in their fourth loss in succession.

The Tar Heels at the same time recived rude treatment at Maryland. The underdog Terps, stimulated after whiping Wake Forest 28-0 the week before and by having Queen Elizabeth II watching from the side-lines, upset any improvised Orange Bowl cart the Tar Heels might have been pushing, 21-7.

Since the hopes of the Deacons have blackened like photo paper exposed to light week by week, they have been described as the team "that's going to rise up one of these days."

That's the warning the favored Tar Heels are heeding in preparations for the contest.

Halfback Daley Goff, who broke into the scoring column for the first time in his college career Saturday, continues to lead the Tar Heel rushing with an average of 4.1 yards per carry, gaining 136 yards in 33 tries. Fullback Ed Lipski is second with 3.7 and Jim Schuler is third with 3.0 yards average.

Halfback Don Coker is the top punter. The big sophomore, who was third in the nation with a 43.6 average last week, punted eight times at Maryland, three times into a brisk north wind which clipped his average to 40.3.

Quarterback Dave Reed, who owns a 58.3 average on three punts, also has thrown 17 passes, completed five for 54 yards.

Proponents Of Bill Are Upset

In a joint statement submitted to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday the two student government leaders expressed the belief that those IDC members who defeated the measure were "laboring under misconceptions" and had "missed the point (of the proposed plan) altogether."

The measure, which called for a revamping of the entire dormitory advisory system, was defeated Wednesday night by a vote of 18-13.

Speaking in opposition to the bill at the Wednesday night session, IDC Representative Clarence Simpson told the group that "if this bill is passed, it will mean that each dorm resident will be taken by the hand and led toward his degree."

Answering this and other charges yesterday, Evans and Hallford termend the defeated plan "probably the most important items to come before the Council in three years."

"Those who consider it a slap in the face for the IDC," they said, "have missed the point altogether."

They added they are hopeful that it will be possible to reopen the plan for further consideration.

Reds Near Turkey

MOSCOW, Oct. 24—(AP)—Soviet army and navy units were reported maneuvering today on the approaches to Turkey. One report said ground forces are training in the use of atomic weapons.

Bing's Romance Ends In Wedding

LAS VEGAS, Nev., Oct. 24—(AP)—Widower Bing Crosby married a bright, brown-eyed beauty from Texas named Kathryn Grant today in a nuptial mass culminating a romance that began four years ago on a movie lot.

"Mrs. Crosby, how about that!" the crooner grinned as they walked out of St. Ann's Catholic Church.

The 45-minute ceremony, during which both received communion, was performed by Msgr. John J. Ryan. Crosby, 53, wore a blue pinstripe single-breasted suit with white shirt and blue tie. His actress bride, 23, was dressed in a white suit with purple orchid and a white lace mantilla she bought in Spain.

The wedding took even their friends and family by surprise, but Bing seemed to wonder what all the fuss was about.

"We've been going together for four years," he told The Associated Press during a post-wedding breakfast at the Sands Hotel.

But wasn't the romance broken off a year ago?

"Ostensibly it was, but that was only so we could sit back and think things over," he replied. "I've been sold on the idea for a long time. It was a matter of selling Kathy on it. We decided to go ahead in the past week."

Bing didn't let any of his family except his mother in on his plans. He and Kathy came to Las Vegas yesterday with his longtime friend, Leo Lynn, and her friend, Mrs. Guilbert Banks. They attended the wedding couple. Bing told his plans to Msgr. Ryan, requesting that no reporters be present during the ceremony.

"He was rather a detective," the priest smiled to newsmen. "He fooled all you people."

Bing and Kathy showed up at the marriage license bureau in the courthouse shortly before 9 a.m. and signed the application in their legal names—Harry Lillis Crosby and Olive K. Grandstaff. Then they hurried to St. Ann's, a small church on the outskirts of Las Vegas. After the wedding, Bing gave the two delighted altar boys his autograph, staining his hands with ink as he did.

Purpose Given Of Elections Board At UNC

In view of the coming fall elections November 12, Elections Board Chairman Art Sobel outlined the functions of his board yesterday.

This 15-member committee is currently meeting at least once a week to map out plans for the election.

The board must see to it that all nominations are in on time and the candidates meet scholastic requirements.

An important function of the board is to meet with all the candidates for offices to make sure they know the election regulations

The Board is also responsible for handling disputed elections and ballots.

Under the Elections Law of February, 1957, the board is authorized to conduct the polls and run-offs if necessary.

The Elections Law establishes the nominating procedure, the offices to be elected in the fall and spring elections, the polling districts and any penalties.

Sixty offices will be up for election November 12. These include 32 legislature seats, four juniors on the Women's Honor Council, two juniors and one sohomore on the Student Council, three juniors, two sophomores and one freshman on the Men's Honor Council; and five class officers for the freshman, sophomore and junior classes.

The Elections Board will meet with all candidates for these offices at a compulsory session November 4 at 8 p. m. in Gerrard Hall. At this time, all elections rules will be explained.

DR. LEFLER SPEAKS

Dr. Hugh T. Lefler, Kenan professor of history at UNC, spoke on "North Carolina, Past and Present" at a Wednesday meeting of the Kiwanis Club of Southern Pines.

Among Dr. Lefler's many writings are "Growth of North Carolina," "North Carolina: History of a Southern State," and "History of North Carolina," which was published in two volumes last year.

Mid-East Mediation Hope Wans

Declarations in Damascus and statements by Syrian representatives in the U.N. made clear that mediation by King Saud of Saudi Arabia is not in the cards at present.

Syria pressed instead a demand that the assembly appoint a U.N. inquiry commission as quickly as possible to investigate the situation on the Syrian-Turkish border.

The asembly, which has been in recess since Wednesday pending possible mediation efforts, is set to reconvene tomorrow afternoon.

Foreign Minister Salah Bitar and Ambassador Farid Zeineddine of Syria met for an hour with U.N. secretary general Dag Hammarskjold on the Middle East.

There was talk that Hammarskjold might be asked to make a personal visit to the trouble area. An Arab source said this possiblity was discussed by the Syrians with Hammarskjold.

But Bitar said afterward he did not extend any invitation to Hammarskjold to visit in Syria, and Zeineddine added that he did not think a visit would be useful "in the present circumstances."

Akram Hourani, speaker of Syria's Parliament and a member of Bitar's Arab Socialist Resurrection Party, had suggested in Damascus on Tuesday that a Hammarskjold visit might be helpful.

As for medation, Bitar declared "there is none."

Zeineddine said Syria is pushing its demand for the assembly to name an inquiry commission which should visit the Turkish-Syrian border and report back to the U.N. as quickly as possible.

Students Here Tour Observer

Approximately seventeen students and faculty members from the UNC school of journalism visited the Charlotte Observer Tuesday as Observer guests.

The visit was part of an annual program initiated by the Charlotte Observer last spring and includes, in addition to UNC, Davidson College, near Charlotte, and the University of South Carolina, located in Columbia.

The purpose of the program is to interest students in working for the Observer; several graduates of this university are already in positions on that newspaper.

A steak dinner for all guests and many Observer staffers was given at the Charlotte Press Club, at which deans of the respective universities were introduced. Dean Norval Neil Luxon of the UNC Dept. of Journalism was commended for the high caliber students graduating from his school.

The highlight of the visit was a tour through the Observer press rooms and observation of the press run.

Legislature Will Examine Papers And Book-Exchange

Carolina Symposium Gets Money

PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature last night passed and added one amendment to Representative Tom Long's (SP) bill to establish "a committee to study policies surrounding the office of editor" of other student newspapers.

Representative Al Goldsmith (UP) proposed the amendment which said, "This (bill) is not to be interpreted as being directed at the present editor of The Daily Tar Heel."

The amendment was passed by a vote of 24-11. The bill was passed by a majority voice vote.

The legislature acted favorably on a resolution requesting an examination of the reasons for the "High prices charged students by the UNC Book Exchange" and a bill granting the Carolina Symposium $1,000.

Frank Crowther spoke to the Legislature concerning the investigation of the newspapers. He warned the legislators that they "should all keep in mind that Luxon wants this paper."

He stated that if a case of irresponsible journalism should arise the School of Journalism (of which Luxon is dean) might get the paper.

Crowther favored the investigations board which approves editorial candidates should be improved and be made more efficient.

Goldsmith suggested that the legislature would show proper student initiative by passing the bill and, therefore retain the paper.

After Goldsmith proposed his amendment to the bill, Long said that the bill "is not a curb to the freedom of the press," and was not directed against Editor Bass.

Long said the bill had been drawn up by Sonny Evans and had been given to him around Sept. 24. He pointed out that the legislature gave the newspaper around $23,000 a year.

He said the bill can only "be interpreted as a forward move." Respresentative Pat Adams (SP) said he did not feel that the bill was far-reaching enough. He along with Representative Erwin Fuller wanted to change the wording in order to have a more general investigation of the paper.

Long countered by saying the legislature only controlled the process of electing the editor and would be going out of their sphere to make a general investigation.

There was little discussion on the bill to investigate the Book Exchange. Long said, "the student government must keep plugging," and pointed out something had been accomplished each year

Goldsmith spoke first on the bill for money for the Carolina Symposium. He said the appropriation worked out to only about 14 cents per student.

Representative Bob Browning (SP) was against "taxing" the students. It was pointed out that the money to be used is already in the hands of the legislature as surplus and the bill would not cost the student anything.

Adam's bill to establish a committee to study Lenoir Hall was held by the Ways and Means Committee for further study. Ed Levy (UP) introduced a bill for the legislature to pay a $452.81 debt of the Tarnation.

Al Walters introduced a resolution for the Grounds and Buildings Committee to buy and place trash receptacles "in appropriate places in the quadrangles."

How To Make 'Meaningful' Math Is Topic

Ways of making mathematics more meaningful to high school students will receive close study Friday and Saturday from North Carolina teachers, principals and superintendents who will meet on the UNC campus.

Two nationally prominent leaders in the move to modernize high school math courses will give the main talks at the conference. The first session will open at 3 p.m. Friday in Phillips Hall.

Dr. J. W. Lasley Jr., acting chairman of the UNC Mathematics Department will welcome the educators. A talk on modernization of high school algebra courses will be given by Dean Albert E. Meder Jr., on leave from Rutgers University and executive director of the national Commission on Mathematics.

Dean Meder will speak again Friday night at 7:30 p.m. on bringing geometry up to date. This talk will be held in 106 Phillips Hall. Discussion will follow each of Dean Meder's talks, led at the afternoon session by Prof. Anne L. Lewis of Woman's College and at night by Dr. Edward A. Cameron, UNC professor of mathematics.

The second main speaker, Max Beberman of the University of Illinois, will talk at 9 a.m. Saturday in Carroll Hall. Beberman will explain a project which he directs in the Illinois schools, aimed at improving secondary school mathematics.

Dance Will Highlight Big Nov. Weekend

A dance, co-sponsored by GMAB and the University Club, will highlight UNC's 1957-58 homecoming weekend Nov. 1, 2 and 3. The homecoming queen will be crowned at this dance .

Each men's dorm and each fraternity has been asked to sponsor a coed candidate for queen. These candidates will appear before a panel of judges at a tea which will be held next week.

The judges will decide on the queen's court of 15 women at the tea, but they will not disclose their decision until the homecoming weekend.

All candidates will be presented to the student body in a car parade preceding the pep rally on Friday night.

After the rally, a "sock hop" will be held in Woollen Gym, at which time the court members will be announced.

At half-time of the UNC-Tennessee game on Saturday, homecoming display winners will be announced and the queen will be presented. Other events will be announced later.

There will be a reception, following the game, in front of Graham Memorial, where contest winners will be announced and prizes will be awarded. Faculty, students and alumni have been invited.

GMAB and the University Club hope that all students will cooperate in their efforts to make homecoming a highlight in Carolina Life.

UNC Librarian Is Attending Workshop

Dr. Jerrold Orne, UNC librarian, has been in Alabama this week conducting a workshop for military librarians at the Air University, Maxwell Air Force Base.

Some 45 librarians from the major academic military libraries of this country and Canada are attending the workshop, at which Dr. Orne will record the proceedings and prepare them for publication.

From 1951 until August 1, 1957, when he joined the UNC faculty, Dr. Orne was attached to the Air University as director of libraries. Prior to his Air Force work he was connected with the U. S. Department of Commerce, the Library of Congress, and Washington University.

Students Still Decline Shots

University Physician Edward M. Hedgepeth again today expressed a growing concern over a lack of student response to the Asian flu vaccine at the Infirmary.

Meanwhile the number of students reporting to the infirmary with colds and influenza still continued to decline on the UNC campus for the eighth day, according to Dr. Hedgepeth.

He urged UNC students to take advantage of the flu shots to be offered tonght, between the hours of 7:30 and 9:30.

"Taking the shots now may avert a major epidemic later," he said.

Some 1500 doses of the flu vaccine were received on the campus Wednesday morning, and will be dispensed free for the asking.

Lebanese Student Gets $100 Stipend

Miss Gladys Salibi, a citizen of Lebanon, was awarded the Carrie Heath Schwenning scholarship this week.

This scholarship of $100 is presented annually by the Scholarship Committee of the University to a graduate woman student here.

Miss Salibi, who has taught in a Lebanon school, is studying political science and international relations here.

World In Brief

Benson Next

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24—(AP)—Will Secretary of Agriculture Benson be the fourth member of the Eisenhower cabinet to leave office in 1957?

This question was being asked in government and farm circles today in the wake of Atty. Gen. Brownell's resignation and Benson's departure Tuesday on a round-the-world trip to check up on U.S. farm surplus disposal operations abroad.

Even before these two events, reports were circulating—particularly in the agriculture department—that Benson will be moved from his cabinet post to another job.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Last Ditch Effort

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24—(AP)—The teamsters union, in a last ditch effort to forestall threatened AFL-CIO ouster, today proposed it be given a year's time to institute reforms.

Teamsters bosses led by the union's president elect, James R. Hoffa, presented the plea to the AFL-CIO executive council.

The federation leaders were gathered for a showdown vote on whether to suspend the teamsters from AFL-CIO ranks on corruption charges which have involved Hoffa and other teamsters chiefs.

While seeking a year's delay against any punishment, and promising to institute reforms, the teamsters' statement pledged nothing specific in what the union might be willing to do.

TEAMSTERS OUSTED

The AFL-CIO Executive Council suspended the 1,400,000 member teamsters union last night in Washington for failure to oust James R. Hoffa and other officials accused of corruption, according to a report received from the Durham Morning Herald. The vote was 25-4 in favor of the ouster.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, announced that he would recommend the expulsion of the teamsters at the AFL-CIO convention to be held in Atlantic City, N. J., in December. He said that unless Hoffa was ousted the teamsters could not remain in the union.

Hoffa and other executives of the teamsters union walked out of the executive meeting, shortly before the announcement of suspension was made.

Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Oct. 24—(AP)—Dr. Daniel Bovet, an Italian scientist who helped ease the lot of allergy sufferers with antihistamines and of surgical patients with a dealy poison, was awarded the 1957 Nobel Prize for medicine today. He arose from a sickbed to say how happy he was.

AFTER ICBM, SPUTNIK

U.S. Answers Reds With 'Rain' Of Missiles

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24—(AP)—The United States is hurling aloft a virtual fusillade of mighty missiles and rockets, ranging from a record-shattering shoot into outer space to spectacular destruction by a robot weapon of a target plane a hundred miles away and 60,000 feet high.

In obvious challenge to Russia's claims of leadership in the race of scientists and weaponeers, this country had chalked up by tonight these new achievements:

1. The launching of one, and possibly two research rockets by the Air Force from balloons. One of these seems to have swooshed straight up to not less than 1,000 miles. This height dwarfs the previous farthest-out record, set by Russia when she put her Sputnik satellite into orbit at 560 miles.

The Air Force emphasized that the rocket shoots in its "Operation Far Side," made from balloons floating 100,000 feet over Eniwetok Atoll in the Pacifc, were not intended to put an object into orbit but merely to make scientific soundings of the vast ocean of space—straight up.

2. The firing of an Air Force BOMARC long range anti-aircraft guided missile yesterday from the Cape Canaveral, Fla., missile test center which ferreted out, collided with an knocked down (without benefit of warhead) a drone bomber a hundred miles out over the Atlantic ocean.

Along with these rocket and weapon shoots came the Navy's successful test yesterday of the first stage of the three-series rocket power intended for sending up an American satellite. The single engine, working against the deadweght of the 22,600 pounds of the satellite launching device, thrust the vehicle to an altitude of 109 miles at a peak speed of 4,250 miles an hour.

Under the goading of Soviet success in the missile and satellite field, the United States has (A) stepped up the tempo of its scientific and weapons tests and (B) eased some of its policy of high secrey.

Until last Tuesday night the Pentagon had pursued an inflexible policy of admitting practically nothing about its missile development progress — confirming only when asked that "another in the continuing series of missile tests in Florida has been conducted."

But events put this policy under pressure. There were Rusia's Sputnik mocking from the sky and Soviet claims of successfully testing an Intercontinental Ballistic Missile (ICBM) dinning from Moscow.

Evans' Plan Accomplished Much-Needed Purpose...

Student Body President Sonny Evans' proposal to establish a more functional adviser system among men's dormitories has at least accomplished a purpose.

Evans' proposal to pay dormitory advisers $1,000 per year in exchange for 15-20 hours counseling a week was defeated by the Interdormitory Council, 18-13.

But the IDC, according to President Tom Walters, is now more acutely aware of the noise and seeming impersonality prevalent in men's dormitories.

According to Walters:

"We have appointed a committee to look into dorm conditions, and I am confident we can handle the situation."

President Evans' "tradition of study" proposal was no panacea — and it contained some hidden dangers, such as a semi-weakening of the Interdormitory Court's authority — but it did hit at some important problems among dormitory residents:

(1) There is entirely too much noise in University residences.

(2) There is too little esprit de corps among dormitory residents, a weakness that becomes increasingly evident in the sagging intramurals program and in other areas.

It is unquestionable that the governing of dormitories should be directly in the hands of the Interdormitory Council and its judicial body, the ID Court.

And if President Evans' plan has made the council more acutely aware of its responsibility, then it has accomplished a purpose.

The hidden danger in the Evans Plan was this:

(1) The University adviser in men's dormitories might conceivably become a University-paid policeman.

(2) The IDC might be weakened and responsibilities might be cast upon the adviser's shoulders which should be handled by a student government organization.

But Evans' Plan did hit at the problem and demonstrated an awareness of dormitory problems which other presidents have completely neglected.

The IDC should, as President Walters said it would, throughly investigate the dormitory problems of excessive noise and impersonality which is anathetical to esprit de corps and provencial pride.

And there should be a report forthcoming as to results of Walters' committee immediately.

This problem should not be cast aside simply bcause the Evans' Plan was defeated.

The IDC should, and will, we feel, regulate dormitory life more effectively and efficiently.

Evans has accomplished a purpose.

Skirts May Rest And Too The Chest: Dior's Dead

Perhaps women's skirts will become more stable now.

French Designer Christian Dior —who let 'em down in 1947, lifted 'em in 1953, and deflated bosoms in 1954 — succumbed at Montecatini, Italy, yesterday.

Dior, with his skirt and bust manipulation, was one of the most cussed and discussed figures in the women's fashion world. And his creations were renowned around the world.

Admittedly, he was a genius. But many wondered at his hiding of nature's gracious endowments. And many others envied the seeming fascination in which women held him — at the spell which he wove over the fashion world.

At any rate, Dior is dead. But the effect of his creativity will live long after his death.

Dior is dead.
It may be said,
Busts May Rest,
Upon The Chest,
At Places Best.
Amen.

Cops & Catch & Humanity

A scene witnessed in front of Chapel Hill High School yesterday demonstrates that cops are human too.

Men too often cast disparaging remarks at our police and patrol forces without realizing that it's all a day's work — and a very essential day's work.

But then too, there are too few cops who remain warmly human after the shiny badge and blue suit are worn.

Courtesy and understanding should be requisites for cops, just as they are for other human beings.

Efficiency & Auto-Doom

It seems ironic to see a small headline on a few front pages:

"Army Fires Its Vanguard In Successful Test Flight."

And the United States' satellite hopes seem all the more ironic.

And Russia thumbs its nose . . .

The United States should save face with a manned intrplanetary space station.

And then it should thumb its nose . . .

What's that about a democracy being less efficient but a dictatorship being self-annihilating???

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Ship Of State Is Sinking & Ike Bubbles

Curtis Gans

Something is rotten in the state of the union.

It is rotten because the U. S. has an exceedingly small man in the White House, and because the U. S. press is selecting, in most cases, the news that will give a falsely optimistic view of the U.S. in its conflict with Russia. Of these, the first is by far more important since it will take three more years before the people of the United Sttaes can constitutionally oust this man from office, while there are still some voices of pessimism in newspapers to try to shock Americans out of their complacency.

They say it is the mark of a "big" man to admit his mistakes and learn from them by proceeding on a new track. The position of the U. S. in the world today after Russia's satellite launching demands this in order to shock the American people out of their complacency and lethargy, and make them want to spend more money and demand more time to irradicate the U. S. position as second-best in the world today.

But Mr. Eisenhower is anything but a big man. He leans comfortably back on his self-righteousness, and utters the words of comfort to an American people whose entire livelihood is threatened by the same Mr. Eisenhower's inactions during the past five years. Mr. Eisenhower, according to Newsweek, will go further and try to politically confront his accusers by counter-accusations directed at Stuart Symington, who as former Air Force Secretary allotted millions on now obsolete B-36

The analogy between Mr. Symington's zeal for national security and Mr. Eisenhower's lack of concern over the fate of America, is quite vague. But what is not vague is the picture of the man who will resort to counter accusations, rationalizations ,and bullheadedness to show to the world, not that he is right, but more probably that he is exceedingly small in scope. The picture sounds like McCarthy; it is Eisenhower.

It is obvious that changes are taking place, for the conference on pooling knowledge with Britain's Harold MacMillan and the recent talks with U. S. scientists show that some strides are being taken. However, when Eisenhower arbitrarily puts a cap on the budget at $70 billion, one wonders just how much can be done without neglecting other areas of U. S. economy and defense that perhaps, if war should come in the near future, would be the most necessary.

In a recent news article, it was announced that the U. S. has successfully developed an atomic depth charge to combat the growing menace of Soviet submarines numbering now over 450. What the article failed to state is that the U. S. is lagging way behind the Russians in submarine production, and what the Russians have failed to tell is that they may have developed a method of refueling planes via submarine, an idea that the U. S. has thought of and subsequently dropped.

Moreover, in the news in prominent place is the successful firing of the first stage of the Vanguard rocket which could carry the U. S. satellite aloft, but what receives less prominent place is the fact that this is only the first stage of the rocket, and that stages two and three and their connections with themselves and stage one, have kinks in them that have not been successfully worked out.

Sublimated in news value also is the failure of the proposed moon rocket shot from a baloon and the multiple failures of the U. S. Intercontinental and Intermediate Range Ballistics Missiles. Yet, in the newspapers come the confident note that "soon" the U. S. and Soviet missiles may cross each other. Don't hold your breath.

It is time now for the President and the press to join together and shock the American people in to realizing the precarious nature of their position, so they may demand the action that seems to be lacking in the leaders of the United States and cannot come from Senate investigation, whose access to classified information in which the whole mishandling of the defense expenditure is lodged is exceedingly limited.

Now, more than ever is the time for honesty.

The Census Bureau gives the nation's present population as 171,790,000. There are times when it seems as if most of them are trying to park their cars in Chapel Hill.

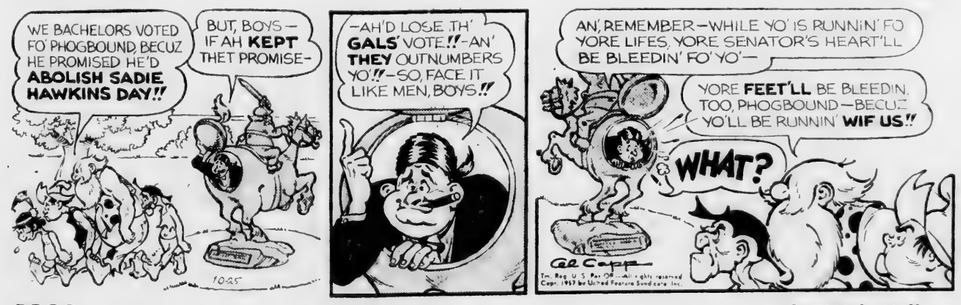
READERS' REPOSITORY:

Reader Blasts Lark's Tar Heel Review . . .

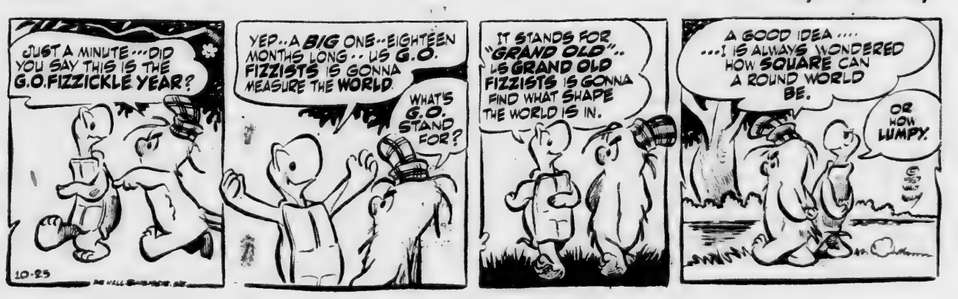
Editor:

I eagerly awaited your drama critic's comments on 'The Lark.' Gad! What a disappointment! Is he perhaps a friend of or related to the members of the cast? Peter Sinclair—"sufficiently convincing", Ben Clymer — "great depth and sympathy", Taylor Williams—"terrifying", Al Gordon — "admirably convincing", John Sneden—"magnificent", Amanda Meiggs—"near perfect", etc. Even the persons mentioned above must feel disappointment after reading such criticism. And why did the comments come after the play had completed its run? It seems the cast as well as interested audience members would like to read the critic's opinions the day after opening night.



Peter Sinclair would have been just as convincing had he held the script in his hand while he performed his memorized gestures. He would have been less noticeable had he remained still during actor's speeches. Ben Clymer did achieve depth and sympathy. Taylor Williams' one-demensional interpretation resulted in an effort altogether unlike "terrifying". Al Gordon bellowed his way through the role of La Hire. John Sneden after a too forceful begining, became one of the more convincing characters in the play. Amanda Meiggs presented a valid and an that housed and accommodated entertaining interpretation, but the part was not written "for her". One would expect to suffer with Joan, to feel great compassion for the virgin girl who accomplished the impossible. Miss Meiggs made it enjoyable, the happy moments as well as the moments of suffering and indecision. Amanda managed to get the "Lark" off the ground, but she never made it soar.

"Tommy Rezzuto's simple platform set was effective and functional . . . ". This is the understatement of any year. Tommy Rezzuto's set was a work of art perfectly the actors that lived in it for a few hours each night. Whether Irene Rains was responsible for Joan's costume being resplendent is not known, but an added effect of realism could have been possible had the costume looked as if it had survived bloody battles and dirty dungeons. Other than this fact, Irene Rains produced attire that was suited in every respect to the individual characters. The make-up was fair, but failed to add years to some of the younger men who played older parts. Lewis Goldstein had the switch-board touch of a professional in providing lighting to complete the Rezzuto set.



In looking back ,the name of Ken Callender has been omitted. He provoked much laughter and was "exuberant". A few of his lines were lost due to his assumed alcoholic mumbling and his stage business became excessive at times, but laughs he was supposed to get and laughs he got.

ODES ON MUSIC:

Way Out West Is Way Out Front...

Grayson Mills

It was suggested by a reader recently that I divulge my musical preferences.

Actually, it matters very little what my tastes may be, for a music column that reaches so many readers with such a huge variety of tastes must present something for all to verify its existence.

But since I do have preferences, and since the reader has asked for them, it is my duty to present them.

I have one requisite, the same as my inquirer, and that is that music be in good taste. Jazz is by far my favorite form. I am of the opinion that there are certain artists in every field who perform in good taste.

Fats Domino, Red Prysock, and the Drifters of R & B perform with taste, for instance Johnny Cash and Chet Atkins of that cuss word "Western Music" are also my favorites, as are singers Billy Ecstein, Frankie Laine, and Eydie Gormey. And always personally inspiring are the French National Symphony and Germany's number one marching band Oskar Hackenberger.

While dixieland is my favorite form of jazz expression, I'm fond of, and hold much respect for modern jazz and its various off-springs.

Shorty Rogers Courts the Count, Ellington Uptown, and Shelley Manne's My Fair Lady are three albums in my personal collection I'd sooner throw Jean Simmons over than to surrender. And every time Nash Maez breaks in for his highly exciting tenor solo on Vodoo Suite, cold chills run up my spine (somebody pours ice water down his back. I knew you'd say that).

As this same reader felt, tunes like "Wake Up Little Suzie" are primieval, simple ditties. But this particular one is clever worded so that it very ably satirizes the atrocities that take place weekly in our nation's passion pits, the drive-in theatre.

Though Searchin' by The Coasters isn't the great harmony and technique that are symbolic of such groups as The Four Freshman, it was great because of the clever story involved, about a guy searching for his gal, who is going to employ methods even sharper than the Royal Mounted, Bulldog Drummond, and Sherlock Holmes put together.

Taste comes in many forms, and it means something different to everyone. To say that one person's tastes are bad because he likes hillbilly is wrong. I personally can't stand hillbilly, yet it is none of my business if someone else does. And as for signs of intellectuality being involved with one form or another, I've known scholars who liked everything from Thelonious Monk to Lefty Frizzel. Frizzel is a good hillbilly singer; is his fan of poor taste because he likes Lefty? I think not.

Yardley, a person with six years of avid interest in jazz ranging from Jelly Roll to Miles Davis, won Downbeat's "My Favorite Jazz Record" contest, which is now a regular feature of the musician's bible.

He won 10 dollars for a sensitively written piece on the Errol of Garner's all-time great album, "Concert By the Sea."

"As I listen to this record," wrote Yardley, "I am sure that it will live long after many more celebrated discs have grown dusty on the record shelves."

THE HILLTOP:

Classic Lenoir & Flaming Leaves

Nancy Hill

Lenoir Hall may not be a stronghold of Modern Living where scrambled eggs are concerned, but it definitely has its redemming virtues.

Low prices are one.

Student help is another.

Four ounces of vegetables to the reputed three served up in local restaurants is still another.

Probably not too many people are aware of this aspect of life in Lenoir, but we discovered it the other day. If you listen carefully during lunch hours, over the clatter of dishes and babble of voices you may hear music — classical music

Tuesday, for example, from approximately 1 to 1:30, those who were straining their ears heard themes from "Aida," "The Waltz of the Flowers," and some Rimsky-Korsakoff.

It only remains for the powers that be in Lenoir to sound-proof the china and silverware.

Chapel Hill has a mood for every season. Its best expression is in the flowering trees and vines of the Arboretum in spring, in the green of summer grass, and in the leaves this time of year.

Fall is football weather, hiking weather—thinking weather. It affects people with a kind of fall fever, that, though comparatively neglected as seasonal fevers go, is just as contagious as the spring fever germ.

The effect of flaming leaves is stimulating, as opposed to the more sedative symptoms associated with spring fever. Somehow the really important things seem to happen in the fall.

Alpha Lambda Chapter Hears Advertising Man

John Neal, partner in the Hegge, Middleton, and Neal Advertising agency in Greensboro, and the 1956 recepitant of the Outstanding Young Business Man's Award, spoke to the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma business fraternity at a dinner meeting Tuesday evening.

The meeting was held at the Little Acorn Restaurant in Durham and a smorgasbord style dinner was served.

Neal spoke to the group on three sections of advertising: "What is Advertising?" "Jobs and Opportunities in Advertising for college graduates," and How Advertising fits into North Carolina." He stated that advertising is a part of the distribution system of our economy and that "it is easy to produce something, but it must be sold; and to sell it, advertising plays a large role."

"There are four ways or methods of selling: (1 Direct selling; (2) Display; (3) Direct mail and (4) Advertising through advertising agencies, and that advertising, contrary to popular belief, is the least expensive way," he said.

He continued: "Advertising brings on mass distribution which in most cases reduces the retail price of the merchandise to the consumer. Advertising on a national basis builds assurance of quality products for the American public."

Neal said there is a dire need in advertising for good personnel, especially with degrees from such schools as UNC. A student entering the field of advertisng will have an opportunity to meet many people through a wide variety of activities.

Neal added that such a job would never become boring and that there are openings in such advertising areas as research, media selection, copywriting, art and layout. T. V. and radio production and in working directly with accounts.

Neal is very active in the Junior Chamber of Commerce and was a member of Governor Hodge's Small Industries Committee.

Don Nance, Professional Chairman of the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, was instrumental in obtaining Neal as speaker for the evening. Al Alphin served as Master of Ceremonies for the event.

Government Of Sweden Falls After 6 Years

STOCKHOLM, Sweden, Oct. 24—(AP)—The Swedish government, a coalition of socialists and agrarians, collapsed today in a clash over social, welfare and economic policy. It had ruled for six years.

At the same time the Swedish military headed by Gen. Mils Swedlund, the commander in chief, demanded that the armed forces be provided with costly modern weapons such as atomic bombs and missiles for the national defense.

Although not outwardly connected, the two things were related in a sharpening domestic crisis.

The issue has boiled down to this: higher prices for food obtained by the agrarians to please the farmers, and higher taxes exacted by the socialists to pay for their social program have set the man-in-the street to grumbling.

The Swedish army, navy and air force have concluded that scientific advances in warfare have gone beyond their present equipment. In effect, they demanded that the nation make up its mind between pensions and modern weapons, saying: give us atomic weapons and guided missiles or prepare to defend stockholm alone.

The four agrarians in the cabinet of Socialist Premier Tage Erlander quit, leaving the socialists with a minority in the 231-member lower chamber of parliament. The socialists have a majority in the senate. It is expected that King Gustaf Adolf will ask the socialists to try to form a new government. The socialists have been in power since 1932.

Gen. Swedlund's report to the government on defense needs struck a sharp chord. Officially neutral in the power struggle between East and West, Sweden actually is on the side of the West if forced to take a stand. The armed forces have been trained for years to point toward Russia as the traditional enemy.

Sweden's air force of upwards of 1,500 jet fighters is one of the best single air arms in non-Communist Europe. Its navy in the Baltic is next to the Russian in strength.

Abundance

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24—(AP)—President Eisenhower told eminent scientists and diplomats today that "The world now has a choice between the technology of abundance and the technology of destruction."

Speaking at presentation of the first "atoms for peace" award to Prof. Niels Bohr, Eisenhower said the choice lies between applying power to constructive purposes or to "war and desolation." He said there is no question about what the people of the world prefer.

The United States, Eisenhower said, has emphasized development of the atom for peaceful purposes. And he called Bohr, a distinguished Danish physicist, a great human being who exemplifies a spirit that the world needs in pursuing development of the atom for peaceful purposes.

Pool Resources

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24—(AP)—President Eisenhower and Prime Minister MacMillan called on their top aides today to begin immediate moves to pool British-American atomic and rocket resources for "greater service to the free world."

The two western leaders took this step at the White House at the midway point in their three-day strategy conference on how to counter Russia's new diplomatic-scientific offensive.

Lifting slightly the tight secrecy lid imposed since the talks started yesterday, the White House said the two government heads and their foreign affairs chiefs — Secretary of State Dulles and Foreign Secretary Llyod—were in full agreement on finding ways to harness their nations' resources to meet the Soviet challenge.

Labor Probe

WASHINGTON, Oct. 24 (AP)—Charles Litell testified today he organized spying and other anti-union activity at the Whirlpool plant in Marion, Ohio, at the direction of an aide of Nathan W. Shefferman.

Shefferman, head of Labor Associate, Inc., Chicago, has been described by Senate Rackets committee counesel Robert Kennedy as a "union busting specialist," and has been under committee fire for acknowledged financial dealings with teamsters union president Dave Beck.

Litell told the committee today that while he was an employe of Whirlpool he was recruited for the anti-union work by Dr. Louis Checov, a psychologist on Shefferman's staff.

Drama Personnel Here On Weekend

A conference of directors and managers of outdoor dramas is being held this weekend at UNC. The Carolina Playmakers are serving as hosts for the group.

Attending the two-day meeting are representatives from the three North Carolina outdoor plays, Unto These Hills, The Lost Colony and Horn In the West. In addition director and managers from The Common Glory in Virginia, Chucky Jack in Tennessee, and Wilderness Road in Kentucky are in Chapel Hill for the annual meeting.

At the conference of directors and managers, problems connected with the production of outdoor plays are discussed and plans made for better dramas in the future.

S. America's Educational Facts Cited

South American's educational achievements and needs were reviewed for UNC students this week in a talk by Dr. Carson Ryan, who recently returned from a 30-day visit to six Latin American countries.

Dr. Ryan, Kenan professor emeritus in the School of Education, addressed the Beta Theta chapter of Phi Delta Kappa, fraternity for men in education. William Kornegay, graduate student from Warsaw, and chapter president, introduced Ryan.

The influence of European educational theories on South American schools appears to be great, Dr. Ryan reported. Students in general are offered free elementary education, but secondary education is restricted and selective with only limited members of the school population going beyond the elementary school.

Ecuador was the exception to the rule, he pointed out. There the country provides free education up through the college level, but language barriers prevent many children from gaining any schooling.

The absence of coeducational schools was also apparent in most of South America, Dr. Ryan said. He also noted that he found only one school, in Peru, which had an organization similar to the Parent-Teacher Association in America.

The overall eduactional scene is one of great contrasts—with good and devoted teachers and administrators but poor teaching materials and books, he added.

Professor Green Will Address History Group

Kenan Professor Fletcher M. Green, Chairman of the Department of History, will address the annual convention of the Southern Historical Association at Houston, Tex., on Nov. 9.

Dr. Green, one of the founders of the association, is its past president. The subject of his address will be "Presidents on Parade," an account of tours and trips in the South prior to the Civil War made by Presidents of the United States.

Also attending the meeting will be Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, Dean of the UNC College of Arts and Sciences and a member of the Board of Editors of the Southern Historical Quarterly, a publication of the association, and a former secretary-treasurer and member of the association's Governing Council.

Dean of the UNC Faculty, Dr. James L. Godfrey, member of the Governing Council, and Dr. James W. Patton, Director of the University's Southern Historical Collecton and past president and secretary-treasurer, are others who will be present.

Dr. Frank W. Klingberg and Dr. George V. Taylor, both of the history department at Chapel Hill, will evaluate and criticize several historical papers presented at the Houston sessions. Dr. Klingberg's three papers will be on "Southern Subversives," and Dr. Taylor's on the French Revolution.

Arrangements for the University faculty members attending the sessions have been made through funds granted by the alumni Annual Giving Program of the University.

Former Women's Dean To Be Honored Sunday

Mrs. Marvin Hendrix Stacy, former Dean of Women at UNC, will be honored Sunday afternoon at 4 o'clock when a portrait of her will be unveiled and presented the University. The ceremony will take place in Hill Hall on the UNC campus.

Following the presentation, a tea honoring Mrs. Stacy will be given in the Morehead Building.

The portrait was made possible by private contributions from friends of Mrs. Stacy and from UNC alumnae.

William D. Carmichael Jr., vice-president of the Consolidated University of North Carolina, will preside at the program. Other participants will be Katherine Kennedy Carmichael, UNC Dean of Women; Miss Janie Robbins Jolly of Raleigh, UNC alumnae; R. B. House, former UNC Chancellor; and Miss Barbara Dixon, relatives of Mrs. Stacy.

Chancellor William B. Aycock will accept the protrait on behalf of the University, and President of the Consolidated University William C. Friday will also speak.

Mrs. Stacy was Dean of Women at UNC from 1919 until 1946 when she retired. Her husband Marvin Hendrix Stacy served the University as Dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Acting President of the University until his death in 1919.

The portrait of Mrs. Stacy was painted by Alexander Kulkov of St. Petersburg, Fla. Kulkov's paintings have been exhibited in Estonia, Latvia, Czechoslovakia and New York City. In the United States he has painted a number of portraits.

Two-Day Med Symposium Is Planned Here

Physicians from North and South Carolina and Virginia are expected at a two-day medical symposium to be held at the UNC School of Medicine Nov. 21-22.

Since the two-day meeting falls on Thursday and Friday and the annual Carolina-Duke football game will be played Saturday, Nov. 23, persons expecting to attend the symposium are urged to make early hotel reservations.

Registration for the symposium will be held at Memorial Hospital beginning at 8:30 a. m. A workshop in cardiology, will begin an hour later. Thursday afternoon's program will be a panel discussion on selected cases that will be presented by panel members.

Friday's program will begin at 9:15 a. m. and continue through the afternoon. This will consist of a number of lectures and the presentation of papers.

Two of the visiting physicians who will take part in the two-day program are Dr. Truman G. Schnabel Jr., associate professor of medicine, University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine and Dr. Houston S. Everett, associate professor of gynecology, School of Medicine, Johns Hopkins University.

The North Carolina State Board of Health is giving financial assistance for the first day of the symposium.

Wives of physicians who attend the symposium are invited. A special social hour has been planned for wives Thursday morning and a social hour and dinner Thursday night. The morning social hour will be held at the School of Medicine and the evening activitie will be held at the Carolina Inn.

Physicians interested in obtaining additional information concerning the symposium are requested to write the UNC School of Medicine.

THE BIDDING (N-S Vul.):

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1NT	PASS	2NT	PASS
3NT	(All PASS)

WINNING PLAY DOES NOT ALWAYS WIN

You are South. You've just read Oswald Jacoby's recent column on the importance of tens and nines, so you eagerly accept North's invitation to bid game in no trump. The problem is: can you make your contract after West opens the five of spades?

Master Point night at Graham Memorial, only two Souths out of thirteen playing this 3NT contract brought it in. When East played the ten, these declarers did not take the trick but held up. East continued spades, West took South's king with his ace, returned a spade to clear the suit. But now when South drove out East's ace of diamonds, East could find no entry to his partner's hand, and so South raked in his contract with four diamonds, one heart, one spade, and three clubs. Neat, huh?

This analysis is as cooked as Lenoir Hall stew beef. This is one time when the declarers who play the hand right will be the ones who go down.

The line of play above is correct only if South is sure East holds the nice of diamonds, and South certainly has no way to know that. Let's return to trick one again and see how South should have reasoned.

"In view of the fact that I am short in spades," South's reasoning might go, "West's lead is probably his fourth longest. East's play of the ten means that West has either a four, five ,or six card suit. Apparently the success of this contract hinges on the location of the diamond ace.

If West has it, I certainly want to take this trick right away with the queen because my king will prove a second spade stopper. But if East has it, a spade return through my K-2 holding permit West to pick up the entire suit. Which way should I guess?"

And the answer is that he must place the ace with West because he has greater chances for his contract wtih the decision. Here's why:

Even if East does have the ace of diamond, South still has several chances for his contract by avoiding the hold-up. East may have only one spade; in that event he won't be able to return the suit. Or, East may hold three spades (which limits West to four), and in that case, E-W can win only three spades at the most. Or, even if East does hold two or three spades, one of them might be the jack, in which case the eight on the board will be promoted to third-round control of spades (by ducking if East returns small in the suit when he gets in, by covering with the king if East returns the jack.)

The long and short of it is that holding up gains only if East holds almost exactly what he unfortunately did, - a doubleton spade holding and the ace of diamonds. But not holding up, South will gain a trick if West holds it, and still has several chances for his contract if East holds it.

The winning play does not always win, but more often than not it will. On each play declarer must assess all the possbile contingencies and select the line of play which most frequently will win.

Tar Babies Return To Action Against Wake Tonight

KING'S KORNER

By BILL KING

DTH Sports Editor

Deacons Cannot Be Taken Lightly

When Wake Forest and Carolina meet in Winston-Salem Saturday, the Tar Heels will find themselves going against a team which has now lost six straight ball games—the last two in 1956 and four straight in '57.

Thus, the Deacs will be upset hungry. Carolina simply must not go into this game with any "breather" in mind. The Deacons are a hungry aggregate, capable of reaching up and swatting down the mightiest. We have seen how desire can turn a fair team into a good team and Wake Forest is just such a club.

Wake Forest will be out to duplicate the feat of the Maryland Terps in knocking off Jim Tatum's Club. This game cannot be taken lightly.

Injuries Will Plague Both Squads

Both clubs will go into the contest slightly below par physically. Carolina has halfback Jim Shuler, fullbacks Ed Lipski and Giles Gaca and guards Ed Furjanic and Ellis Wooldridge on the disabled list. The Deacs are suffering the loss of fullback Pete MacLean and halfback Roy Ledford.

None of these have been definitely counted out as yet, but it's a cinch that coaches Tatum and Paul Amen will not play them unless absolutely necessary.

Should the above mentioned Tar Heel gridders be forced to miss Saturday's fray, it will leave Carolina in the worst physical shape of the season. This is where Tatum's "first 22" will come in handy. The Tar Heels' mentor should have some capable replacements ready for the Deacs.

Duke Should Have Easy Road To Orange Bowl

It would seem at present that the Duke Blue Devils have about as little to fear in the way of losing a shot at the Orange Bowl as any team could possibly have.

Here is a ball club going into a game Saturday against its only real challenge for top honors in the ACC, and the Devils don't have to worry about it one bit.

N.C. State, of course, can't represent the ACC because of the probation administered it by the NCAA last year concerning its recruiting of a greatly-publicized high school basketball star named Jackie Moreland.

Thus, Duke is relatively safe in preparing for the Orange Bowl (against Oklahoma, no doubt). Upsets could occur, but Carolina was practically knocked out of contention by Maryland and South Carolina has lost to Duke already. The Gamecocks have only an outside chance and this is hurt by the fact that they've lost their number one quarterback, Bobby Bunch for the season and hard-charging halfback, Alex Hawkins for a couple of weeks.

The ACC choses its "most representative team" for the Miami New Year's Day extravaganza and, unless Duke pulls a complete reversal of form, it should get the chance to meet the mighty Sooners, Jan. 1.

Freshman Teams Will Try To Better Records

The Carolina-Wake Forest freshman game in Greensboro tonight should be a good one. Both have identical 1-1 records and both will be out to boost that average tomorrow night.

Last year the Baby Deacs wn, 14-12 in a real thriller. An interesting sidelight is that the fellow who kicked the vital extra points for Wake Forest is Nick Patella, now a regular for the Deacon varsity.

Bowman Gray Stadium in Winston-Salem is the site of the Carolina-Wake Forest battle Saturday. The stadium has a seating capacity of 16,841 and at the beginning of the week, only 5,000 ducats remained on sale.

North Carolina State enters the Duke game Saturday with a 4-0-1 record but will find itself the underdog against the Blue Devils for the fifth time in six weeks. A consensus poll shows that State was a unanimous favorite over only one opponent—Florida State.

The State-Duke fireworks will actually begin Friday over in Durham when the two freshman teams square off in a battle of the unbeatens.

Maryland's Gov. McKeldin told a story the other day about Queen Elizabeth and the game last Saturday. When Her Majesty saw the Maryland team come trotting onto the field, she said: "Where do you get all those players, Governor." The good Gov. replied, "Your Majesty, that is a very embarrassing question."

Carolina-Tennessee Should Draw Good Gate

It seems to us that the Carolina basketball team will have its hand full in keeping its undefeated skein going and some of the most torrid opposition will come right in the Atlantic Coast Conference. The ACC is quickly emerging as one of the really great basketball centers of the nation.

The bookies have certainly put a lot of confidence in Maryland since its win over Carolina. Most of the oddsmakers have the Terps going into their game with Tennessee all even. Sounds silly to us. The Vols should win it by at least a couple touchdowns.

Should Tennessee beat Maryland and Carolina top Wake Forest, that would make for a very good gate at the Carolina-Tennessee game here next Saturday. It could possibly draw the largest crowd of the year here, especially since the Duke game will be played in Durham.

The old rumor about Wilt Chamberlain rolling his eyeballs at the lucrative offers of the pro clubs is making the rounds again. The hulking Kansas center had been "signed" last season, but he still showed up on the UK campus for the season. You can count on him being right back there this season, too.

Duke Readies For State

DURHAM, Oct. 24—(AP)—A spirited Duke football team whipped through two hours of strenuous work today to finish preparations for an important clash with North Carolina State.

The Blue Devils concentrated on their defensive set-ups and also went over offensive work they have covered during the past week.

Coach Bill Murray said he was happy with his squad's spirits and physical condition. He pronounced the Blue Devils in good mental and physical shape for the big game Saturday. Another workout was scheduled for tomorrow.

It appeared guard Carl Jamison would be the only Duke player to miss the game. He has been out of action for a couple of weeks with an injury. Captain Hal McElhaney and tackle John Kersey, both of whom missed last Saturday's game, were in top shape and ready to go.

The varsity soccer squad's third straight scheduled game was called off yesterday.

Coach Marvin Allen's once-beaten eleven was scheduled to face the Davidson Wildcats at Davidson today at 3 p.m., but that three letter word, flu, interfered again.

Allen said that the Davidson coach called yesterday afternoon and asked that the game be postponed because the Davidson campus has been so hard hit by the flu.

The game has been re-scheduled for November 5, Allen said.

The Davidson postponement marks the third straight game that has been called off because of the flu bug. The Tar Heel booters have been idle since playing Lynchburg College on October 8.

First, the Washington & Lee game, to be held in Chapel Hill on October 15, was called off when the Generals' coach said he wouldn't be able to put eleven men on the field because of the flu.

This Monday's scheduled game with Virginia, which was to be held in Charlottesville, was postponed because so many of the Carolina players had been hit with the flu.

Since the Davidson and Virginia games have both been re-scheduled, the varsity soccer team will have a very busy three weeks beginning on November 1, when the Tar Heels face Phieffer in Chapel Hill.

The Tar Heel booters will have to play six games in a space of three weeks, including a game with the powerful Maryland Terrapins, who have won the conference title every year and have never been beaten by an ACC opponent.

Coach Allen's squad would have been at almost full strength for the Davidson game, as most of the first-string players returned for practice this week.

The forward line, however, received a hard blow in Wednesday's practice when its flashy left inside, Ted Smith, received a severe ankle injury during scrimmage. Smith wouldn't have been able to play in the Davidson game, but is expected to be ready for the Phieffer contest.

Flu Epidemic Taking Toll Of Athletes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

With North Carolina's flu epidemic showing no signs of letting up, many athletic contests and other activities in schools and colleges around the state have been cancelled this weekend..

Three college football games, a cross-country meet and a number of high school games were among events cancelled because of flu and flu-like diseases. The epidemic appeared to have centered at educational institutions.

Meanwhile, infrmaries at colleges and other institutions remained crowded as medical staffs looked for empty beds to place the increasing numbers of students taken ill.

North Carolina State College in Raleigh reported a decline in the number of students confined to beds with flu. Although 38 new cases were reported yesterday, the number of students discharged brought the total number of bed cases to 139.

FULLBACK FILL-IN—Carolina fullback Bob Shupin will probably see a lot of action when the Tar Heels meet Wake Forest Saturday. Injuries plague the fullback post but Shupin is a very capable plunger who can take over for injured Ed Lipski.

Staff Writer Says

Collegiate Soccer Is Unsupported Sport

By JIM PORKS

Soccer is on the upgrade at the University of North Carolina.

The varsity squad keeps getting better each year, attaining more depth as better players come in from the improving freshman teams.

Yet soccer is at a disadvantage at Carolina, and in the Atlantic Coast Conference for that matter, because it is not considered a popular spectators sport.

For, year after year, very few persons come to watch the home games of the varsity soccer squad. A crowd of over 40 is considered phenomenal.

Why is this? Why is it that the sport which draws crowds of over 100,000 for a single game in other countries can't draw over 40 at Carolina?

No specific answer to the complex question can be given. The answer lies in several closely related factors.

First of all, soccer is probably misunderstood in the South. As a relatively young sport, few persons really know much about it. The average student at Carolina probably never heard much about soccer.

He knows little, if anything, about how soccer is played. The rules of the game are unkown to him and, unless he takes soccer in a physical education class, he never will come in contact with soccer—unless curiosity compels him one day to watch a varsity soccer match.

The student who attended prep school, however, is an exception. He will know a good deal about soccer, because it is an established, popular sport in most prep schools. Most of the first-string players on this year's varsity soccer squad attended a prep school.

Another reason for the lack of spectators at Carolina's games and those of other members of the ACC is that students don't consider soccer as a colorful, sensational sport—this ties in closely with soccer being misunderstood.

It's true that the cheerleaders, bands, colorful players' uniforms are missing at a soccer game, but soccer is still really an entertaining sport to watch. Like other sports, soccer requires a good deal of skill and there is nothing quite like watching a smooth-working forward line taking the soccer ball downfield and setting up a score.

Body contact is by no means missing in a soccer game and, as the players wear little protection, a game can become very rough.

Another reason, of course, for soccer not drawing large crowds is the lack of publicity it receives. It's true that the school papers of the teams in the ACC write up a forthcoming ame and the results of that game, but it's the big state papers which count, and they, on the whole, ignore soccer.

In North Carolina, for instance, none of the large state papers pay much attention to soccer. They will give two or three small paragraphs to the results of a soccer match, but that has proven to be the limit.

Maybe one day, however, soccer will gain more popularity and publicity. Members of this year's soccer team, however, hope that day comes this year—say when they play Maryland here on November 8.

Old Rivals In Charity Battle At Greensboro

ERWIN FULLER

Carolina's Tar Babies, inactive since October 12 when they absorbed a 33-19 trouncing at the hands of the State Wolflets, hope to rebound tonight when they move back into action against the Baby Deacs of Wake Forest at 8 o'clock in spacious Greensboro Senior High Stadium.

Yearly mentor Bud Caron is looking for a much better game from his charges than they showed in the State contest. The Tar Babies were hard hit by injuries and the flu bug immediately preceeding the NCS battle, with more ful".

Carson has labelled the present injury and sickness situation in the frosh camp as "much improved". He hastened to add that his gridders will still be hindered by the absence of key personnel. Tackle Joe Kulpa and fullback Frank Riggs, starters in the two previous contest, will see no action in tonight's scrap, and the status of ends Carl Eanes and Mike Greenday, both stellar performers, has been termed as "doubt-

The freshman coach feels that the WF game, sponsored annually by the Greensboro Kiwanis Club with all proceeds going to the Youth Charity Fund, will provide another stiff test for his boys. Wake Forest demonstrated a strong offensive potential in a 26 - 20 win over Clemson, and Carson looks for a wide-open game. The Baby Deacs dropped their season's opener to South Carolina's Gamecock yearlings, 18-0, while the Tar Babies were polishing off a highly regarded Maryland eleven, 14-7.

A sizeable turnout is expected for the charity contest. The Baby Deacs came out on the long end of a 14-12 last year.

First Freshman Basketball Cuts Expected Today

The flu has cut the number of boys trying out for the freshman basketball team to forty-one.

Coach Buck Freeman disclosed yesterday that he had expected more to try out for a place on the squad. Yesterday only twenty players turned out for the practice. The remainder of the boys have either cut themselves or are sick.

Coach Freeman is scheduled to make his first cut after todays practice. Several more cuts will have to be made before the final squad is picked. At the moment Freeman plans to have twelve boys compose the team.

A sprained ankle has forced Hugh Donohue to miss this weeks practice sessions. The New York scholarship player is expected back early next week.

The freshman schedule lists nineteen games. The season officially gets underway on December 3 with an away game against the High Point Junior Varsity. A February 28 contest with the Duke freshmen closes out the season.

Coach Freeman is handling the selection of the team. After the final cuts have been made, Ken Rosemond will assume some of the coaching responsibilities. Rosemond comes to the coaching game after a successful playing career with the Tar Heels.

Red Moon Loses Beep, But Remains In Orbit

LONDON, Oct. 25—(AP)—Sputnik has lost its beep.

Scientists tracking the Soviet baby moon said it was still zipping through outer space around the world and right on course. But radio monitors said it no longer sends out its signals. Neither the beep nor the occasional whistle is heard now.

"The Russians said the satellite's batteries would last for three weeks, and it is exactly three weeks to the day," said a scientist at the radio observatory at Cambridge.

"The signals have lost intensity over the last week and were a hundred times weaker last night, which probably means that the satellite will now be unobserved unless it is done by radar.

The satellite was due to pass over London at 6:34 p.m. (1:34 p.m. EST). But scientists at two big listening posts here said they just couldn't hear it.

Other tracking stations equipped with radar and telescopes were summoned to help in the scientific chase. They spotted the satellite but agreed that no signal was now coming from its transmitter.

"It was not sending out any radio signals at all," reported a Cambridge scientist.

The British Broadcasting Corp. monitoring station at Tatsfield said it heard "very much weaker" signals on two occasions earlier today, but none at all tonight.

Moscow Radio tonight made no mention of any battery failure on the satellite. It reported only that Russia's man-made moon was still speeding along course.

"By 6 a.m. tomorrow the artificial satellite will have completed 319 revolutions around the Globe covering a distance of about 13,850,000 kilometers (8,606,300 miles), the Moscow broadcast said.

Reds Accused Of War Scare

UNITED NATION, N. Y., Oct. 25 (AP)—The United States today charged the Soviet Union had created an "artificial war scare" in efforts to reduce Mideast countries to Soviet satellite status.

Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge also declared the United States will not be stopped by Soviet threats from carrying out the Eisenhower Doctrine to aid Mideast which "the Soviet Union seeks to destroy."

"Let there be no question about our capacity to offer this support," Lodge said.

Lodge laid before the 82-Nation Assembly a bitter indictment of the Kremlin's record of stirring up trouble to gain its end over the past decade.

He denied in detail all Soviet charges that the United States was working with Turkey to launch a lightning war against Syria.

The true aims of the Soviet Union, he said, are "to bully Turkey with threats of extinction, to blacken the name of the United States and destroy" its friendship with the people of the Middle East, and to impose its domination over the nations in that area.

Lodge spoke as Soviet satellite countries pressed the Assembly to send a commission of inquiry to Turkey to investigate Syrian charges that Turkish troop concentrations menaced Syria's security.

And outside the Assembly chamber a move developed, reportedly with U. S. support, to send U. N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to Turkey and Syria on a peace mission.

Informed quarters said several countries, including Japan, Canada, Peru, Paraguay, Norway and Denmark were working on a plan to embody this idea.

Students Plan European Trip

How would you like to go to Europe this summer for six to nine weeks for between $500 to $900?

This year for the first time there will be a UNC—initated trip to Europe. Several other colleges throughout the country have been doing this some years, and a special committee, headed by Mary Moore Mason and Dick Stroker, is now ready to talk to people who might be interested in this venture called "UNC Goes to Europe".

There are several ideas about what kind of trip this would be. It could be strictly a travel tour of most of the European countries; it could be a travel tour with seminars led by outstanding Europeans at various locations; and it could be an experiment in living in one community doing social service work with the people; or it could be a combination of several of these.

However, the program which has been planned with the help of the YWCA staff is up to the students who are interested in going. Consequently, on October 29, Mr. Mike Battsek, British tour co-ordinator who does students tours as a hobby, will visit the campus to meet with the committee and all students who are interested in going on this tour. The meeting is scheduled for 6:15 that Tuesday night in Lenoir Hall.

At this time the students have been invited to bring their supper into the back dining room of Lenior Hall, and to discuss with Mr. Battsek and the committee their ideas as the what "UNC Goes to Europe" should include.

Interested students have been urged to contact Jim Carse, the administrative advisor, immediately. His office is on the left hand side of the entrance to the Y building.

Car Registration

Car registration at UNC for 1957 has reached 4,209, according to figures released yesterday by Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs.

This is greater than the 1956 registration by 405 automobiles. These figures include cars registered by students, faculty members and staff.

The students have 230 more cars this year. In 1956 there were 2,354 student cars. This year 2,583 cars have been registered.

Faculty members and staff now have a total of 1,625 cars; whereas, in 1956 they registered 2,354 cars.

Honor

A student has been suspended from the University for a violation of the University Honor Code, according to a report from Honor Council officials.

Cold Weather Expected Here

Colder weather, followed by rain late today, may be expected over North Carolina as an approaching high pressure area moves farther into the state, according to the U. S. Weather Bureau in Raleigh.

The bureau attributes the overcast weather experienced in North Carolina for the last few days to high altitude southwest winds blowing in moisture from the Gulf States.

However, colder and gradually clearing weather may be anticipated as the high pressure area, centered presently over Montana, becomes more concentrated over the state.

The fringes of the area have already reached North Carolina, but its greater effects will not be felt until the center of the area moves over the state sometime next week.

YACK PICTURES

Graduate students, public health students, dentists and dental hygienists, ROTC and ROTC sponsors, Germans Club and dance committee members and first, second and third year medical students may have their Yack pictures taken Monday through Wednesday, 1-7:30 p .m., for a late fee of one dollar. Pictures will be taken in the basement of Graham Memorial.

Reed, Russavage And Donatelli Are Suspended
Tar Heels Will Seek Fourth Victory Today

Demons Are Winless In Four Tries

By BILL KING

WINSTON-SALEM — Carolina's twice beaten Tar Heels will be out to rebound into the win column here this afternoon as they go against winless Wake Forest in Bowman Gray Stadium at 2 p. m.

The Tar Heels will be minus the services of number one quarterback Dave Reed and starting left tackle Leo Russavage who, along with guard Bernice Donatelli (see opposite story) were suspended yesterday in a disciplinary move by Jim Tatum.

Sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings is expected to get the nod in place of Reed and veteran tackle Stu Pell will probably replace Russavage.

This will be the 54th renewal of competition between these two Atlantic Coast Conference and Big Four Rivals and the first outing for Carolina in Winston-Salem, the Deacs' new home. The series began back in 1888. Since then, the Tar Heels have racked up a one-sided 35-16-2 mark against the boys from Baptist Hollow.

A near capacity crowd of 15,000 is expected to be on hand for the fray, but a weather forecast of inclement weather might cause a decline in last minute ticket sales.

The Tar Heels will bear the role of favorite in lieu of their big victories over Clemson, Navy and Miami, but the Deacons have upset in mind after running up an unenvious six-game losing streak that extends over this season and the final two games in 1956. The Tar Heels have lost to State, 7-0 and Maryland, 12-7.

The latter loss is the one Carolina will be seeking to avenge here today. After three teriffic weeks of football, the Tatummen fell apart one week ago against the Terps in College Park, Md. before the Queen of England and Duke of Edinborough.

Maryland, incidentally, is the only mutual foe of the two clubs thus far and the Terps turned back the Deacons, 27-0 two weeks ago.

The Deacons have won plaudits for their unrelenting spirit, despite one-sided losses to four opponents. This could make things unpleasant for Jim Tatum's club today.

But the Tar Heels should also be "up" for this one ofter last week's humiliating fiasco of College Park.

Physically, both teams will be incapacitated a bit. Carolina will probably have to play without the service of hard-running Jim Schuler, the regular left halfback. Schuler is suffering a leg injury and Tatum probably will not take a chance with him. The same applies to

'Incident' On Thursday Night Is Reason, Says Coach Tatum

The Carolina football team received an unexpected blow yesterday when Coach Jim Tatum suspended two first stringers and a reserve guard on he eve of the Wake Forest game in Winston-Salem.

Quarterback Dave Reed, tackle Leo Russavage and reserve guard Bernie Donatelli were ordered to turn in their uniforms yesterday. How long the suspension is effective was not known.

Coach Tatum would not elaborate on reason for the suspension, but indicated the trio broke training rules Thursday. He made this statement:

"In breaking training rules on Thursday night before a Saturday game, these 3 boys showed no regard or respect for their teammates or school and indulged in conduct unbecoming an athlete."

Reed, the team's' number one quarterback and co-captain, had performed well for the Tar Heels in sharing the signal-calling duties with junior Curt Hathaway and sophemore Jack Cummings . It is expected that Cummings will be the starter today, but Hathaway will probably see a lot of action.

Russavage has been a starter most of the season. He will probably be replaced by senior tackle, Stuart Pell.

These suspensions, added to several key injuries, leave the Tar Heels in the worst shape of the season as they go against the winless Deacons.

Study Of Newspapers Given Lengthy Debate

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Passage of the bill "to establish a committee to study the policies surounding the office of the editor of the student newspaper at other colleges" received considerable debate in the Student Legislature Thursday night.

Representative Tom Long (SP), who had introduced the bill, asked the body if the policies surrounding the editor met their demands and if other colleges have newspaper policies from which UNC might benefit.

He asked the legislature if they were aware that Dean Luxon of the School of Journalism wanted The Tar Heel.

He stated that he felt that the legislature owed it to Editor Bass to tell him whether the bill was an attack on The Daily Tar Heel editor.

Representative Jerry Oppenheimer (UP) asked the speaker where Luxon would get the $23,000 from students fees which the Student Legislature appropriates to the Daily Tar Heel.

Crowther said he thought that if Luxon could get the machinery of the paper, he would be able to get some money. The speaker declared he was for the investigation.

He said he thought the students who wanted to run for editor should be interviewed. On other campuses, he explained, there are boards to

Ike May Rally Free Nations

WASHINGTON, Oct. 25 (AP)—President Eisenhower gave notice today he might fly to Europe to help rally free nations into a "genuine partnership" needed to protect their peoples better from Russia's threats.

The White House disclosed this prospect in a final communique summing up Eisenhower's three days of talks with Britain's Prime Minister Macmillan on moves to meet Russia's stepped-up military-scientific challenge.

The 1,500-word windup statement calls for a meeting of "special character" by representatives of the 15 North Atlantic Treaty (NATO) Nations in mid-December.

"The arrangements which the nations of the free world have for collective defense and mutual help are based on the recognition that the concept of national self-sufficiency is now out of date," the Eisenhower-Macmillan statement said.

'Keep Caravan' Action Course Is Given Here

An administrative official yesterday offered a possible course of action for students interested in preserving the annual football caravan. The official requested, however, that his name not be divulged.

The official recommended that students present a formal request to Chancellor Aycock through a student spokesman. He pointed out that this could probably be most easily accomplished through student government.

In the final analysis the chancellor will make the decision regarding the future of caravans.

The chancellor could act on a student request himself or he might refer the matter to the Calendar Committee. This committee is composed of deans of the schools and colleges, who would make a recommendation to the chancellor about caravans.

Committee Heads Are Selected For 1957-58

By DAVIS YOUNG

Interdormitory Council President Tom Walters has made the following appointments for standing committee chairman for the school year 1957-58.

The appointments include: social committee, Doug Bayliff and Rudy Edwards co-chairman with Bob Lee, Craig Gibbon, Foy Bradshaw and Kelly Wallace as assistants to Bayliff and Edwards.

Also: dormitory improvements committee, Bob Kuhns chairman; publicity committee, Buddy Cockrell and Jim James co-chairman; and intra-murals committee, Paul Woodward chairman.

Also: contest committee, Clyde Ingle chairman; vending machine committee, Bob Thompson chairman; and the rules committee, Bob Carter, chairman.

The importance of these appointments was overshadowed at the meeting Wednesday night by the crucial debate of Student Body President Sonny Evans' proposal for the re-organization of the dormitory advisory system.

However, wishing to stress the significance of these appointments, President Walters gave the DTH the following statement from his office yesterday:

"We have made careful selection of committee chairman in the hope that their duties will be performed efficiently by responsible people.

"These committees are the heart of our organization and must function well for us to have a successful year. I feel certain that the confidence I have placed in these boys will not subside any during the coming months."

Leaders Named Of Y Cabinet

Those elected included: Pete Longenecker, chairman; George Winecoff, vice-chairman; Thal Elliott, chairman of records and accounts and Jerome Stokes, chairman of public relations.

The Y-Cabinet is being sponsored by the YMCA and has as its sponsors, Jim Carse of the Y administration and Mike Givens representing the student body. The purpose of the frosh group is to coordinate activities with the senior Y.

Discussion groups have been sponsored pertaining to theology, world affairs and contemporary literature. Many of the boys are now devoting time to such activities as acting as orderlies in the hospital and working with local Boy Scouts.

In addition, UNC freshmen have been treated to two "mixers" with Averett College of Danville, Va., one here and one in Danville. A continuation of these activities is scheduled for the rest of the year, according to spokesman Stokes.

No News? - - Writer Gives Evidence Of Tar Heel Coverage

By PATSY MILLER

There's nothing in the paper today—you've said it many times. However, we have evidence to refute this old cliche.

Every day there are approximately 15,000 words in the Daily Tar Heel, allowing for ads. Every day there are about five words per line, 96 news lines per page, eight columns per page and four pages —except when the paper is larger.

And every day there is so much news that occasionally some must be omitted. Every day, that is, except Monday!

A newspaper office is never organized—except that all the editors assign all the stories which all the reporters write and always get in on time. But the news doesn't happen on time, just at the wrong time. Therefore newspaper people work all the time.

Case in point: the paper is ready for press. Then someone gets fired, someone receives an important appointment, Honor Council comes up with a hot scoop. So, at supper time and at bed time all the busy little reporters rewrite the paper.

And, in the middle of a busy afternoon, someone "touches" a plate glass door, someone innocently "touches" the door, and the door just falls out. Which attracts attention from all over the student union building, which causes a general upset which takes an hour to settle. And which consequently defrays production somewhat.

The busiest and most interesting time of the year is elections time. Besides meeting all the campus candidates-elect, reporters are subject to intense interrogation on several matters.

First, there are deadlines which all candidates must go by. At deadline time—on the nose—all candidates rush in the door and clamor for attention. They receive all the attention available.

Second, they write stories which are presided over by said candidates, in good natured fashion.

Thirdly, they must measure all candidates' statements to make sure that each story is the same length in order to be objective and unbiased. Regardless of efforts, stories never appear to everyone to be unbiased. Which leads to more stories.

The Daily Tar Heel cubby holes (or offices) are full of interesting little notes and pictures tacked on bulletin boards. The cubicles are also characteristically full of yellow paper, broken typewriters, wastebaskets and cigarette smoke.

And most important of all, full of news and the latest campus gossip (unprintable) and full of people. Full of good intentions and mistakes—like any newspaper office. And all this turns out your newspaper of 15,000 words per day. And that ain't nothin'!

PHI INITIATES

The Phi members and guests earlier voted a 5-5 tie on the bill which would make divorce and remarriage "morally and ethically correct."

UP MEETING CHANGED

The University Party meeting, scheduled for Tuesday night, has been changed to Monday at 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall.

This change was made so that the meeting would not conflict with the Polgar program set for Tuesday night.

The only activity scheduled for Graham Memorial today is the Cosmopolitan Club, 8-12 p. m., Rendezvous Room.

Long Bill Was Passed: Partial Good Intentions

Former staff members Frank Crowther and Tony Wolff in no way spoke for The Daily Tar Heel in their blatant accusation before the Student Legislature Thursday night that the Journalism School was conniving to assume operation of the campus newspaper.

The Daily Tar Heel agrees that the Journalism School would, in all probability, like to use its facilities as a laboratory for journalism students.

But we would assuredly like to feel that Dean Norval Luxon and his J-school assistants are not plotting and conspiring in an attempt to stifle student freedom of the press.

A Journalism School-run newspaper would, as most realize, degenerate until it became a Yes Man for the administration. Student views would be toned down by an administration - paid "adviser." And student freedom of the press would be just a memory.

Students pay for The Daily Tar Heel through mandatory subscriptions. Thus they, through an elected editor, are entitled to have their views expressed without censorship from the Journalism School, or any other University group.

A past editor of The Daily Tar Heel said he heard Dean Luxon state that the Journalism School would sooner or later take over the student newspaper. There is no documentary proof. And we would like to feel that this was merely heresay.

Dean Luxon would look pretty foolish seeking to stifle freedom of the press on a student level by sublimating the paper's operation to his Journalism School. In his classes, Luxon always asserts for freedom of the press. It's hard to believe he would attempt to suppress such freedom.

But we feel that University students and administration — were such a Journalism School plot concocted — would fight any such attempts and stand up for freedoms asserted under the First and Fourteenth Amendments of the United States Constitution.

Former staffers Crowther and Wolff were, we feel, trying to forward their campaigns for editorship of the paper by speaking in their alarmist fashion about something of which they knew little.

We apologize to the Journalism School for these former staffers' distasteful statements. And we would like to make it publicly known that The Daily Tar Heel knew nothing of their little plot to make themselves look big as "defenders of the press" — for reasons of personal motivation — before the Student Legislature and the campus as a whole.

We did not like Long and originator student body President Sonny Evans' underhanded bill. We felt that if newspapers were to be studied, and the results of this study were to be incorporated toward publishing a better student newspaper, then The Daily Tar Heel should have been consulted. We would have volunteered our services. As it was we were sidestepped and subtly stabbed.

Student legislators added to their bill the provision which indicated that the present editor was not being chastized. It stated:

This, we felt, was good. Perhaps Rep. Long and student body President Sonny Evans are actually interested in publishing a better student newspaper. But they went about it all in an underhanded and below-the-board fashion. And it appeared that their investigation bill reeked with a philosophy such as this:

"Now the Daily Tar Heel is oft criticized. (Verbal institutions are oft criticized because they operate in glass houses which make them easily criticized.) Therefore we will achieve personal glory by implying that we aren't satisfied with the current operation of the paper." (This could have very easily have been the philosophy behind introduction of a bill which doesn't call for investigation of The Daily Tar Heel, but investigation of other papers.)

At any rate the bill has been passed. Issues were clouded by a not-clear bill, by personal glory hounds like Crowther and Wolff, by petty bias. But the bill was passed.

It will be extremely interesting to see what results come from it.

As we said, we would have supported the bill if we felt the intent behind it was actually to better The Daily Tar Heel. This was probably the intent of a number of legislators who supported the measure.

But we do not feel such was the intent of the bill's introducers.

We shall continue to print to the best of our ability. If some concrete suggestions for betterment of the paper come from the investigation bill, we will gladly incorporate them into our operation.

But if the results are malicious — as were, we feel, the introducers' intents — then such suggestions should and probably will be disregarded.

Ten Gallon Headed Jim Professional

. . . And there are those who assert that Jim Tatum is not a symbol of professional athletics . . . That his attitude is not, "It matters not how you play the game, but whether you win or lose."

To these we direct quotations taken from "Jim Tatum Of The Tar Heels," in next week's Saturday Evening Post to be on the news stands Tuesday or Wednesday:

"Swaggering Jim Tatum, North Carolina's bullheaded coach, takes no comfort in how his boys play the game — nothing but winning counts with him. 'How can you be proud of a losing team?' he asks.

"A harder slap at Tatum's Maryland operations came in an accreditation report on the University by an investigating unit from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. Made early in 1955, the report charged Maryland with such shortcomings as a 'grossly inadequate library' and low standards of admission and grading.

"Tatum also has said, 'It's a sad occasion when academic leaders don't have a sufficient education in athletics . . .'"

Tatumian tactics are worse than Machiavellian tactics, for he respects not even academic leaders who fail to pay homage upon bended knee to professional football.

"The parasitic monster of professional football' hardly describes ruthless ten-gallon headed Jim Tatum.

Academics — the main purpose of any University — must reallign and weaken itself if Jim Tatum is to stay at the University.

The ten-gallon-headed monster of professionalism . . .

NICHOLS

Politicoes & Pampering & Politics-ics

Gary Nichols

Warning: Politician time will be rolling around soon.

For those who have never experienced one of our election campaigns I have outlined an example of what you might expect.

The Campus Politician is a "friendly" and polite creature. He will rap tastefully on your door and, only after you have called "Come in!", or a like invitation, will peek cautiously around the door at you and say, "May I speak to you fellows a minute?" (You needn't have any refreshments ready, he really can only stay that long.)

If you are studying, drop your books, for you are in for a "treat." You are about to meet one of the more popular students in his class or area (whichever qualifies him as a candidate for office), who is active in a political party.

The Candidate will offer his hand and start this spiel: "My name is Charlie Candidate and I'm running for ——."

Sometimes he will even ask your name, using it profusely before he hits the door for his exit. Others, more obvious or newer at the game, will overlook this little gimmick.

Now you can see why he is so popular. Hasn't he met just about everyone on campus?

He will not come empty-handed, either. Campaign time is the time for receiving all kinds of little odds and ends and useful little things, such as a blotter with the candidate's own picture on it or a campaign slogan with a rubber band for attaching it to doorknobs, to mention only a few. So be prepared to really stock up on the loot.

You may be as pleasant and lovable as you like, but don't, by any means, allow the conversation to shift around to the subject of campus politics or what the candidate plans to accomplish if he gets into office. (This is often very embarrassing for him and in many cases causes his hastier than expected withdrawal.)

After a few minutes of uneasiness on both sides the candidate will get up, shake hands again, all around, and come out with some classic statement like: "No matter who you vote for, be sure to get out and vote." (This last statement is not to be taken too literally, it simply means: "You can see I'm a good guy, and my heart's in the right place, because I'd sooner see my opponent get more votes, and possibly, beat me than have some of the students shirk their civic responsibilities. Vote for me!")

"Oh, We Think Of This As Just A Launching Platform"

READER'S REPOSITORY:

Readers Retort On Eric The Red & On Other Readers' Reeling Retorts

Editor:

Last Sunday morning over my second cup of coffee I turned to the second page of this paper and what should greet my eyes but Mr. Johnson's illumating letter with suitable caption. Being a coed on this campus, I was of course interested in what this eminent gentleman had to say on the subject of "Femaledom's Husband Hunting." Upon finishing his treatise, my blood preasure was, shall we say, a slight bit over normal.

In his opening paragraph Mr. Johnson states that the Carolina coed is here on this campus only to find a husband. If I may be permitted I should like to rely that though in the minority, there are some coeds on campus here for an education and not as trappers from the north woods. This may surprise you, but for a few of us it's true. Let me say now that I do not hate men. I think that they are here to stay and am quite happy over this situation. It is a sociological fact that most of us at some point in our lives do marry, and far be it from me to oppose this institution. However, there are a few of us here at Carolina who are not majoring "husband hunting." Some of us might like a space of freedom after college before settling down to "domestic bliss."

It comes as news to me that the proper "ingredients", for the ideal husband are now known to all those gentlemen who wish to be caught. I know of no set qualifications that a man should meet in order to obtain this status. In fact, there are as many of these patterns as there are women; and since it is a woman's privilege to change her mind, these "ingredients" can change from day to day and often do.

Mr. Johnson then asks that the coeds to take a good look at themselves. By way of general information, there are plenty of mirrors in the girl's dorms. I for one do not like people who try to change me. I am what I am. Any change that may come about will come of my own accord and by my own decision, not from someone trying to push their personality on mine. Either like me for what I am or ignore me. There are few people in life that are sincerely interested in half measures. As a corollary I do not try to change the people I meet. I like them for what they are, not what they could be.

If I do not like them I leave them alone. By this I do not mean that we should be glaring individualists. Some compromise is necessary in order to get along with the rest of the world. However, it is possible to keep one's individuality as well as one's friends. In fact your friends will respect you all the more for being an individual instead of a carbon copy of that hypothetical horror called "the norm." That is usually why they are your friends.

In conclusion Mr. Johnson states that his letter is "all tongue- in- cheek." Well, this is not. I'm just irritated enough to say exactly what I think. Thus ends this "minority report."

EDITOR:

Lucky girl that I am, I have met this young gentleman who calls himself Eric the Red (though I will never surrender the secret of his indentity), and I knew ahead of time that he planned to deliver his message on Swedish communism to the waiting world, or at least to the DTH.

Thus, with this glorious entrance into the subversive realm of collegiate opinion, another Thinking male has been uncovered here at this Greater University. But alas! There is a Mrs. Eric the Red to be dealt with and / or congratulated, so this bright star is lost to all the coeds (many? few?) who have hopes of landing a Thinkingmale.

It does occur to me that Sir Eric may have yielded a bit of misinformation. Are you certain, sir, that Jansson's men were ready for DIE FRAU? Why not DIE MADCHEN? Doesn't really matter, I suppose. All that counts is that I now have the courage to go on with my own writing—Die Leprechaunen, a literary effort dealing with a utopia in which charcoal gray and black watch plaid have yielded to a non-Ivy-legian shade of coke bottle green. Oh, whew! . . . .

PRESIDENTIAL MEMO:

Defense Of Administration

Sonny Evans

The epidemic has subsided and soon we hope that things will begin to get back to normal. For the administration it was a trying time of decision and efforts to let the state know the facts; for the students, it was a time of almost hysteria from the mystery of the causes of the epidemic.

This is an effort to set the record straight for the sake of history and clarification. The violent criticisms by The Daily Tar Heel of certain people in the administration were just not justifed, I feel and the distortion of facts in some instances must be corrected.

1. I'm sure it won't rest your mind any but this was not Asian Flu: to be sure it was flu-like in its nature but the Asian variety has not visited us as yet.

2. If this was not Asiatic Flu, then it seems plausible that it could very possibly come; therefore everyone should get their vaccine immediately.

3. The flu vaccine was ordered by the administration in July, and it was only by an unusual set of circumstances (doubling of the order by the U.S. Army who had a higher priority, and a spoiled batch by the company) that it did not arrive in any sizable quantity until last week.

4. While everyone was screaming for the suspension of classes, they did not realize that this decision would have cut down on our Christmas holidays; we can thank the administration for following competent medical advice in their decision.

The students owe a great debt of gratitude to Dr. Ed Hedgpeth and the other doctors in the Infirmary for their efficent and competent handling of the crisis. At one stretch, Dr. Hedgpeth was in the Infirmary for three consecutive days and nights trying to help the sick students. Ray Jefferies performed in his usual energetic manner in carrying out the decision to feed students in the dorms and to keep some check on the progress of the epidemic.

Chancellor Aycock was in constant check with the medical authorities to get their advice on the suspension of classes. Dean Weaver's concern for the health of the students led to the organization of teams of physicians to travel all over the campus each day. To all, we offer our appreciation and thanks.

The IDC defeated the dormitory counselling plan on Wednesday evening by a very close margin. From my conversations with some individuals in the IDC, there were many misconceptions surrounding the plan. I am hopeful that they will reconsider this plan, since I believe, in truth, it is one of the most important things to have come to the attention of students in many years.

The issue of student participation on the coaches committee will come before the Athletic Council on Nov. 6. This problem is symbolic of the entire athletic picture and we can be greatly encouraged if this proposal is passed.

ERIC THE RED:

Bearist Threat & Free Speech

Harry Kirschner

Once upon a time a number of Neanderthal tribes lived in peaceful coexistence in a valley in southern France.

One tribe, the Eagles, was very strong. For a time it appeared that the Eagles would become the strongest tribe in the valley.

Its government was a good one, being based upon a constitution which gave fundamental rights of freedom to all of its citizens. Eaglians were assured the rights of free growling (their way of speech) and free stone engraving. Only by due process of law could they be denied the rights of life, liberty or the pursuit of mammoths. The people were very proud of their rights and their power and they looked to the future very smugly.

But then, in the east, a tribe called the Bears rose up to compete with the Eagles for strongest power in the valley. They were a ruthless bunch having no such individual liberty as the Eagles had.

Both tribes became fearful and jealous of the other. Basically, they did this because there was a tremendous ideological difference in their religious beliefs.

The Eagles believed in the thunder god. They paid homage to him by amassing as many beads as possible. The father of each family amassed the beads, acquiring them through trade. When a family had saved more than one million beads its father was immediately recognized as a tribe hero.

The Bears, on the other hand, belived in the sun god, and paid homage to him through the tribe government. Everyone worked for the government and it made the profit of beads.

The Eagles feared that the Bears would put agents among its people who would strive to overthrow the government by force. The Eagles began to use counter-agents to uncover the spies. Anyone who growled in criticism of the government was immediately put under suspicion. If it was known that he had been an Eagle all of his life then it was assumed that he had become a Bearist. The government claimed that it was investigating people to preserve freedom.

A young Eaglian named Beawolf was attending head shrinking school during this time. He saw the state of fear and investigation, but thought little about it. But when he began to question critically, as youth always does, he found that it was a dangerous practice to follow.

Once he tried to do some critical questioning in the school newsstone, but he was warned against it because government agents came to the school and read back issues whenever an ex-student applied for a government job. The agents were prone to take any questioning which they belived unorthodox to be the work of a Bearist.

Abel Guilty Of Helping Reds

NEW YORK, OCT. 25 (AP) —Russian Col. Rudolf I. Abel was convicted today of stealing American military and Atomic secrets for Moscow. The maximum sentence is death.

The scrawny, 55-year-old master-spy is the first foreign national ever to stand trial for his life in a civilian American courtroom. He also is the highest ranking Soviet agent ever brought to book here.

As he has throughout his trial in Brooklyn Federal District Court, Abel seemed only mildly interested in the verdict returned by the jury of nine men and three women. They deliberated three hours and 35 minutes.

Later, as he left the court, Abel puffed out his cheeks and exhaled in a gesture that seemed one of relief at the end of the trial.

Judge Mortimer Byers, who now holds Abel's life in his hands, scheduled sentencing for Nov. 15.

"I would have done the same thing," Byers said as he praised the jury's verdict.

Said Asst. Atty. Gen. William F. Tompkins, who prosecuted the case for the government:

"It strikes a severe blow at Soviet espionage in this country. The government will continue to prosecute vigorously offenses affecting our national security."

Defense Atty. William B. Donovan, appointed by the court to represent Abel after the Russian government failed to make any move in his defense, said he would withhold a decision on whether to appeal.

Donovan said he felt he has plenty of grounds for appeal. But he added he is hopeful that instead of punishing Abel, Byers will decide to send him back to Russia.

Abel, a veteran espionage agent for the Kremlin, slipped into this country illegally from Canada in 1948.

For the next nine years he posed as a nondescript Brooklyn artist, eventually opening a studio across the street from the courtroom where he went to trial Oct. 3. He lived quietly and discreetly, and even turned out a few mediocre oil paintings.

But during the entire time, Abel's mission behind the mask was to ferret out national defense data for the Kremlin. His operations bordered on fictional fantasy.

Abel's studio was equippeu with short wave receivers capable of picking up radio messages from Moscow. It also was geared to turn to sabotage in the even of war.

Abel microfilmed data he obtained and secreted it in hollowed out objects—coins, bolts, pencils, blocks of wood. He used an intricate code. He went under at least four aliases, one of which he appropriated from the birth certificate of an American infant who died in 1902.

Once a newspaper delivery boy came into possession of one of Abel's hollowed-out, microfilm-crammed coins while collecting from from customers. The coin was dropped. It broke apart and when the youth saw the contents, he turned it over to police.

The clue apparently was too slender to be followed through. At any rate, Abel continued to operate until early last May a fellowspy turned him in.

The other Russian agent, Lt. Col. Reino Hayhanen, testified at the trial that he had stolen money intended for expenses of the spy ring and had on occasion disobeyed from Abel and even direct orders from Moscow.

Ordered back to Russia for a vacation last spring, Hayhanen made his decision. He stopped off in Paris and bared his past to the U. S. Embassy there.

Abel was picked up last June 21 in his Manhattan hotel room. He was held in a McAllen, Tex., alien detention center, ostensibly as an illegal alien awaiting deportation.

Then, on Aug. 7, Abel was indicted on the espionage charge.

He was tried on three counts—conspiracy to transmit military data to Russia, conspiracy to obtain such data, and failure to register as a foreign agent.

It was the first count—transmitting—that bore the maximum death penalty, under a law revised in 1954 after the Rosenberg atom spy case.

The jury's conviction of Abel on this capital count made his further conviction on others academic.

The chief witness against Abel in the trial was Hayhanen. He was a co-conspirator but was spared the role of a co-defendant in exchange for his defected to the West and his testimony against Abel.

Other co-conspirators named in the indicitment were Vitali G. Pavlov, Alexander M. Korotkov and Mikhail Svirin. Presumably all are in Russia and their exact fit into thespy ring scheme of things was never clearly outlined.

Pavlov, however, headed the Russian secret police network in the Soviet Embassy in Ottawa, Canada, in 1945 when atomic-traitor Dr. Alan Nunn May was arrested. It was the first of the big post-war spy cases.

Starting Pay Up For Grads

Starting salaries for AB and BS students are up about $15 over 1955-56 salaries, Joe M. Galloway, director of placement service has announced.

He said that follow-ups of placement service registrants revealed and average of $561 as compared to last year's $546. Salaries for MBA graduates averaged $428, LL. B graduates going into business averaged, and Ph.D. chemists averaged $691.

During 1956-57, 904 students and alumni seeking jobs in business industry and government were registered with the placement service. 872 used the service in 1955-56. 3840 campus interviews were given by 236 national and local organizations who made 358 visits to the campus.

Of the N. C. students registered 60 per cent chose to remain in N.C. and 40 per cent went to other states. 22 per cent of the out-of-state registrants took jobs in N. C. and 78 per cent left.

"We are pleased with the results of this year's work, particularly with the steadily increasing use made of the service by students and alumni for vocational counseling as well as job placement and appreciate the assistance of the faculty and company representatives", the director of placement said.

interview the edtorial candidates. Here, he claimed, anyone, who so wishes can "just run."

Goldsmith said the legislature could keep Luxon away from the paper by passing the bill.

Crowther said, "yes," and explained it would show initiative to Luxon; that then the students would be able to keep the paper.

Goldsmith asked Crowther if he was aware that there was a board to investigate the editorial candidates.

Crowther said, "yes," that he had appeared before it; however, he said he felt that the board did not go into the candidates' backgrounds well enough.

Long then said a candidate could run even if he were not approved by the editor selections board by submitting a petition with 25 names on it.

Crowther quoted several past Tar Heel Editors as having said they were not entirely pleased by the existing situation of selections board.

Representative Pat Adams (SP) asked Crowther if he could recommend any changes for the paper.

Crowther said he had no recommendations but that there should be an investigation. He claimed that the Daily Tar Heel lacks something now that it should have.

Goldsmith wanted to know if there was some way to have the bill so that it was not aimed at Bass.

Crowther said he was not worried about Bass but wanted the legislature to say if the bill had been drawn because of the present editors' action or if it was just an investigation.

Representative Dick Sessomo (UP) said the legislature was trying to gain control over the editor. He wanted to know what the investigation of the editor meant. He was against the board having the power to stop a man from running.

Crowther said the board should be able to stop an unqualified man from getting in.

Sessoms claimed the bill was not clear and wanted it explained.

Crowther read the bill and said it was for an investigation of rules and policies.

Goldsmith said it was imperative to retain editorial freedom. He proposed that the bill be amended so that it was not "a slap at the present administration."

Long said the bill had been given to him along with several others by Student Body President Sonny Evans around Sept. 24. "This is not a curb of the freedom of the press," Long said.

He explained that there had not been an investigation of the Daily Tar Heel in three years and that the legislature appropriated about $23,000 to the paper.

It would not reflect on Bass's editorship, he said, because the committee would not report until February 1. He said the legislature could not be used for personal ends.

Anthony Wolff, former Tar Heel staff member, was then given priviledges of the floor. He said everyone on the Daily Tar Heel knew about the Journalism School's desire.

He advised the body not to worry about the Journalism School too much. He told how the Daily Tar Heel had been run early in its history.

He said the Daily Tar Heel did not have any training or "heeling" system as do other newspaper. He said they would not be able to "get responsible journalism through censorship."

Goldsmith proposed that an article three be added to the bill; it said, "This is not to be interpreted as being directed at the present editor of the Daily Tar Heel."

Representative Erwin Fuller (SP) said that the bill was directed at the editor. He said the bill mentions "editor" or words containing it four times.

He said he thuoght the bill specifically pointed at the editor and that Long had done a poor job of wording.

Goldsmith said the bill was not to improve Bass' work but that of future editors. He pointed out that the committee did not report until Feb 1.

Fuller said he personally believed the bill could be improved by substituting a word like "organization" for "editor."

Another representative said that Bass been told that the bill was not directed against him and that the spirit of the bill could be written in The Daily Tar Heel.

New Art Club Being Formed

With its aim as enjoyment through understanding, a new art club is being formed on campus, it was announced yesterday.

John Spivey, member of the Art Department, termed the club a new group "for all students interested in art, not just for art students."

Students who do not participate in the University art program will be afforded the opportunity within the club, he said. In line with this, works of the members will be exhibited, lecturers will be sponsored and movies will be shown.

A contest is being held for a name for the club. Anyone may submit as many names as he wishes, and the person submitting the most apt name will be awarded a prize.

G. T. Haskin, spokesmen for the group, described the prize as "a worthwhile one."

In The Infirmary

Mesrs. Amberys Whittle, Robert Cook, Eddie Bass, Kenneth Walker, Ronnie Pruett, Louis White, Lee Amslie, Joel Goodwin, Jordan Parker, William Keith, Ronald Copeland, Norwood Carroll, William Dotson, William Bailey, Elmer Hughes, Gaylord Hageseth, Douglas Kelly, Hiram Scrapes, Phillip Crutchfield, Rea Miller, Lanny McDonald, Thomas Durham, James Womble, Michael Deutsch, George Abernathy, Kenneth James.

Tar Heel AFROTC Busy

DISTINGUISHED AFROTC CADETS

Three UNC senior cadets have been designated as Distinguished AFROTC Cadets by Colonel F. W. Swann, professor of Air Science here. Those named were Cadet Lt. Colonel Tom G. Farrell, Cadet Major Ralph P. Hunt and Cadet Captain William M. Aldred.

To be a Distinguished AFROTC Cadet is one of the highest honors in the cadet corps. The job demands many stringent requirements of its cadets, and carries with it an opportunity to apply for a regular commission in the Air Force.

An Armistice Day Retreat ceremony will be presented by the cadet corps on the lawn between South Building and Wilson Library at 4:30 p.m., Nov. 11.

Director of Student Activities, Sam Magill, will speak, and the AFROTC Band will furnish the music for the ceremony in honor of our war dead.

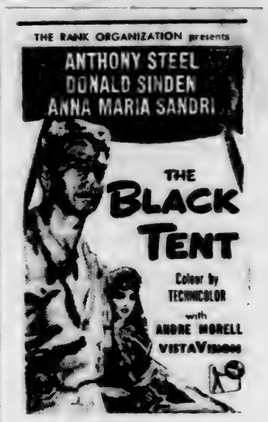
All university students and faculty members have been invited.

ANGEL SQUADRON

As a part of the selection of new "Angels," the Angel Squadron, the girl's sponsor corps, held a tea Thursday afternoon in the main lounge of Graham Memorial.

Of more than thirty nominees who attended, all were interviewed by the "Angels," and thirteen will be selected to join the girl's squadron.

DR. CATHEY SPEAKS



Dr. C. O. Cathey of UNC Department of History spoke to the Northampton County Alumni Association at Woodlands, N. C., this week on "The Scholarship and Student Aid Program" of the University.

The Bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
		1 D	Dbl
2 D	2 H	3 D	3 H
Pass	Pass	Pass	Pass

What is the difference between duplicated bridge and rubber bridge? This is a question asked by many rubber bridge players. Well, besides a few minor differences in scoring, the one thing that distinguishes duplicate is the highly competitive nature of the bidding. Today's hand is an excellent example of this. South's opening bid is minimum, but sound. A takeout double is certainly better for West than an overcall. North's bid is standard, and many duplicate players bid 3 Diamonds with this hand. This bid is understood to be pre-emptive over a takeout double, the redouble being the correct bid with a stronger hand, East has 8 points which is the minimum first free bid after his partner has made a takeout double. South rebids at 3 Diamonds still trying to give trouble, and West raises his partner's Hearts, asking him to go on to 4 Hearts if he has more than a minimum for the bid he made. Ordinarily North would bid 4 Diamonds, but his heart holding looks promising and he passes, East has no extra values and so must pass, as must South. When his hand was played on Monday the 21st, several pairs got to 4 Hearts and went down. How they managed to do this with a total of 23 points between the two hands is a mystery. The single most violated rule in bridge is "don't rebid your values". Even harder to understand is that on over half the occasions that East-West got to 4 Hearts, North-South "sacrificed" at 5 Diamonds. If East bids the 4 Hearts, South must pass since he has described his hand perfectly and any decision to go to 5 Diamonds, or double 4 Hearts, is entirely up to North, and North should certainly double since he has 1 1-2 Heart tricks and knows the his opponents cannot hold but a very little more than half the deck, for he can count at least 18 or 19 for his side.

The play presents one interesting problem for East as declarer. After South opens the Kings of Diamonds and shifts to a small club, North winning with his singleton King and coming back with a Diamond which is trumped on the board, East realizes that the only reason North did not come back with a second club is that he doesn't have one. East cannot now take the safety-play in trumps (the play of the King followed by the 9 which he lets ride to insure against losing two trump tricks in the event the holding is as it is), since if South holds a doubleton honor in trumps, which is the odds on holdings, South will then play the Ace and a small Club allowing North to ruff with his last trump. In view of this likelyhood, East must play for a 3-2 break in trumps, which loses, since unsafe safety-play actually does work. There are two important lessons to be learned here. The first, just because a play doesn't work, doesn't make it incorrect, the correct play wins only most of the time. The second is that the safety-play, which is one of the most important elementary offensive maneuvers, should be taken only when no harm can be done if it doesn't work, which it usually won't.

It occurs to me that some of the readers don't know exactly what a safety-play is. It is any play which guards against the abnormal split of a suit. There are dozens of instances, many of which we will take up in the future.

Suspensions, Injuries Equal Tough Battle

The suspension of three Tar Heel football players, two of them regulars, plus the longest injury list of the season for Carolina, add up to one thing—a prospective "tough" battle in Winston-Salem this afternoon.

One brief statement will suffice as regards the suspension. At this writing, we know none of the details. All we know is that Dave Reed, Leo Russavage and Bernie Donatelli were suspended yesterday by Coach Jim Tatum for breaking training rules. The actual reason will probably never be released for publication, as very few incidents of this nature anywhere come to the front for publication. In our opinion this is good.

To say that a suspension has been administered for "disciplinary reasons" is enough. Just as "scholastic difficulties" should be used when a student is involved in an honor council violation. After all, these are personal problems and should not be aired before the public.

Depth Should Help Carolina

As for the ball game.

The aforementioned problems have unquestionably lessened the strength of the Tar Heels, and the Deacons will jump at this opportunity to end their victory famine.

But Jim Tatum has an ace in the hole. He has depth. His policy of using 22 men to compose his "first team" could pay off today. Sunny Jim has given two teams equal opportunity to gain experience and this should prove very valuable against the desire-pervaded Deacons.

Still, a close battle can be expected. Whether the suspension served as a demoralizer or inspiration to take up the slack is something that won't be known until the final gun sounds. But Wake Forest will be an alert and aggressive assemblage this afternoon and the Tar Heels will have their hands full.

Students Watch TV; Lowe Might Play

Sports notes gathered from here and there.

Many Carolina students are not making the trip to Winston-Salem this afternoon because the Duke-State game will be televised regionally. It would be nice if we had a big delegation at Bowman Gray Stadium, but it is understandable that many would prefer to watch the other game and then hit the books.

It would seem that the Florida sunshine was detrimental to the scoring punch of the State Wolfpack. The Wolfpack had scored 68 points in its first three games, but in two games in the sunny land, scored only one touchdown.

An indication of the power of the Duke Blue Devils can be found in ACC statistics through last week's games. The Devils lead the conference in four of six big departments. Passing, offensive and defensive, seems to be Duke's main fallacy since they're fourth on pass defense and last in pass offense.

The suspension of Dave Reed might give sophomore quarterback Nelson Lowe a chance for action after all this season. Lowe was rated over Jack Cummings in pre-season dope but an injury forced him to the sidelines for the first two games, and since then Tatum has been holding him out.

Just for the records, the official colloquialism for a football holdout is "bohunk."

In compiling an 0-4 record this season, Wake Forest has scored only 27 points while yielding a total of 116. In this, the Deacs have had only three extra points missed against them.

We Predict: Duke By 2, Vols Over Terps

After a couple of weeks layoff from our "pigskin prognostications" necessitated by travel, we return to the not too lucrative task of picking today's winners in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

The big game, of course, is the State-Duke affair over in Raleigh. The Blue Devils are undefeated and the Wolfpack has only a tie to mar its record. Duke could clinch the Orange Bowl bid with a victory today. State is not eligible for the New Year's Day classic. Most quarters look for a tight battle, we look for Duke to mow down the Raleigh club to the tune of about two touchdowns: let's say 27-13.

The Virginia Cavaliers turn from conference competition for the afternoon to host the Army. The Cadets are tough, too tough for Virginia. Army 28, Virginia 7.

The Maryland Terps will entertain Tennessee's tough Vols this afternoon and there'll be no royalty at College Park. Maryland has lived a glorious week, next week shouldn't be as festive. Tennessee 21, Maryland 7.

"But Sir, Don't You Realize Us Po' Deacons Can't Beat Anybody?"

Deaclets Score As Game Ends But Extra Point Attempt Goes Wide

By DAVE WIBLE

GREENSBORO — The Carolina Tar Babies barely edged by the Wake Forest freshmen when a Wake Forest point-after-touchdown try went wide giving Carolina a 14-13 victory in Senior High Stadium last night.

The Deaclets, who had many scoring opportunities during the game, almost tied things up with a 55-yard scoring drive in the final minute of play. The WF touchdown came on a pass from quarterback Norman Snead to his right end, Bobby Allen, who was all alone in the end zone. The play came after the unofficial scoreboard clock had run out. The all important extra point attempt by Bill Ruby failed as the Carolina line swarmed in.

Fullback Alex Rice scored the first Carolina touchdown early in the second period on a 21-yard jaunt through the middle of the Wake Forest line. The scoring drive started on the Tar Babies' own 24 yard line. From there, halfback Lennie Beck moved the ball 15 yards and quarterback Russ Hollers then called on the running abilities of Rice, Beck, and right halfback Sonny Folckomer to move the ball to the Deaclet 21. Rice scored on the next play.

Wake came back strong after the ensuing kickoff and drove all the way to the Carolina two-yard line before the Tar Babies took over and ran out the clock for the first half.

Four plays after intermission, Tar Baby Beck intercepted a Wake Forest pass on the Carolina 30, and, doing some brilliant down field running, moved the ball to the Wake Forest six. Two plays later, he scored over left guard. After a 5-yard penalty, Frank Fleusser converted on what was to prove the winning point.

The ball changed hands four times before Wake Forest could score. A Deaclet pass on the Carolina 20 was intercepted by Roy Wall, but interference was called, giving the Deaclets possession on the 20. On the next play, Snead found Allen open in the end zone for the score. Ruby was true with the extra point.

After the kickoff, Carolina was forced to turn the ball over to Wake Forest on the Wake 25. With only a minute to go, Bobby Robinson scooted around left end to the Tar Baby 39. On the next play, Snead passed to Robinson on the Carolina 14 and he fumbled and there was much dispute before the official ruled that the whistle had blown before the fumble. Two plays later (time was out on the scoreboard), Snead found Allen open again in the end zone and connected for the TD.

The handful of spectators on hand for the Kiwanis game saw some very sloppy ball handling on the part of both teams. Both teams had a hard time holding onto the ball and were guilty of many penalties. At one point in the first quarter, Carolina was penalized for illegal motion three straight times.

Carolina-Wake Forest Renew Rivalry Today

regular fullback Ed Lipski, who suffered a hip injury against Maryland. Reserve fullback, Giles Gaca is also on the injured list.

The Tar Heels are also in poor shape at the guard posts. Regular Jack Lineberger is injured along with Ed Furjanic and Ellis Woolridge. This leaves regular Fred Swearingen and perhaps sophomore Don Stallings as the probable starters.

The Deacons will be suffering the loss of fullback Pete MacLean and halfback Roy Ledford.

Should Cummings start at quarterback for Carolina, the Tar Heels will probably be counting on his reliable throwing arm to move against the Deacs. Junior Curt Hathaway is also around to lend capable assistance at the signal-calling slot, and the loss of Reed might make Tatum decide to take sophomore Nelson Lowe off the "holdout" list.

The Tar Heels have been better along the ground than through the air thus far, but Tatum might decide to open an aerial attack against a Wake Forest pass defense which hasn't been exactly fierce so far.

With the return of halfback Daley Goff to full physical strength, the Tar Heels will probably call upon the run-pass play more than they did against Maryland. Goff is probably the most proficient of all the Tar Heel back on this particular play.

It is difficult to predict what the Deacons will do in the way of offense. Three quarterbacks, Jim Dalrymple, Preacher Parker and Bruce Nunnally have completed 12 of 31 passes but six have been intercepted. Also, Carolina has one of the most feared pass defenses in the conference, so the Deacs will probably think twice before they take to the air.

Consequently, the battle will have to be labeled "unpredicted" since the suspension and injuries which mar the Tar Heel camp will cause a general shakeup in the lineup, and the Deacs will be out to try something new.

Rain Threatens To Dampen Game Turnout

A threat of rain will probably reduce the expected 15,000 fans in Bowman Gray Stadium this afternoon when the Carolina Tar Heels meet the Wake Forest Demon Deacons.

Game time is two o'clock and last reports had the game a near sellout, but probably very few tickets will be sold should old man weather decide not to shine his blessings.

The official weather forecast is:

Mostly cloudy and somewhat colder with risk of rain in the South and East portions by night. High temperatures Saturday, near 50, mountains, generally in 50's, elsewhere except around 60 in the Southeast. Sunday, considerable cloudiness and cold with risk of some rain in East portion.

Duke-State In Battle Of Unbeatens Today

RALEIGH — Something has got to give this afternoon when two undefeated and nationally ranked football teams collide in Riddick Stadium.

North Carolina State, with four wins and a tie to show for its half-season record, returns home after five games on the road and will play host to Duke, one of the nation's top teams.

The Blue Devils have won five straight and could take a giant step toward the Orange Bowl by making the Wolfpack its sixth victim.

A sellout crowd of 21,000 will be on hand for the 2 o'clock kickoff. The game will be televised on a regional network covering Maryland, Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia and Florida.

North Carolina State, ranked 12th in the grid polls and enjoying its best season in years, has come up with one of the country's best defensive teams by holding five opponents to a total of 20 points.

State victims were North Carolina and Florida State by 7-0 scores, Maryland by 48-13, and Clemson by 13-7. The Wolfpack and Miami (Fla.) battled to a 0-0 tie.

Duke, rated fourth last week, has toppled South Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Rice and Wake Forest.

But the emphasis won't be on defense alone when these teams clash in one of the country's top football attractions. The Blue Devils have one of college football's top scorers in halfback Wray Carlton, a human point machine, while the Wolfpack relies upon its fabulous "touchdown twins," halfbacks Dick Christy and Dick Hunter.

It will be Dad's Day at State with the players' father as honor guests. With that incentive, Wolfpack gridders hope to stage a backslapping spree among the proud pops.

State has its best chance to topple the Blue Devils since 1951 when Duke grabbed a hard-earned 27-21 victory. State hasn't beaten Duke in 11 years, dating back to 1946, when the Gator Bowl squad won 13-7 in the season's opener.

Most State fans believe this is the best Wolfpack team since the 1946 team compiled an 8-2 record.

Fraternity Men Dominate UNC Soccer Team

By JIM PURKS

Here's an intertsting fact for the "did you know that" department: Soccer apparently appeals to members of fraternities.

Did you know that the majority of the varsity soccer squad is made up of fraternity members?

The team's captain, Bill Blair, was a member of Zeta Psi before his marriage last year. At the other halfback position is Hugh Goodman, who is a member of Alpha Tau Omega.

And, backing the team up on defense is goalie Jim Rattay, a member of Chi Phi.

On the forward line, the team's leading scorer, fleet-footed Mike Thompson belongs to Sigma Phi Epsilon. Playing next to him at the inside positions are Tom Rand of Delta Kappa Epsilon, and Ted Smith, a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon.

At the left wing position is Rick Grausman, a member of Zeta Beta Tau.

CAPER, ANYONE?

My name is Cornell Jackson, private eye. Two days ago I was sitting in my office dictating, when suddenly a tall blonde passed my window. I knew she was tall because my office is on the tenth floor.

"Hello," she said, "I need help, Rutgers."

"The name's Cornell."

"Yes. I'm worried about my husband. Every night he stays out till six in the morning. He comes home with his hair mussed, lipstick all over his face. What's up?"

"The butler did it."

"Oh come, come, Yale."

"Cornell, dearie."

"Yes. I think my husband is unfaithful."

I exercised my think-tank. "The butler did it." I blurted.

"Look, Oklahoma Aggies—tell me what to do?"

"Find out the secret of his success with the femmes—then proceed from there. What brand of shirts does he wear?"

"Van Heusen."

"What brand of underwear and pajamas?"

"Van Heusen."

I threw up my hands and watched them loft lazily up to the ceiling. "Babe," I said "you can't fight Van Heusen. There's only one thing you can do. Marry the butler!"

Moral? No ladies worth their salt can resist Van Heusen merchandise. If you want to be popular . . . if you want to walk down the street and have people say, "There goes Jim, he's had more girls on his lap than napkins," here's what to do. Tar Heels Defeat Deacons 14-7 Cummings Spearheads Fourth Win

Suspension For Season Says Tatum

By DAVE WIBLE

WINSTON-SALEM — Fifteen thousand football fans shunned the prospect of watching the Duke-State game on TV here yesterday, as they sat through a cold, gray dreary day in horseshoe shaped Bowman-Gray Stadium to watch a hard fought battle between winless Wake Forest and the Carolina Tar Heels which ended with Carolina on top by one touchdown.

Few fans left the stadium when the unpredicted rain came during the middle of the second half. They realized the contest would not be one sided and they took the chance of getting the flu in favor of a good ball game.

Carolina Coach Jim Tatum didn't feel that the weather had any effect on the outcome. "Wake really played a scrappy game and I think that Coach Amen has done a better job this year with his material than he did last," the Tar Heel mentor said. The Deacons did scrap all the way through as they have done all season even though they haven't won a game.

Paul Amen is proud of his squad for that reason. He said that it was the best game of the season from the view point of not making mistakes.

Tatum made it clear to the press after the game that the suspension of Dave Reed, Leo Russavage and Bernie Donatelli last Thursday is permanent. He added that he didn't consider what effect the loss of the trio would have on the team. He protected his statement by saying" . . . but, it is a man's privilege to change his mind." He didn't make any more comments on the subject.

Jack Cummings, who took over the staring quarter back job for the suspended Reed, was showered with praise by Tatum. The accurate-passing sophomore was given the first string signal calling position today and turned in an outstanding performance during the afternoon. He proved to be a passing quarterback by completing 6 of 10 tosses.

The Tar Heel tactics as explained by Tatum were to hit the corners of the Deacon defense with end runs and passes. It was that part of the Deacon defense that he felt he could gain the most ground.

Every time the Deacons punted,

15,000 See Carolina Hand Wake Forest Her Sixth Loss Of Season

By BILL KING

WINSTON-SALEM — The Carolina Tar Heels called on the accurate right arm and field generalship of sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings to lead them to a 14-7 victory over Wake Forest Deacons in Bowman Gray Stadium yesterday.

An estimated crowd of 15,000 fans braved cold, drizzling weather to watch the Tar Heels send the Deacs down to defeat number five, and picked up their fourth win against only two losses.

Cummings, who took over at the helm for the Tar Heels when regular quarterback Dave Reed was suspended on the eve of the game, guided his ball club with the aplomb of a four year veteran, passing for one touchdown and setting up the other with an aerial thrust.

The Tar Heels were apparently not hurt badly by the loss of Reed and tackle Leo Russavage, nor was the absence of injured halfback Jim Schuler too detrimental to Jim Tatum's club.

The contest was not of the "real thriller" caliber, as both teams had numerous drives bog down, especially in the first half.

The suspensions and injuries caused Tatum to Draw upon his bench resources to gain this triump over the Deacs, but Carolina's top 22 once again came through in fine fashion.

Carolina co-captain and left end Buddy Payne must be given a big share of the credit for the Tar Heel's first score. It was the Norfolk, Va., senior who leaped high into the air to snag Cumming's 21-yard pass in the end zone with 4:55 remaining in the first half.

The tally came after the two clubs had battled to no avail through almost two periods, fighting it out inside the 40-yard lines. Neither was able to come up with the big play which would carry deep into enemy territory.

But after the Tar Heels had come up with the second period touchdown, the fireworks began to pop as the Deacs took advantage of a Ron Marquette fumble and marched down field for the tying foot TD with only seven seconds remaining in the first half.

Cummings set up the final touchdown with a fifteen yard pass which carried to the Wake Forest two with 9:45 left in the third period.

Carolina's first drive started on its own 44. The Tar Heels took over when Wake Forest back Bruce Nunnally kicked to Emil DeCantis at the 44. DeCantis called for a fair catch and the Tar Heels drive began.

Daley Goff carried Carolina to the 47 on a drive up the middle. Then Goff took a Cummings pass at the 50 and on the next play went to the Wake 46 for a first down.

Goff again carried the luggage for the Tar Heels and this time he was good for 15 yards around left end to the 31. Fullback Giles Gaca then broke off left tackle to the 21, just short of a first down.

But Cummings had just begun to pitch and on the next play he faded and passed to Payne who out-battled defending halfback Fete Barham for the ball and fell out of the end zone after the catch. Phil Blazer gave Carolina a 7-0 lead with a perfect boot.

Barham took Bob Shupin's kick

Zhukov Fired By Presidium

LONDON, Oct. 26—(AP)— Russia's parliament has relieved Marshal Georgi Zhukov of his post as Soviet Minister of Defense, Moscow Radio said tonight.

An announcement by the official Tass News Agency said Marshal Rodion Y. Malinovsky had been appointed to replace Zhukov.

The Tass announcement said simply:

"The U.S.S.R. Supreme Soviet Presidium has relieved Marshal G. K. Zhukov of the post of U.S.S.R. Minister of Defense."

The star of Zhukov, 61-year-old soldier with one of the most brilliant military records of World War II, had been on the rise since the death of Stalin and there even had been speculation that he might be getting ready to seize power from party boss Nikita Khrushchev.

There was no hint of the reason for removal of Zhukov, a wartime personal acquaintance of President Isenhower, from his top-post—wielding vast power and influence throughout the Soviet Union.

It was the second military shift announced from Moscow this week. Only last Wednesday the Russians made it known that Marshal Konstantin Rokossovsky, deputy Minister of Defense, had been appointed commander of a military area facing the frontiers of Turkey and Iran.

Zhukov, stocky and slab-faced was one of the most decorated men in the world. He came out of the war as a glittering military hero with a fabulous record of victories in such battles as Stalingrad and Berlin.

But he was given no high political office until after Stalin's death in 1953—some said the old dictator was jealous of Zhukov's fame and popularity.

He became deputy defense minister when Georgi K. Malenkov succeeded Stalin as premier in 1953. When Nickolai Bulganin succeeded Malenkov in 1955, Zhukov became defense minister.

The following year he became a member of the Communist party central committee and an alternate member of the Presidium, or Politburo. Only last year he was elevated to full membership in the Presidium and students of Communist affairs thought he stood astride the Communist world practically on equal terms with Khrushchev.

There has been nothing recently in the news to indicate Malinovsky's star was on the rise.

As far as is known, the bemedaled hero of World War II held no official position beyond that of alternate member of the Soviet Communist Party central committee.

Malinovsky first won fame on the southern battlefield of Russia in the Nazi invasion of 1943, when his armies rolled back the invaders from the Ukraine and the Crimea.

World In Brief

Seeks Compliance

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 26 (AP)— The general president of the Textile Workers Union of America, AFL-CIO, said tonight he hopes the United Textile Workers of America will comply with an AFL-CIO directive issued Friday to rid themselves thoroughly of corrupt influences.

William Pollock said if the UTW leaders fail to comply and subject their members to explusion from the AFL-CIO, TWUA will hold open "the door to a clean, honestly-run union of textile workers under the banner of the AFL-CIO, so they can remain in the house of labor."

Suit Filed

CHICAGO, Oct. 26 (AP) — The mother of a 9-year-old boy who died in a theater during the showing of two horor films filed suit for $25,000 damages today.

The boy, Stewart Cohan, died Oct. 28, 1956, in the Lake Theater in suburban Oak Park. The movies there at the time were "The Black Sleep" and "Creeping Unknown."

The mother's attorney, David Reifl, said the youngster slumped unconscious in his seat after seeing a rocket ship explode in "Creeping Unknown."

He added that the boy died in the lobby shortly afterward, and that a coroner's physician attributed the death to a ruptured artery in the heart.

Thomas Talks Monday

Norman Thomas, America's leading advocate of socialism, will speak here Monday night on the subject of civil rights in connection with U. S. foreign policy.

His speech, sponsored by the Carolina Forum, will be held in Carroll Hall at 8 o'clock.

Six times the Socialist Party candidate for President, Thomas declined to run for a seventh because, he said, the Democratic Party had stolen his party's platform.

Thomas has been a socialist since World War I. He has stated that he joined the socialist movement because he believed it to be the only organization "realistically facing the problems of war and the need for economic change."

Since joining the movement, he has been a staunch defender of labor's right to organize. During World War II he actively engaged in a campaign for a peace treaty that would reject both "vengeance and imperialism."

Since that time he has been a prominent figure in the campaign for world disarmament and international inspection and control of the means of armament production.

He has stated publicly that he opposes both appeasement of the Soviet Union and "get tough imperialism."

Following his address here, a reception will be held in his honor in Graham Memorial.

Musical Program

Dr. Francis Hopper, of the music department of the University of Louisville, will perform a program of harpsichord music this evening at 8 o'clock in Gerrard Hall.

Dr. Hopper is appearing in this Petite Musicale under the sponsership of the GMAB Music Committee. Armission is free.

Solon's Intervention Asked In West Search

MOREHEAD CITY, N. C., Oct. 26 (AP)—Melvin West, a man in a boat against the sea, tonight still was missing on—or under—rough waters between here and Bermuda.

As hour after hour passed without word of the young man, his father appealed to his Congressman for help from the Coast Guard.

"The boy may be drifting out there now with no food and no water," said Barry J. West, the father. "All I ask is that the Coast Guard search the Bermuda area."

West, 28-year-old Jacksonville, N. C. disc jockey, left here the morning of Oct. 17 in a 15-foot, 30-horsepower outboard motorboat and has been sighted only once since then.

He was contacted by a freighter 240 miles east of Cape Lookout, less than halfway to Bermuda, on Monday, took on fresh provisions but no fuel and continued his journey.

The U. S. Coast Guard, which said it spent perhaps $300,000 in a two-day search for West last weekend, has refused since Thursday the request by Melvin's father, Barry West, that it search again.

The Coast Guard told planes on training or weather flights out of Bermuda to keep a lookout, but said it would consider another search only when the situation became more urgent.

West's parents, who run a fishing pier near Morehead City, and the adventurer's wife and three children remained hopeful. The wife said earlier this week that 16-month-old Barry J. West still didn't realize his father was so far away, but kept asking for his daddy whenever anyone came to the house.

Elias J. Mavis, captain of the tanker Aldebaran which contacted West last Monday, said from port in New Jersey that he and his crew had to persuade the outboard motorboatman to take on more food, along with water and matches.

Capt. Mavis said he offered to take West back to the mainland but that he stoutly refused. "I told MORGANTON, N. C., Oct. 26 (AP) — Mount Airy rammed across a touchdown against Olive Hill early in the football game between the two Negro high schools here last night, and the crowd went wild. Especially so Walter Michaux of Morganton, who police said jumped from the stands and ran onto the field brandishing a shotgun, threatening to shoot the whole Mount Airy team if it scored again.

Troops Should Move To N.Y., Telegram Says

DOTHAN, Ala., Oct. 26 (AP) — Alabama Lt. Gov. Guy Hardwich today suggested that the president move Federal Troops from Arkansas to New York City, where he said law and order has broken down.

Referring to the gang murder of Albert Anastasia, Hardwick telegraphed, "it is believed that mob rule prevails in New York and gang murders are on the loose. Obviously local law enforcement unable to cope with situation."

"Respectfully suggest that you withdraw the troops and pull out theba yonetsf rom state of Arkansas and the South and move them forth-with to the state of New York where there is a real, not imaginary, job to do," he wired Eisenhower.

Hardwick has been among the severest critics of Eisenhower's use of Federal Troops at Little Rock to enforce a Federal Court school intergration order.

Text of the telegram:

"Respectfully invite your attention to total breakdown of the law of the land in New York City. Press releases today indicate Albert (Boom Boom) Anastasia, the cold-blooded executioner of the old Murder Inc., mob, was assassinated yesterday in barber chair in New York City. Further reported he was taking over the mob. Mob will commit other premeditated murders.

"Report further Anastasia had beaten five murder raps through the murder of key witnesses. It is believed that mob rule prevails in New York and gang murderers are on the loose. Obviously local law enforcement unable to cope with situation.

"Respectfully suggest that you withdraw the troops and pull out the bayonets from state of Arkansas and the South and move them forthwith to the state of New York where there is real, not imaginary, job to do.

"Situation in Little Rock and South peaceful."

Fellowship To Meet

The Westminster Fellowship will meet this evening at 6 o'clock in the hut behind the Presbyterian church. The subject for discussion will be "Worship — But How?"

Yack Pictures

Graduate students, public health students, dentists, dental hygienists, ROTC and ROTC sponsors, Germans Club, Dance Committee members, and first, second and third-year medical students may have their Yack pictures taken Monday through Wednesday, Oct. 28-30, from 1 until 7:30 p.m., for a late fee of $1. Pictures will be taken in the basement of Graham Memorial.

MOST UNUSUAL ENTERTAINMENT

Polgar's Fun With The Mind Show Here Tuesday

Often described as the "world's most unusual entertainment," Dr. Franz Polgar's "Fun With The Mind" show comes to Memorial Hall next Tuesday evening, October 29.

Dr. Polgar, who holds degrees in psychology from the University of Budapest, will present a fast-moving, two-hour program of mental gymnastics that has both delighted and baffled audiences from coast to coast.

His frequent guest appearances on such radio and television shows as Arthur Godfrey, Garry Moore, Dave Garroway, Steve Allen, and Arlene Frances have exhibited his mystifying feats to millions of viewers.

Polgar's personal appearance displays a breathtaking performance of telepathy, memory feats, and hypnosis, thrillingly presented with wit and humor that frequently has the audience rolling in the aisles.

In the telepathy portion he will find any object hidden by the audience, aided only by mental directions given by someone who knows its whereabouts — without uttering a sound.

One of his memory feats is to memorize the contents of a current magazine, ads and all. He'll pass the pages around among the audience and reel off the text and descriptions of the photographs of any page number called.

Polgar's exhibition of hypnosis is just as amazing and startling as his maneuvers in telepathy and memory magic, but the hypnology portion of his show, performed with volunteers from the audience, is also hysterically funny.

His subjects fall asleep at his command, shiver at his suggestion that it has suddenly gotten very cold, and just as swiftly perspire profusely when he tells them it has become unbearably hot.

Football heroes are too weak to pick up a book he has dropped on the floor when Polgar says it weighs 500 pounds and, in post-hypnotic suggestion, find it impossible to move a foot after the mental wizard has told them it will be stuck to the floor when they awaken.

Virgil Miers, Dallas Times Herald columnist, wrote about Dr. Polgar; "We would say that the Messrs. Martin & Lewis couldn't manage even one laugh more from the audience in the same time. The show is hilariously funny simply because it makes some of your neighbors do the darndest things."

Other critics have said of Polgar, "You've got to see him to believe it."

Tickets are on sale at Graham Memorial, YMCA, Carolina Inn, Danziger's and at Pace's in Glen Lennox. Student tickets are on sale for $1.00.

Student Council Merits Last Word On Suspension

We do not basically disagree with Smiling Jim Tatum's right to discipline his athletes. Such disciplinary action is a necessary training regulation.

But we wonder if all three suspended athletes got a fair shake from the procedure. Reportedly, Tackle Leo Russavage and reserve Guard Bernie Donatelli had been previously warned by Sunny Jim.

But Quarterback David Reed had no previous warning, it was reported.

At any rate, athletes are no exception. If a violation of the Campus Code — which puts students on their honor to behave as gentlemen at all times — occurred, then the athletes must now be tried by the Student Council.

Student Council action will determine whether the alleged offense was of a nature serious enough to merit expulsion from school. And possibly enough facts will come from the Student Council investigation so that student authorities will know whether Smiling Jim acted fairly in his suspension of Reed, Donatelli and Russavage.

If Tatum acted unfairly and arbitrarily, then the Student Council should recommend that athletes be reinstated on the football squad. If the council's investigation reveals that Tatum's suspension was justified, then suspension from school may also be justified.

Athletes are no exception to the rule which insists that all students act as gentlemen at all times. They are representatives of the University of North Carolina—and their conduct such be of a caliber which reflects the traditions of this great University.

The Student Council investigation, at any rate, should disclose some interesting and vital facts.

Jovial James is not so big and professional that he may act arbitrarily. The student judiciary must have the last word, if student self-government is to flourish.

Or perhaps Jovial James now feels he can push student government around as he has pushed the administration around thus far.

Administration officials didn't like the Tatumian proposal that footballers be housed in separate, segregated quarters in Cobb Dormitory. But they yielded to "political" pressure. And Tatum had his way.

Must student government suffer from Tatumian tactics as the administration and scholastics have already suffered?

The time for Tatum to trip out of Chapel Hill is now. Or in later years perhaps an accreditation report on the University will read like the one published by an investigating unit from the Middle States Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools concerning the University of Maryland in 1955:

". . . grossly inadequate library . . . and low standards of admission and grading . . ."

Yet during these same years, Tatum-coached Marylanders were winning seventy-three games, while losing only 15 and tieing four. Three times they went undefeated. And in 1953, Maryland was voted the number one team in the nation and Tatum was named Coach of the year.

. . . And scholastics go plowed under to athletics . . .

Student government through the Student Council should definitely have the last word on the current suspension.

Russian Hullabaloo Can't Eradicate Oct. 23, 1956

In all the hubbub and hullabaloo resulting from the launching of Russia's beep-beeping Sputnik, the anniversary of an all-important burr in the Communist side was all but overlooked.

On Oct. 23, 1956, Hungarian Communist Party Chief Erno Gero returned to Budapest from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, after allegedly resewing a rip in Yugoslavian-Hungarian Party ties. Gero got this warm reception:

(1) Streets were crowded with students and workers demanding his ouster.

(2) Formation of a new government by former Premier Imre Nagy.

(3) Withdrawal of Soviet troops of occupation.

On Nov. 4, Soviet forces unleashed a massive surprise attack on Budapest. A rebel teletype message from Budapest said:

"All Budapest is under fire. The Russian gangsters have betrayed us."

The fate of the fight for freedom was sealed.

But Russia has stormed through the Oct. 23, anniversary with Sputnik, glossed over commeration of the freedom fight with alleged "renewed Communist unity" for the Kremlin's massive celebration of the 40th anniversary of the Bolsevik Revolution Nov. 7.

The Hungarian Revolt and current Polish disturbances mean more in the minds of thinking people everywhere than can a large-sized garbage can full of Communist cold war propaganda.

They mean that men perpetually search for freedom of expression. And that the 'efficient' facades posed by dictatorships must sporadically burst at the seams.

Freedom—it is hoped—will eventually erupt from the loins of the Communist dictatorship.

And no amount of hullabaloo can eradicate memories of Oct. 23, 1956.

Freedom springs from the loins of men . . .

Ike's Got 'Em On The Earth

Nomination for the most self-explanatory editorial of the week comes from the Associate Press wires:

"The White House today labeled as "completely wrong" a published report that President Eisenhower had ordered construction of the first United States moon rocket."

How anyone could have demonstrated enough faith in Eisenhower to write such a report is amazing to us.

The next thing you know, those darn scientists will be shooting for the moon.

But then we guess Ike's got 'em under control . . .

Thomas And Civil Rights

Aging but fiery Norman Thomas, six times candidate for the presidency of the United States on the Socialist ticket, will speak tomorrow night on the campus.

Thomas will discuss civil rights, and should have some interesting food for thought.

All should take advantage of Thomas's remarks.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Diabolical Demons And Ad Assassins

Whit Whitfield

If there is anyone on campus who thinks he can outwit the diabolical genius of the administration, then he is perfectly free to try. We submit that it can't be done. Thousands have tried and failed. The main reason is that the members of the administration are professionals hired for the express purpose of outwitting students. And what is more, they have years of experience.

To cite just a few of their uncanny machinations:

They institute classes in the early morning hours to disturb the sleep of students, thereby keeping the student's efficiency level low and thought processes jumbled.

They instruct the professors to give examinations, oral and written, which tend to embarrass students and consequently intensifying inferiority complexes.

They set up extra-curricular activities for students who don't like to study, and then instruct the faculty to increase the academic loads, adding to the pressure on the students.

They establish deans' offices to confuse the students on such things as class cuts, schedules, etc.

But these are nothing compared to the coup de grace witnessed this week. The administration has hired the services of professional assasins to keep students from tramping across the lawn. The assasins hide in the branches of the trees some 100 to 150 feet over head, quietly sawing branches off to use as clubs on unsuspecting studen's who trespass on holy ground. They work as quietly as elves at their jobs. Since their price is high, the University cannot afford one for every tree, so they work one area per day thoroughly.

A daydreamer was strolling across the campus in front of Graham Memorial earlier this week when he must have heard a slight noise in the tree above him. (It must have been occupied by apprentice assasin.) He looked up, took a step over to the side and watched a limb at least 20 inches around fall to the spot where he was standing. The accuracy was perfect, but we understand that the assasin was fired for making the noise.

We think this episode proves our point. Why fight it? The cards are stacked against you. This gentleman escaped punishment but not by his own ingenuity.

Rameses XXI

Sunny Jim's sure getting tough. Now he's suspending footballers from the squad for drinking, reputedly, and carrying on. Now isn't it too bad that 'ten-gallon-headed' Tatum doesn't feel the same way toward scholastics.

Jovial Jim wouldn't dare yield to the University's requests that athletes who fail to keep their scholastic trousers up be kicked out. Scholastic folks, yes'um, scholastic folks ought to realize the great benefits athletes get from athletin'. Yes'um.

"How Can You Doubt My Good Intentions?"

THE HILLTOP:

Solons' Sluthing May Be Far-Reaching

Nancy Hill

The Student Legislature passed Thursday night what may become one of its most controversial pieces of legislature.

The measure, introduced by Rep. Tom Long, provides for the appointment of a committee to investigate procedures on The Daily Tar Heel, or, as the bill states, student papers on other campuses. The intent of the bill is not clear, but even though it is amended to the affect that it is not concerned merely with the present editorship of the paper, it will ultimately affect it.

An investigation is not a bad thing unless carried to extremes. What may be defined as extremes in this case cannot be seen at this point.

The bill states that the "editorship is a very responsible position," and that "the policies and opinions of students of this newspaper are representative of the policies and opinions of students of the University of North Carolina to the citizens of this state and nation."

There is an implication that the student body should be allowed control over the opinions expressed in the paper. Editorial candidates have stated in past campaigns and will, we hope, continue to state, that all news columns of The Daily Tar Heel are open to students, as are editorial page space for letters and columns. What is reserved for the editor alone is the two columns of editorial space on page two.

Student legislators no doubt realize that an editor must be free to express opinions. Once an editor is elected he has the undeniable right to express his opinions. What the legislators may be questioning is the ability of the student body to judge whether or not a candidate is qualified to direct an expensive publication. Who is qualified to judge may be a hard thing to establish.

The bill states that a five-member committee appointed by Student Body President Sonny Evans is to investigate "all aspects of the editorship of a large college paper such as qualifications for editorship, editorial policies, and methods of electing the editor employed by different schools."

The deadline set for the committee's report is Feb. 1, 1958. Any action taken on the committee's recommendations may come too late to affect this year's staff, which is in accordance with the ammendment to the bill.

It is possible that it may result in establishing much stiffer requirements for candidates for the editorship; it could even mean that selection of the editor will be taken out of the hands of the student body.

Whatever the outcome, there is sufficient interest in the measure to insure that the investigation, whatever it covers, will be a thorough one.

Poor Boys & Woollen's 'Wobbing . . .'

Editor:

Today I went to Woolen Gym to buy a date ticket for Saturday's game. To my utter dismay and horror, the lady at the ticket window said the price was $4.

This has upset me extremely, and it seems to me as if some action could be taken so that "poor boys" could afford to ask a girl to go to the football game with them sometimes.

I don't think that this is too much to ask. Maybe they will give the college boy a break.

Boudoir Bedlam Or Bedroom Ball

Gail Godwin

Sagan has done it again. The girl from Paris who likes to drive "fast cars" in her bare feet and almost got killed doing it, has produced her third novel in three years. She calls it Those Without Shadows.

Aside from the fact that it was slightly confusing as to who was spending the night in whose apartment, the book sparkled with the young author's usual sagacity beyond her years.

The reader is allowed to enter the very personal thoughts of the nine "people without shadows."

You are permitted to watch Beatrice, an aspiring actress, preening before her mirror and practicing the bewitching expressions that ensnare Alain, a middle-aged publisher, and his pure-hearted nephew from the country. Both vie for the apartment, but only one makes it.

You hear Bernard, the frustrated would-be novelist, thinking how much he would like to have an affair with Josee as he kisses Nicole, his wife, goodbye in the morning.

You hear Josee, a rich young adventurer, thinking how much she wishes she were back in her apartment with Jacques as she spends three days in Poitiers with Bernard.

Meanwhile, the pure-hearted young nephew attempts to console his Aunt Fanny, who is being left alone at nights while Alain pursues Beatrice. The nephew and aunt hop on the bandwagon and also have an affair.

In fact, the only two people without shadows that get left out are poor Nicole, Bernard's wife, and Jolyet, Beatrice's producer. But, who knows, after the book ends maybe Jolyet climbs out of this unfortunate minority group. He is showing signs of it towards the end of the book.

This is Sagan's first attempt at writing from an observer's point of view. The result is altogether different from the masterpiece Bonjour Tristesse. Instead of finishing the book with a sigh and a tear as was the case with B. T., the reader finishes it with that unsatisfied feeling, after an hour of jumping spasmodically from one apartment to another.

The only character in the whole novel that evoked a personal, sympathetic feeling was Jacques, the dumb brute who evidently is not quite so dumb since he manages to keep Josee pretty well in hand. He just sits around in his big bulky sweaters enjoying the coziness of Josee's apartment and cramming for med school. He doesn't step on anybody and they don't step on him. He is the only wholesome element in Those Without Shadows.

The moral of the story is this: First, after you write one novel it is easy to get the second one published; second, "bad ol' sex" still reigns as the most popular subject for novels.

Opplete Views On Flu Fanaticism

Davis Young

Question: What is your opinion of the University Administration's stand of not suspending classes during the recent "Asiatic Flu" epidemic?

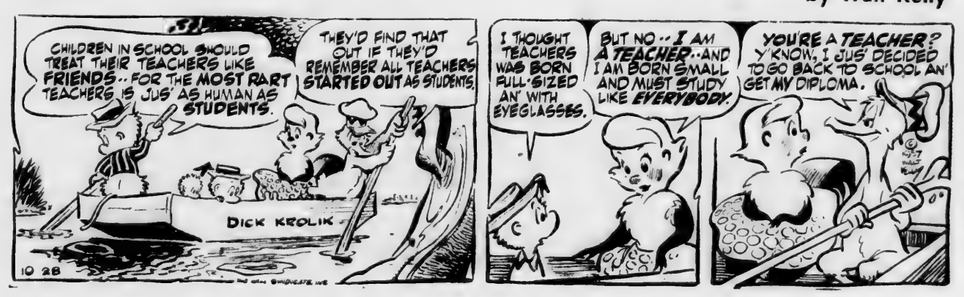
George Winecoff — "I'll admit that the situation was serious, but the University acted wisely by not closing down. The Maryland weekend gave a large segment of the student body a chance to avoid exposure for a few days. It appears now that Asiatic Flu is subsiding on campus and that everything will work out satisfactorally."

Dean Culbreth — "At the peak of the epidemic, school should have closed. If this step had been taken, many of us would not be so far behind now."

Jerry Morgan — "There are a lot of pros and cons on this question. However, if classes had been let out, I am afraid that the sickness would have been transported by the students to many areas it has not reached yet."

John Dalton — "It was not entirely necessary to suspend classes. The University accomplished the same goal by relaxing the cut regulations."

Harry Braxton — "I seriously doubt that the epidemic was even the Asiatic Flu. There were not enough people sick at any one time to make it imperative to close school. The epidemic was spread out over a two week period."



Carl Keller — "The University should have closed down because there were too many people either unable to attend classes or unable to gain the full benefit. I do feel however, that Dr. Hedgpeth and his associates did a great job under that circumstances. I feel that certain critical writings of the Daily Tar Heel were in poor taste."

Andy Vanore — "Classes should have been closed Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of last week to allow those students already not sick a better chance of avoiding the flu."

LONDON, Oct. 26 (AP)—Moscow radio announced tonight the Soviet Earth Satellite's radio has used up its power and has stopped working. The broadcast said Sputnik's signals ended by the time the satellite had circled the earth 326 times.

"In these circumstanes," the broadcast in Russian continued, "optical observation will become very important, as they will be the main means of measuring the elements of the orbit of the satellite and the carrier-rocket and the further forecast of their movement."

The satellite at the moment needs 95.31 minutes to encircle the globe. The carrier rocket is doing the same job in 94.68 minutes.

Underworld Battle

NEW YORK, Oct. 26 (AP) — New York newspapers today quoted confidential informants as attributing the slaying of racketeer Albert Anastasia to an underworld battle for power.

And the New York-Telegram and Sun said it received an anonymous phone call from a man who issued a warning that a certain "Frankie C." had better keep out of it or there might be more fireworks.

The caller specified that he did not mean underworld bigwig Frank Costello, who had his skull creased last May by a bullet from an assassin.

Counselors To Have Session

The first session of the annual In-Service Training Program for counselors of women students will be held Tuesday.

This program of monthly sessions lasts from October through February and is directed toward the special needs of those working closely with Carolina coeds.

Two films on cancer self-examination and a discussion will be included on the program at Tuesday's session. The meeting will be held at 4 p.m. in the Projection Room of Abernethy Hall.

Mrs. Kenneth Brinkman, president of the Orange County Unit of the American Cancer Society, will present the films. Dr. Charles Flowers of the School of Medicine will lead the discussion afterward.

Those invited to attend the meeting include: members of the Women's Residence Council, dormitory and sorority hostesses, graduate counselors in the women's dorms, sorority alumnae advisers, placement personnel and Student Activities personnel.

Tatum Says

the Carolina receiver called for a fair catch with one exception-when Ron Marquette — under the first punt of his college career — said that he just plain couldn't get the hand up and fumbled after being hit hard. The Tatum strategy behind this move was to rush the kicker instead of trying to run the ball back. Several times the charging Tar Heels missed blocking a kick by inches.

When Tatum was asked about the upcoming Tennessee game he said that he wouldn't even think about it until two hours after this game. He added, "I don't even know whether they still run the single wing or not."

West's father said he telephoned Rep. Herbert Bonner of the First Congressional District at his Washington, N. C., home today and asked him to try to get the Coast Guard to search for the younger West. The father said that Bonner promised "action from Washington, D. C."

The elder West made a similar request of the Coast Guard Thursday but it was turned down. The Coast Guard had made an all-out search last Sunday after issuing an all-ship alert the day before. A total of 17 planes and two cutters joined in that widespread hunt.

Tar Heels Take Fourth Win Over Wake Forest

off on the Wake 11 and returned to the 40. But three passes by quarterback Jim Dalrymple were incomplete and Dalrymple kicked to Marquette at the Carolina 30. Marquette fumbled the ball and tackle George Johnson bounced on it with 3:15 left in the half.

The Deacs went to work immediately.

Halfback Larry Brooks then moved to the ten with 1:35 left and Pegram carried to the eight with a thrust up the middle. Manning then took over for the Deacs.

The Deacon fullback went off right tackle to the five and a first down. With 48 seconds left he leaped up the middle to the three then another plunge to the two with 30 seconds to go. The Deacs didn't use a huddle on the next two plays as Manning went to the one and then over the middle for the score with seven seconds left. Pete MacLean was good on the point after and the score was knotted, 7-7 as the half ended.

Carolina wasted no time in regaining the lead in the third quarter.

Nick Patella kicked off into the end zone and the Tar Heel drive began at their own 20.

After Goff was dropped ten yards behind the line of scrimmage, Giles Gaca went up the middle for five yards and fumbled. The ball was rolling up the mid-27-yard pass to end Mac Turlington who made a fine twisting catch at the 18. Gaca got three to the 15 to set the stage for Cumming's 15-yard toss to Payne at the two. On the next play, Gaca struck up the middle for the score and Blazer made the extra point to give Carolina the final margin.

After that, the two teams went back to the sluggish mid-field battle and neither could make any kind of dangerous penetration.

The game was a tough-fought fiasco but a clean one from start to finish. There were only three penaltiesa ll afternoon, and just one went for 15 yards.

Statistically Carolina had only a small edge in each department and both had 12 first downs. Carolina had 161 yards rushing and Wake had 160. The Tar Heels led in passing yardage, 89-31.

Cummings attempted only ten passes and completed six for 84 yards. DeCantis got the other 25 yards. Gaca was the big runner for the Tar Heels, grinding out 90 yards in 16 carriers. Cummings had 21 and Goff 20.

Piano Concert Set On Nov. 5

A concert of Bach, Beethoven and Brahms by Chapel Hill pianist William S. Newman will be presented on Tuesday, Nov. 5, as the next in the Tuesday Evening Series at UNC.

Dr. Newman's recital of works by "the three B's" will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall. The Tuesday evening programs are open to the public without charge.

Included in the program will be the Fifteen Two-Part Inventions of Bach, the E-flat Sonata Op. 31, No. 3 of Beethoven, and the Seven Fantasias Op. 116 of Brahms.

Dr. Newman, on the UNC faculty since 1945, heads piano instruction in the Department of Music. A frequent guest artist in the south and midwest, Dr. Newman has written several texts as well as his recently completed work, "The Sonata in the Baroque Era."

Dollar Goes 'Long Way' At UNC School Of Public Health

By Robert H. Bartholomew

While it is true that a dollar doesn't go far these days, it goes a long way at the UNC School of Public Health.

Of the education dollars spent by the state, perhaps none have the purchasing power of those spent to train professional public health workers.

Public health workers are divided into two groups, those who have the professional training that is required for their jobs; and those who are untrained or partially trained.

Of the trained health educators in North Carolna, 100 per cent were trained at the UNC School of Public Health. Of the fully trained health workers, 75 per cent of health officers, 95 per cent of the public health nurses and 90 per cent of sanitarians were trained by the School of Public Health. Some 100 public health nurses are now approaching the trained status by going to summer school at UNC.

While such a record is impressive in itself, Tar Heel taxpayers will be more impressed to learn they pay only one-fifth of the sum required to operate the school. The remaining 80 per cent of the operating budget comes from outside sources, mostly from the U. S. Public Health Service.

There are approximately 1,500 public health workers in North Carolina. Of these, 1,000 work with city and county health departments and 500 are employed by the N. C. State Board of Health.

There are 67 local or county health departments in the state serving 100 counties. For instance, the District Health Department here in Chapel Hill serves Orange, Chatham, Person and Lee Counties.

During the past academic year there were 147 regular students enrolled in the School of Public Health. These students represented nine health and other professions, which included medicine, dentistry, nursing, education, engineering, business administration, statistics nutrition and laboratory technicians.

The UNC school is largely a graduate school with three fourths of the students working on the graduate level while the remaining students are working on the undergraduate level.

While the training of 147 regular students, mostly on the graduate level, is a major task for any school, this does not reflect the true picture of the training program at the UNC School of Public Health.

In addition to these 555 University students, a total of 1,165 students outside of the University received instructions from the public health faculty. Most of these were public health workers who came to the UNC campus to take short courses during the summer months. Others were persons who took extension courses or field courses offered by the school.

The Division of Public Health was established at UNC in 1936. In 1940 it was designated a School of Public Health and empowered to grant graduate degrees. The school is now a unit within the UNC Division of Health Affairs, which also includes the UNC Schools of Dentistry, Medicine, Nursing, Pharmacy and N. C. Memorial Hospital.

First director of the School of Public Health was public health pioneer Dr. Milton J. Rosenau who, after serving as dean of the Harvard Scohol of Public Health, came to North Carolina in 1936 to help launch the new educational enterprise. Dr. Rosenau died in 1936 and Dr. E. G. McGavran, current dean, came to Chapel Hill as dean in 1947. Dr. McGavran's background includes several years of successful private medical practice followed by a variety of public health and teaching experiences.

Unfortunately, the School of Public Health is housed in 10 different buildings on the UNC campus, with the adminstrative offices and some of the classrooms being in the main Public Health and Medical building. The remainder of the school is located in four temporary World War II buildings, two Quonset huts, the old waterworks building and other buildings of the University.

DR. E. C. MCGAVRAN

Fortunately, the active cooperation the school enjoys throughout the state is nearly as widespread as are its buildings on the campus. Members of the State Board of Health in Raleigh give lectures and students are taught the functions of a health organization on the state level. Relationships are maintained with the N. C. Memorial Hospital here, the Institute of Statistics at N. C. State College in Raleigh, with Duke Hospital in Durham and with Watts Hospital in Durham.

The staffs of the U. S. Public Health Service, the Children's Bureau and other agencies of the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare participate in the teaching program of the School of Public Health through lectures, discussions, consultation and research. The personnel of the County Health Departments of Alamance, Chatham, Guilford and Randolph Counties act as field teachers for various courses in public health offered by the school.

This year marks the 21st birthday of the School of Public Health. It might be said that it has reached its majority or its full legal age. From its modest beginning 21 years ago, with a faculty of four and a state appropriation of $4,500, the UNC School of Public Health has grown into one of the leading institutions of its kind in the nation.

Test your personality power

(A Freud in the hand is worth two in the bush!)

	YES	NO
1. Do you chase butterflies in preference to other creatures of Nature?	☐	☐
2. Do you believe that making money is evil?	☐	☐
3. Do you think Italian movie actresses are over-rated? (Women not expected to answer this question.)	☐	☐
4. Do you buy only the things you can afford?	☐	☐

8. Do you think fads and fancy stuff can ever take the place of mildness and flavor in a cigarette?	☐	☐

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, Winston-Salem, N. C.

If you answered "No" to all questions, you obviously smoke Camels—a real cigarette. Only 6 or 7 "No" answers mean you better get onto Camels fast. Fewer than 6 "No's" and it really doesn't matter what you smoke. Anything's good enough!

But if you want a real smoke, make it Camels. Only Camel's exclusive blend of costly tobaccos tastes so rich, smokes so good and mild. No wonder more people today smoke Camels than any other cigarette. How about you?

Carolina Quarterbacks David Reed And Curtis Hathaway

The Tar Heels were without the services of Reed in yesterday's 14-7 victory over the Wake Forest Demon Deacons, winless thus far this season. Reed has been suspended from the Carolina squad by Coach Jim Tatum for "disciplinary" reasons.

Third Annual Rod And Gun Outing Now Slated To Be Held On Tuesday

The third annual Rod and Gun Meet, sponsored by the Intramurals Dept. will be held in the Durham Wildlife Club Area on Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Two previous attempts to hold this meet within the past three weeks have been cancelled because of the "flu."

According to Tommy Johnson spokesman for the Intramurals Dept., practice for the various events will begin at 12 noon. Transportation for all interested participants will be provided, and all necessary equipment will be furnished by the Intramurals Department and the NROTC. Further information concerning this event, including a map indicating the best method of reaching the Wildlife Club Area from the campus, will appear in Tuesday morning's Daily Tar Heel.

The events being sponsored for competition are fishing, archery, target rifle shooting, trap shooting, and bait casting. Awards will be presented winners in each event.

STAFF MEETING

There will be a general staff meeting of the Carolina Quarterly in the Graham Memorial office Wednesday at 4:15 p.m., it was announced today by the editor of that publication.

National Football League Led By Five-Way First Spot Deadlock

By the Associated Press

The National Football League reaches the fifth week of the season today with five teams in a deadlock for first place in the Eastern and Western conferences, and a strong possibility that it may take some time to unravel the pieces.

With six games on the schedule five of them involving clubs battling to stay at the top of their divisions. Each has a 3-1 record—the New York Giants and Cleveland Browns in the Eastern Conference, and the Baltimore Colts, Detroit Lions and San Francisco 49ers in the West.

This is the way they square off this afternoon:

Detroit at Los Angeles Rams.

Green Bay Packers at Baltimore.

Chicago Bears at San Francisco.

Cleveland at Chicago Cardinals.

Washington Redskins at New York.

Philadelphia Eagles at Pittsburgh Steelers.

Four games call for re-matches of earlier meetings between the teams, all played just two weeks ago. On that occasion the 49ers edged the Bears 21-17, the Colts walloped the Packers 45-17, the Lons squeezed out a 10-7 decision over the Rams, and the Giants clowned the Redskins 24-20.

The last two unbeaten teams were pushed off the lofty perch last week when Philadelphia won its first game, a 17-7 decision over Cleveland, and Detroit rallied with three touchdowns in the 4th period to down Baltimore 31-27. Rookie Sonny Jurgenson from Duke sparked the Eagles' upset, while costly Colt errors set up the Detroit victory. Bobby Lane pitched a 29-yard scoring pass to Hopalong Cassidy in the last 45 seconds, after John Unitas had thrown four TD aerials for Baltimore.

Filling in for the ailing Bobby Thomason, Jurgenson passed for one touchdown and scored the second himself.

Cleveland, which has won 12 of 14 previous meetings with the Cardinals, goes into Chicago with its guard up high. The only games the Browns ever lost to the Cards came in two meetings a year ago, and Ollie Matson and Lamar McHan finally broke loose a week ago to spark Chicago to a 44-14 rout of Washington.

New York, which pulverized Pittsburgh 35-0 with Chuck Conerly leading the way, split with Washington last fall, but the Giants are an 11-point favorite this time.

The Chicago Bears, who defeated Los Angeles last week for their first victory when Willie Galimore, rookie halfback, scored four touchdowns, are three and one-half over San Francisco. The 49ers defeated Green Bay last week 24-14 when veteran Y. A. Tittle passed for two touchdowns and plunged for another.

Cleveland is two and one-half over the Cardinals, with Baltimore 10 over Green Bay. Los Angeles, which can be tough at home is three and one-half over Detroit while Pittsburgh is three and one-half over Philadelphia.

Sam Ranzino Employed In Driver Training

RALEIGH, Oct. 25—(AP)—Remember Sam Ranzino, a basketball player at North Carolina State College during 1947-1951 who made All America teams?

Ranzino is back with North Carolina. He went on the payroll today as a driver education representative of the State Department of Motor Vehicles.

Ranzino served as a first liteutenant with the army in Korea from 1952 to 1954. He obtained his master's degree in education from the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill this year.

Driver education representatives with the Motor Vehicles Department have a starting salary of $332 per month. Their primary duty is to train and certify school bus drivers, assist in organizing local safety clubs, and participate in other highway safety programs. Ranzino has been assigned to the Raleigh district.

Oops! Thompson's S.A.E.

It was erroneously reported in a soccer article Saturday that Mike Thompson, center forward for the varsity soccer team, is a member of Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity. Thompson, instead, is a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity. Coleman Barks, right wing for the squad, is a member of Phi Delta Theta fraternity.

RESULTS OF OTHER SATURDAY ENCOUNTERS:

Round-Up From Across The Nation

RALEIGH, N. C., Oct. 26 —(AP)—North Carolina State, behind by 14 points, refused to crumble before Duke's vaunted offense today and roared back behind clutch passing to tie favored Blue Devils, 14-14, in an Atlantic Coast Conference football game here today.

The tooth-and-nail last half struggle had the sellout crowd of 21,000 limp at the finish. Thousands more watched the battle over a regional television network of 20 stations.

State's magnificent defense smashed down a Duke thrust late in the fourth period after the Blue Devils had carried to the Wolfpack's 1-foot line. The deadlock left Duke and State tied for first place in the ACC standings.

Despite the tie, Duke still has a good chance to represent the conference in the Orange Bowl against Oklahoma on New Year's Day. State is banned from playing in post-season bowl games because of a suspension by the NCAA.

Duke quarterback Bob Brodhead scored one touchdown and passed for another. The Blue Devils roared 62 yards to score in 17 plays late in the opening quarter with Brodhead going over from the 1. Halfback Wray Carlton converted the first of two extra points.

In the second quarter, Duke scored on a 47-yard pass play from Brodhead to end Bill Thompson who caught the ball on the 32 and raced over standing.

Only 38 seconds were remaining before the half when N. C. State scored on a 52-yard pass play from quarterback Tom Katich to halfback Dick Christy, who took the ball on the 32 and outraced Duke's secondary. Dick Hunter kicked the first of two extra points.

COLLEGE PARK, Md., Oct. 26 —(AP)— Tennessee poured through Maryland's worn down giants for two last quarter touchdowns today and a 16-0 football victory.

The trim, hard-hitting Volunteers nursed a first quarter safety scored on a blocked kick until constant banging paid off for their fourth straight triumph. Tennessee's only defeat this season was a 7-0 loss to Auburn.

Fullback Tommy Bronson scored Tennessee's first touchdown on a one-yard plunge to cap a 54-yard drive led by tailback Bobby Gordon.

Bronson set up the next touchdown by tearing 51 yards to the Maryland 29. Coach Bowden Wyatt let his fresh second stringers take it the rest of the way, with Carl Smith skirting Maryland's right end for the last nine yards.

Tennessee was in Maryland territory throughout most of the game after end Tommy Potts blocked a kick that sailed back out of the end zone for a first quarter safety.

Maryland, losing its fourth game in six, was able to carry the ball pass midfield only once to the Tennessee 37.

Gordon, Tennessee's one-man gang buster with his passing, running and punting, ripped the Maryland defense apart late in the third quarter when he launched the Volunteers goalward from his 45.

The 190-pound tailback carried the ball 7 out of 10 plays for 39 yards before turning the touchdown honor over to Bronson.

Maryland spent the entire first half fighting Tennessee away from the goal after the Terps were unable to cash in on a boner at the start of the game.

Stockton Adkins and Bill Anderson of Tennessee evidently forgot the opening kickoff was anybody's ball after it passed midfield. They watched the ball bounce around in front of them and Maryland guard Rod Breedlove pounced on it at the Tennessee 18.

Tennessee refused to be rattled, however, and made Maryland give back the ball inches from the goal.

A quick kick by Gordon sailed 57 yards to the Maryland 16 and set up the blocked punt scoring situation. Both Tennessee ends, Landon Darty and Potts, stormed in on Ed Cooke trying to punt from his goal and the ball bounced off Potts through the end zone.

Tennessee later moved inside the Maryland 10 yard line three times to keep knocking for a touchdown and getting no answer.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 26-(AP)-Tom Forrestal pitched four touchdown passes for Navy, two in the first six and one-half minutes, and the Midshipmen marked up a decisive 35-7 victory over an outclassed Penn team today.

It was Navy's fifth victory in six games this season and Penn's fifth straight defeat. But it was Forrestal's passing and Penn's lack of a consistent attack that made the difference. Navy called on its second unit rather freely and Penn fought the subs to a standstill.

Even when the regulars returned, Navy seemed to have lost some of the Oklahoma-like speed and precision that marked the early minutes. For a while it appeared the aroused Penn defense might stop the Middies' first stringers, just as it had stopped the reserves but Forrestal unlimbered his pitching arm for a third touchdown just before the half ended and another in the third quarter.

Halfback Harry Hurst caught three of Forrestal's payoff pitches, one for 53 yards and two for 12 each. A screen pass from Forrestal to fullback Ray Wellborn was good for 44 yards and another touchdown. The final TD came on a two-yard plunge by third string halfback Dick Zembruzuski.

Penn got its touchdown on a one-yard plunge by Charley McKinney in the last minute after a pass interference penalty had given the Quakers the ball on the Navy one. John Oakhill converted.

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Oct. 26 —(AP)—Unbeaten Dartmouth combined speed, versatility and a demoralizing defense today for a 26-0 victory over Harvard decided by four lightning first half scoring thrusts.

Two clever halfback to quarterback laterals highlighted the early Indian onslaught, which provided the fifth straight triumph of the season for the Hanover eleven which is the only major unbeaten, untied team in the East.

Dartmouth has won eight in a row dating back to last season.

In the third minute of the game, sophomore halfback John Crouthamel took a handoff from quarterback Dave Bradley and knifed between the Harvard right tackle and right end.

Just as he got by the line of scrimmage, Crouthamel lateraled to Bradley who raced the final 26 yards around end on a slick maneuver which capped a 73 yard march with the opening kickoff.

Queen To Be Named At Dance

Who will be the Homecoming Queen?

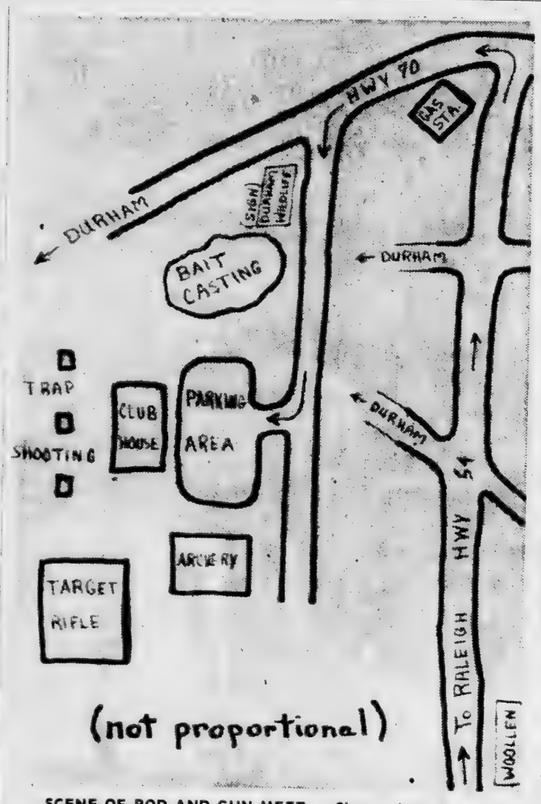
No one will know until the night of the Homecoming Hop which will be this Friday in Woollen Gym after the pep rally.

Each boys's dorm and fraternity house has been asked by GMAB and the University Club, co-sponsors of the homecoming weekend, to nominate a candidate for the Queen.

The court of ten will be picked by a panel of six judges this Thursday at 4 p. m. in Gerrard Hall. The names of the ten finalists will be kept secret until the dance.

At this time they will be presented, and afterwards those at the dance will vote for the Homecoming Queen, who will be presented and crowned at the end of the dance.

The candidates will be escorted to the dance by a member of the dorm or fraternity which is sponsoring her. The queen and her court will also be presented at Saturday's game, where they will be escorted on the field by members of Scabbard and Blade.



Quite a few dorms and fraternities have not yet let the committee for the dance know who their candidate is, according to Mary Moore Mason, co-chairman of the Homecoming Hop.

These fraternities and dorms are requested to inform the Graham Memorial Information office immediately who their candidates are. Wednesday at 3 p. m. is the deadline for entries.

Besides the Homecoming Dance, numerous activities have been planned for the weekend. There will be a parade, containing the Homecoming Queen candidates on Friday afternoon; that night there will be a pep rally in Woollen Gym.

On Saturday there will be numerous half-time activities at the game. After the game, there will be reception for UNC alumni in Graham Memorial.

SCENE OF ROD AND GUN MEET — Shown above is the scene of the third annual Rod and Gun Field Meet staged today from 2 to 5:30 p.m. at the Durham Wildlife Club Area. The event is sponsored by the Intramural Dept. In the lower right-hand corner is Woollen Gym.

'Rod And Gun' Event Set For 2 P.M. Today

The third annual co-recreational Rod and Gun Field Meet will be held today at 2 p.m. at the Durham Wildlife Club Area.

Entries are expected to exceed the 100 mark in the popular outdoor event sponsored by the Intramural Department. Archery, trap shooting, target rifle shooting and baiteasting are the featured events.

A plaque will be awarded to the team winner and individual trophies to the individual winners in each of the events.

A trophy will also be given to the fishing contest. The department wil provide equipment for all events. The only charge will be in the trap shooting and target rifle.

A fee of $3.25 will be charged to cover cost of shells and birds in trap shooting. Target rifle entrant will be charged 40c which will cover cost of the ammunition.

Four students may compose a team in the competition. The team does not have to represent any specific organization. Entries will be accepted at the Wildlife Area until 2 p.m.

Dental School will be the defending champion in team competition. Clete Oakley, Sigma Nu, will be defending his title in the trap shooting event while John Crawford, also a Sigma Nu, will be on hand to (attempt to) win the target rifle competition for the second year in a row.

Transportation will be provided for those who do not have rides. Anyone needing a ride is asked to call the Intramural Office.

Socialist Lashes At Faubus

"A nation cannot be a nation without equality of rights for all," six time Socialist Party Presidential candidate Norman Thomas said last night before a packed house in Carroll Hall in the first Carolina forum speech of the year.

"I do not consider civil rights in any of its aspects a sectional or regional issue," Thomas added. He cited cases of interracial friction in such cities as New York, Chicago, and Detroit in support of this view.

Delving largely with the problem of white-Negro conflict in his talk, Thomas said that at an earlier time in American history the doctrine of "separate but equal" might have had its place. But, he felt, in this modern age with its climate of opinion, this doctrine must be discarded.

He said that he has not always been in favor of the Supreme Court's decisions and even at one time in his political career sponsored a resolution to limit the powers of the Court. He however, said that it is never right to question the decision of the Court, but rather if an honest disagreement should occur the legislative background to both the Court and the Court's action should be called into question.

He maintained that the Supreme Court decision involving segregation of public schools was right, and that no individual, governor, or state should take it upon itself to override the decision. He added that the police power of any state is there necessarily to protect those who abide by the law, and defend the public against those who go against the law.

Thomas added that no man in the course of recent American history has taken so much upon himself and destroyed so much good will for America abroad as Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas.

He quoted a U. N. delegate who said when Sputnik was launched that it was a pity that Sputnik had to come on the heels of Little Rock.

So great, Thomas felt, was the effect of the showing of American held in support of segregation. One disclaim the truth of many beliefs such belief, he assailed, was the Biblical notion of God defining the boundaries of the separate races. He said that despite God's setting the bounds, the Negroes made it to America under white auspices.

The belief that intermarriage should be a deterrent to integration was assaulted by Thomas, who felt that intermarriage would not necesarily follow, but that despite legislation to the contrary interracial unions, which were of necessity extra-legal and perhaps clandestine, had taken place.

IFC Discloses Vote Results

The Interfraternity Council yesterday announced the election of Jim Kimzey, representative from Sigma Nu, as chairman of the IDC Court. Kimzey will replace Jerry Oppenheimer, who has held the office for two and a half years.

Also announced were the elections of Dennis McCay as clerk and Garrett Folger as the court representative to the Student Council. McCay, a Sigma Chi, succeeds ATO Representative Sandy Sanders, and Folger, Zeta Psi, will replace Chuck May of Beta Theta Pi.

Newly elected members of the Court are: Wayne Venters, Phi Gamma Delta, and Folger.

Outgoing chairman Oppenheimer expressed his complete satisfaction with the newly elected officers. "I heartily congratulate the Court and chairman Kimzey," he said, "and I expect great accomplishments from them.

Suspension Of Players Is Studied

BY ANN FRYE

The UNC administration yesterday upheld Coach Jim Tatum's suspension of three Tar Heel football players and said he has "jurisdiction to determine the consequences of training rule violations."

The Chancellor said that Tatum's responsibility is only to report any possible violation of the Honor Code to the Student Government.

Tatum can recommend to the Scholarship Committee that the scholarship held by the student be discontinued, but the final decision is up to the Committee, according to Chancellor Aycock.

In commenting on the Cobb Dormitory experiment in which all football players live in that dorm, Chancellor Aycock said the experiment will be evaluated at the end of the year and its worth will be determined then.

Student Government officials yesterday were studying a petition submitted to the Chancellor's Cabinet calling for investigation of Daily Tar Heel editorial policy during the recent influenza siege here.

The petition—reputedly signed by only eight persons—was turned over to the top administrative body of the University during the meeting yesterday.

In other business before the Cabinet, Chancelor Aycock said that no decision has been reached on whether the football caravan weekends will be continued in the future.

Student Body President Sonny Evans presented to the Cabinet three problems to be discussed at the administrative-student level:

1) Since the honor system of reporting clas absence had proved successful during the flu crisis, Evans requested that the cut system reporting for all regular sick absences:

2) Evans urged consideration on the question of classes being resumed after Chirstmas on January 2 in view of allowing traveling time for people living far away. However, it was stated at the meeting that any calendar adjustment would be impossible, since each class must meet a minimum of 45 times.

3) On the flu crisis, Evans said that the (policies) of the Daily Tar Heel had not expresed the opinions and feelings of the Student Body.

On the pprogress of the parking lot near Kenan Stadium, J. A. Branch, business manager, told the Cabinet he expected it might be finished in late November.

DR. FRANZ POLGAR

Polgar's Show Is Here Today

Franz Polgar, internationally known hypnotist who has thrilled millions with his mystifying antics, will perform his "Fun With The Mind" show here tonight.

The renowed hypnotist will be featured in a Memorial Hall program slated to begin at 8 p. m.

He will present at fast-moving, two-hour program of mental gymnastics that has both delighted and baffled audiences throughout the United States.

Tonight's presentation will be a repeat performance for Polgar, who has amazed former UNC audiences with his versatile feats of hypnosis and trickery which have been viewed by literally millions of persons.

His personal appearance displays a breathtaking performance of telepethy, memory feats and hypnosis, thrillingly presented with wit and humor that add color to his appealing shows.

Virgil Miers, Dallas Times Herald columnist, wrote about Dr. Polgar: ". . . The show is hilariously funny simply because it makes some of your neighbors do the darndest things."

Other critics have said of Polgar, "You've got to see him to believe it."

Tickets are on sale at Graham Memorial, YMCA, Carolina Inn, Danziger's and at Pace's in Glen Lennox. Student tickets are available for $1.

Delta Sigma Pi's Tour Textile Mill

Members of Delta Sigma Pi, national business administration fraternity, toured the White Oak Branch of Cone Mills, Inc., in Greensboro last week. This trip was the monthly professional tour of the fraternity.

A group of 50 fraternity members was shown through cotton warehouses and through all stages in the process of turning raw cotton into the finished product.

Freshmen, Juniors, Legislators

PRINGLE PIPKIN

Around 350 members of the University Party spent three and a half hours last night nominating student legislature representatives, freshmen, and junior class officers for the coming election.

The first run-off for the nomination of the treasurer of the freshman class ended in a tie between Angus Duff and Woody Fordham. On the next ballot Fordham defeated Duff.

Pankie Connell win the nomination for social cairman of the freshman class by acclamation.

For a six months seat in Dorm Men's IV Charlie Gray was nominated by acclamation as was Dee Donnorummo for a six months seat in Dorm Men's III.

Jerry Oppenheimer, Ed Levy, Ben Levy, and Jerry Blumenthal were nminated by acclamation to one year seats in Town Men's III. For two six months seats in this district no nomination was made.

For a one year seat in Town Men's IV (Victory Village) Fred Harris by a show of hands was nominated over Bill Williams.

For the coming campaign John Minter has been appointed publicity chairman for UP, and Jerry Jones, UP vice-chairman, will serve as campaign co-ordinator for the party.

World In Brief

Shakeup Reported

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct 28 (AP)—The Soviet union proposed today that disarmament talks be switched from big power secret meetings to a public 82-nation "little assembly."

In a surprise move, the Soviet Union urged the abolishment of the U. N.'s 12-nation disarmament commission and its 5—nation subcommittee, which has been carrying on private talks since 1954.

Petition Denied

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (AP) Morton Sobell, convicted with Ethel and Julius Rosenberg of atomic espionage, got still another setback from the Supreme court today in his legfight to get of prison.

The court rejected without comment a petition asking that is reverse itself and grant Sobell a reair force doctrine and what they view of his conviction.

Russian Proposal

LONDON, Oct. 28 (AP)Soviet communist party leaders rushed to urgent conferences in Moscow today, informed diplomatic sources disclosed. Party Cheif Nikita Khrushchev was reported calling the signals for announcement of a political shakeup.

While the world speculated about the future of Marshal Georgi Zhukov, an important change in the Soviet political setup was clearly emerging.

Contest Will Feature Guessing Of Yardage

A new feature of homecoming this year will be a "Ten Yards Gained" contest, sponsored by the GMAB Tournaments and Contests Committee.

In this contest the person who comes closest to guessing the number of yards gained by UNC and Tennessee Saturday will be awarded a $15 gift certificate from Milton's Clothing Cuboard.

Entrants in the contest have been asked to fill out the blank below, giving the predicted number of yards for both teams and the number of yards expected to be gained by Carolina.

In case of a tie, the person who comes closest to guessing the total number of yards for Carolina will be declared the winer.

The $15 gift certificate will be presented the winner after the game Saturday at a reception in Graham Memorial. The presentation will be made by Nose Jones, a cheerleader during the Charlie Justice era.

Entry blanks may be dropped in a designated ballot box at Y-Court or sent through the campus mail to the GM Information Desk.

Deadline o ferntries is Friday at noon.

West Calls Home After Landing In Bermuda

MOREHEAD CITY, N. C., Oct. 28 (AP)—Disc jockey Melvin West, who telephoned here after landing in Bermuda today, said he regretted causing so much anxiety, which included a widespread search during his 11 days at sea in a motorboat.

He said he planned to fly back to the States Wednesday by way of New York.

The 28-year-old West, sounding fit and cheerful to radio associates who got the call, said that but for a broken feedline he could have made the voyage on his own "standing on my head."

He said he "had several long talks with the Lord" as the experimental voyage extended beyond its initial 40-hour schedule for the 580-miles from here to Bemuda.

West praised the Coast Guard for effective search methods and "really doing a wonderful job."

He gave these details of the trip:

The first night out, extremely heavy rains forced him to dump fresh water and use its container to bail. The reason he hailed a freighter Oct. 21—four days after setting out—was to get water and matches.

West said he had no idea a search going on at the time.

Navigation, he said was by radio triangulation based on a radio signal from here that guided him for 400 miles.

The fuel line accident came just before he was sighted Sunday. Winds of up to 40 miles an hour caused—a gas can to break loose and smash his main tank fuel line. West said 35 gallons of gas were lost, but he continued hand priming methods to keep going.

The young father of three children said he got sleep mostly by dozing in a posture that locked his steering wheel, but managed to get stretches of four and five hours of sleep by dropping a sea anchor.

West said he got a good sunburn, was very tired and sore, but a good meal aboard the cutter Rockaway did wonders.

When the cutter arrived at Bermuda, West said, some 500 persons plus newsmen, were waiting on the dock.

He commented the trip was "surprisingly easy" and comfortable, though pretty rough at times."

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Excuses And Class Cuts: 'Sit On Mama's Wee Knee'

Student body President Sonny Evans has suggested that students be allowed to submit excuses for classes missed due to illness without University Infirmary approval.

Evans made his suggestion at yesterday's meeting of student government leaders with the Chancellor's Cabinet. His recommendation must be approved by the Committee on Class Attendance of the Faculty Council.

We suggest that Evans' proposal be implemented for these reasons:

(1) The University Infirmary—especially recently—has been burdened with an inundating overflow of students.

(2) Many students have minor illnesses and organic disturbances for which they do not need protracted medical care, and in many cases a one-day rest from class would remedy their problem.

(3) University students are mature enough to know when they should attend classes and when they shouldn't, and they should be allowed to miss class occasionally with only their own word to individual instructors sufficing to excuse them for the absence.

(4) Most instructors are overburdened with academic work and shouldn't have to go through the monotony of submitting notification of infirmary-approved excuses to the University officialdom for official records and approval.

In short, any procedure which would simplify the current complicated and maternal class attendance regulation should be greatly appreciated, assuredly, by students, faculty, infirmary officials and administration.

It's up to President Evans' committee—now being appointed to study the proposal—and the faculty committee to formulate and approve a new class attendance regulation.

Last year's proposal, which left class cuts up to individual instructors and departments merely clouded the whole class cuts set up.

Evans' plan should be implemented immediately if not sooner.

Maternal class cuts regulations —such as University students have to endure—are entirely out of place.

An anachronism from grammar school.

Soviet's Slobbering And Soaring Shaggy Doggie

Have you heard the latest shaggy dog story.

Russia's sending a shaggy dog into space.

An Associated Press release reports:

"Kudryavka offers no resistance when laboratory workers dress her in a special suit and attach the tiny instruments which will record her breathing, her blood pressure and heartbeats during the flight."

Now we really doubt that any dog, Fido or Kudryavka, would "enjoy" being suited up in space helmet and accompanying suit, rigged with instruments from head to toe, shot into outer space with dismal prospects of ever touching earth again.

There are far-reaching connotations attached to the Soviet Union's space exploration, and its apparent lead in the sought conquest of outer space. Russia is making political and propagandistic hay while Sputnik sputniks or fails to sputnik.

And United States scientists are hampered by security regulations and lack of proper financial backing.

But the propaganda release from the Soviet Union which rants and raves about a little shaggy dog's enjoyment of projection into outer space emphasizes the ridiculous nature of Russia's public relations.

Westward-Ho Young Jerky

Disc Jerky Melvin West has been located 165 miles from his destination—Bermuda.

The Jacksonville Jerky has, of course, caused the Coast Guard no small amount of pain in the posterior—and all for publicity, obviously.

Impossible Melvin on his 15 foot boat "Impossible" has also given taxpayers a large, economy-sized slash in the purse nerve.

It is, of course, admirable to see a little of that famous, old American individualism evidenced in West's wayward attempt to reach Bermuda, something about spirit of exploration or wander-lust or some other glowing term.

But when life, limb and pocketbook nerve are all slashed and endangered as a result of one man's publicity search, then it's time for governmental action.

Go west, young ham . . .

Modern Living Life & Limb

And again Modern Living on the University campus suffers a blow below the parallel of propriety.

Students stumbling down the concrete steps leading from the Lenoir Hall parking lot to Raleigh Road are being endangered as a result of just plain, no darn lights.

And students making the ascent from Raleigh Road in quest of food at Lenoir or snacks at the Pine Room are discouraged and disgusted. And we don't blame 'em if they don't go at all.

The University Buildings and Grounds Dept. should remedy this situation before students with broken knees and skinned shins open up in open rebellion.

May be even this would work. A student march on Buildings and Grounds — a crusade of illumination.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

U.S. Befriends Or Defriends Hungarians?

Curtis Gams

Hanging on the walls of the streets of the cities of Hungary on October 23, 1957, the first anniversary of the unsuccessful Hungarian Revolt, were pictures of Russian soldiers — smiling. Underneath these pictures was the caption, "True Friend."

Compared to the record of the U. S. with respect to friendship towards the Hungarian people, the appellation of the Russian soldiers beneath their pictures represents a truism.

One of the primary assets of any friendship are the qualities of sincerity and candor. The Russian soldier says sincerely and with complete frankness that if the Hungarian citizen thinks and acts contrary to the Moscow line, he will suffer hardship and even perhaps death, but if the Hungarian thinks and acts consistently with the Moscow line, the soldier will be his protector. The soldier can afford to be this frank, for his being in Hungary is nothing more than the guarantee that all Moscow dicta are followed.

However, even this much candor is lacking in the U. S. State Department. It was not too many moons before the Hungarian Revolt than John Foster Dulles brayed about the "new" American policy of "massive retaliation" for all the enslaved peoples of the world and preservation or freedom for all those not under bondage. These were, it proved, no more than words.

There is perhaps no justification for war at all, but the U. S. has fought in wars with less justification than the Hungarian Revolt gave it. If the Dulles policy was to be followed, then the U. S. had no alternative but to fight with the Hungarians against the Russians, or at the very least to supply them with arms and equipment. This would have been upholding freedom in the world.

It would also have been calling Russia's bluff, and conceivably could have led to war. Yet, if the U. S. had been afraid of war, then John Foster Dulles should never have made his policy pronouncement. He would then have had nothing to go back on and to ultimately rescind a year later.

To make things much worse, Rep. Walter, co-author of that unfair, unequal law that goes by the name of the McCarran-Walter Immigration Act, stepped on the scene and proceeded to try to limit Hungarian refugee access to the U. S. Of the over 100,000 Hungarian refugees, Mr. Walter was willing to let the U. S. take 5,000. This gave to the world a sparkling picture of the U. S., as a protector of those who have escaped enslavement.

Ultimately the U. S. took several times that many refugees, but the initial limitation has remained in the minds of Europeans ever since and has maligned U. S. foreign policy, at least in part. Moreover, it showed to the people of the world that the U. S. was not willing to lift a little finger unless the cause stood to benefit the U. S. in the long run. What the U. S. overlooked was the ill-will that will hurt the U. S. in the long run.

Finally, another glowing tribute to American democracy was framed when 20 per cent of these refugees, after coming to the U. S. left to return to enslavement in Hungary. They left because they could not find jobs in the U. S. which were suitable to their talent, because they could not join labor unions and thus were persona non grata in many jobs, because they were given no aid in overcoming the language barrier and were outcasts, because they were given no aid in getting adjusted to a way of life very foreign to their own, and because they were frankly unhappy.

This may suggest to the U. S. many revisions in its immigration policy, but what it suggests to the rest of the world is that the U. S. is not the best place to live, as it advertises.

It also suggests that the U. S., although it has many of the freedoms these Hungarians fought for, is lacking certain basic essentials for living and certain basic understandings among people that would make life in the U. S. bearable for these Hungarians.

The whole picture on the U. S. side of the ledger is drab enough so that all the satellite countries will not for a long time in the future attempt to question Russian authority in any major way. It stands as a distinct defeat for America in the eyes of those who need America's help most—the enslaved.

The brutality and carnage of the Hungarian revolt, in which thousands of Hungarians lost their lives fighting to breath the air of freedom, will be long remembered as one of the most horrible episodes in the twentieth Century. The part of the U. S. will be remembered less long, at least the U. S. hopes. The part of the U. S., however, was at best obscene.

"Yoo-Hoo, Everybody!"

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Reader Lampoons Daily Tar Heel Ed

EDITOR:

At times, one wonders whether the Carolina system of voting is a valid indication of which is the better man for particular office. Consider: last spring, popular Neil Bass was pitted against unknown Charles Sloan for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel.

A quick look at the masthead shows Bass won. We do not say which man was the better; we merely say Bass won. Since that time, editor Bass has turned out some of the most ridiculous editorials, in our opinion, in the history of the Daily Tar Heel. Ridiculous, yes, but they have gone unridiculed. What could have happened to all the letters which have been sent to the readers' column, which has been renamed by the editor, is anybody's guess. Were they, in the editor's belief, too "personal?" Was there not room? Were they so poorly written that they would have looked bad on the edit page?

The editor has angered many by his simple tactics of avoiding criticism in "his" paper. The policy of this paper has long been to print all letters, with an appropriate headline, with no cutting, except when, in the editor's belief, a letter is libelous, slanderous, or in poor taste. And poor taste does not mean "anything with which the editor disagrees."

The editor has fallen into the habit of putting his own feelings into the headlines over letters to the editor, and tacking negative statement under the column. Previous editors have kept their thoughts in the left hand side of the edit page, and have given the reader a chance to speak his mind. Bass is apparently unwilling to let a reader have the last, or best, word.

We refer specifically to last Saturday's Daily Tar Heel in which a letter by one John Yardley in which he retorted to a letter by Grayson Mills. Yardley's column was titled, "Yardley Yodels and Gripes." Is this the head Yardley would have wanted? Under the letter was printed the following: It is obvious that Yodeling Yardley likes nothing or nobody. Vice versa from the editorial office.

Did Yardley want that added to his views? The editor seems to forget that he was elected, that the Daily Tar Heel is not his paper, and that there are certain ethics and standard practices which he should be following.

One of the editor's campaign promises was that of "no Afghanistanism." no world news. Friend, glance over thy last few issues of the paper for a starter, and count the inches of world news, or outside news. Staggering. We do not know, but it would be our guess that news of campus activities could have filled some of that space.

WALLY KURALT

(The phrase "sour grapes" most aptly describes Kuralt, who last spring served as campaign manager for defeated Daily Tar Heel editorship candidate Charlie Sloan. As for not printing letters—even occasionally in poor taste—the printing of Kuralt's bitter and trite personal attack disproves this accusation. The Editor)

OF WANTON WAR:

Dutch Dealt Dike Demonstration . .

Walt Thomas

This lean young man sat across the table from me with his long slender Dutch hands clasped in a very sincere, almost prayer-like manner. As we sat there in the little foggy windowed restaurant, we spoke of the girls he had introduced me to that day. When the waitress came he had unclasped his hands for a moment and smiled at her with his extremely bad and crooked teeth.

He was very ugly in a gaunt and displaced way. But people, especially the girls we saw on the streets smiled back at him, maybe they felt that he needed their smiles. He talked then about how he had gotten his job with the Canadian electric company. While he drank his tea I watched him replace his cup and reclasp his hands, wriggling his long sprung fingers into place between the knuckles.

He was very tall and slow, his clothes always were too short nd his ties were too wide for my

. . . WITH PRAYER-LIKE POSE . . .

American taste. But I had immediately like him and had learned to admire him. He hadn't much accent because he had studied English in Holland. His voice had grown thick and gutteral only when we had talked of how he came to this country as a displaced person.

He told me of how his father had owned an inn in a small Dutch village. He spoke of two older brothers both killed in action, and of his nine-year-old sister who had been afraid of the planes. He told me of his mother and how she had truly scrubbed the sidewalks in front of the inn. He told me of the happy times he had known in the village, then of the despondent times when the old men had gathered in the Inn and, smoking, had talked in low tones of how the war was going.

Clasping his hands tighter he told me of hearing the radio reports of how the Nazi units were drawing closer to his homeland. Then how one afternoon when he was 13 his father had summoned the people in the inn to the door. His father pointed out to them a cloud of dust and even as they watched, a small column of German motorcycle troops droned across the flat countryside and into the village.

The Germans had taken over everything. They had shot some defiant people and had set up their headquarters in the inn. The Germans stayed there almost three weeks and eventually shot his father when the radio was discovered in the chimney.

When the order came by word of mouth to the village of the date that the dikes were to be opened the old men of the village had renewed their lives by taking those of the young German advance guard unit. He had spoken of how the sea came in to ruin everything after the women and children had been boated away at night. He had never seen his mother or little sister again. He smiled only ruefully as he assured me that the sea had stopped the Germans.

Later on the street outside the little restaurant he introduced me to a pretty blond girl with whom he often played chess. He laughed an awful lot with us there on the street. And I decided he would never have to tell me anything else about the war. I wouldn't ask, because I liked to see him laugh a great deal.

NORMAN THOMAS INTERVIEWED

Sputnik Said 'Very Bad' For U.S.

By CURTIS GANS

Russia's firing of Sputnik "was the answer to a Democrat's prayer to counterract the effect of Gov. Faubus", six time Socialist candidate for president Norman Thomas said in an interview held yesterday in the Carolina Inn.

He said that the ramifications of the satellite in world affairs was "very bad" for the United States. Not only, he said, was this a rather significant scientific achievement, but it allowed the Russians to scrap their sixth Five Year Plan, which would have given the Russian citizen more food and comfort.

Thomas felt that the declaration by some high U. S. officials to the effect that the United States was not in a race with Russia was a "great mistake". He said there obviously was a race for satellite development and the size and scope of the Russian satellite is significant enough to give at least partial proof of Russia's claim to a successful Intercontinental Ballistics Missile.

In response to a question about whether he still felt the necessity of an active Socialist party in the United States, Thomas said he still thought the need was there, but at the present it was not feasible to run a candidate.

The problem of how to perpetuate the party when it is unable to run a candidate, Thomas thought, was the most serious question confronting the party.

Asked whether the increasing centralization of industry in the hands of fewer and fewer men and larger and larger corporations would indicate the necessity for federal control of industry, Thomas answered that he thought the situation being created was serious, but he felt that only crucial industries, such as the steel industry, should be brought under any sort of governmental control. "To say that we must subsidize industry in order to keep it small is very bad," Thomas said.

Thomas responded to a question concerning his view on what democracy should be by saying that "for all practical purposes" the American democracy is a good one, but the problem that confront the citizens is to improve upon it within its framework. He added that the people of America must be willing to accept restraints to their "too impulsive actions."

He added that America can no longer be governed by the "town meeting" type of government, but that the American must strive for a satisfactory substitute .He said he favors a limition of Senate debate, but none so stringent as is placed on the House of Representatives.

He feels he said, that a person's civil rights must not be infringed upon by any consideration of race, creed, color or religion. He added that here was a natural inequality of people due to the nature of their contributions to government in the realm of work,— physical and intellectual.

Thomas talked at length about the youth of America in the modern society of today. He said a number of today's youth possesses an "insensate" and purposeless cruetly that was not prevalent in earlier years. He said also that this cuts across economic bariers and destroys the idea that if the state provides adequate housing it will cut down on the indience of delinquency.

Thomas said he was concerned with the apparent drive in America toward conformity to a type of American perhaps best epitomized in the late Col. Robert McCormick's proclamation, "Be American!" He said perhaps the best illustration of this might be found in a study called "The Organization Man."

At he same time, he said he disliked the current trend in literature toward rebellion for rebellion's sake. He said there were too many "angry men"' who are angry for the sake of being angry.

He said part of the current revival of religion was part of this drive toward conformity, and in many respects the "revivals" is social rather than religious.

Thomas added that the drive of populations from cities to suburban areas was responsbile for part of the revival . He said the idea of a revival was good on the whole, but cautioned that many Americans do not know what they are reviving.

Stocking Fund To Help Needy

Chirstmas will again be made happier for many needy families in Orange County this year through the Empty Stocking fund sponsored by the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill.

This fund has provided Christmas boxes for hundreds for families in the area.

The family adoption plan will be followed this year. In accordance with it, participating organizations and individuals choose one or more families and pack boxes for them.

Organization or individual students interested in adopting a family or in contributing in any way to the drive may do so by contacting Mrs. Charles Dixon at 80955. This may be done at any time before December 9.

APO Schedules Meet Tonight

APO, national service fraternity of UNC, will meet tonight at 7:30 in the Rendezvous Room for an extended rush period, according to Ray Montgomery, publicity chairman of APO.

Flu has interrupted the rush program considerably; therefore, Montgomery said that "it is hoped that all members and rushees will be able to attend the final meeting tonight."

Anyone who has had previous scout training and who is interested in finding out more about APO has been invited to attend the meeting.

Doctrine Is Hit

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28 (AP) —Army generals took pot shots today at air force Doctrine and what they called "arbitrary" defense department rules curbing the army's role in guided missiles.

They proclaimed, too, that an army weapon now being perfected may provied a defense against the intercontinental ballistic missile.

New Educational TV Series Begins Locally

A new national educational TV series—covering topics in science, mathematics, art, economics and governments—will be telecast, beginning Monday night, Oct. 28, over WUNC-TV, UNC's educational station.

Viewers of Channel 4 in central North Carolina will be able to see the 10-week series, which is produced by the National Broadcasting Company and the Educational Television and Radio Center. They will be telecast from 6 to 6:30 p. m.

Outstanding scientists who are participating in the global study during the International Geophysical Year (IGY) will appear on the Monday night series, "Quest: A Small Planet Takes a Look at Itself."

Dr. Joseph Kaplan, chairman of the executive committee of the IGY commitee in the United States, will initiate the programs Monday night, commitee in the United (Sates, will news commentator Frank Blair.

The national series or the remainder of the week calls for "Mathematics" on Tuesday; "The Arts and The Gods" on Wednesday: "Survival," on Thursdays; and "Camera on Washington," on Fridays.

Clifton Fadiman, writer, critic and commentator, will be host for the "Mathematics" series, which will describe great discoveries in the development of mathemtical thinking.

Wednesday night host for the study of Greek art and its resultant mythology will be Alexander Scourby, actor of stage, screen and TV. The creation of the world as found in Greek myths will be the subject of the first program on Oct. 30. Special guest will be Miss Edith Hamilton, scholar and author of several books on Greek history.

"Survival" will trace the resource problem of various civilizations and will indicate the problems ahead of today's millions. Guest authorities in the fields of economics and conservation will appear each Thursday night, along with economist-geographer Albert E. Burke, who will act as host.

In the Friday night series opener, NBC's Washington camera will be turned on the State Department, tracing a policy decision from the Secretary of State down through various ranks as it is put into action.

Noted newscaster Bill Henry will be commentator for the series, which will explore the machinery of the executive branch of government, and is planned particularly for social science students.

ON WUNC-TV SERIES—The University of North Carolina's educational station, WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will begin this week a new five program series from National Broadcasting Company, covering topics in science, mathematics, art, economics and social science. Scheduled for telecast each Thursday at 6 p.m. for the next 10 weeks is "Survival," an account of the resource problems of various civilizations and the problems of the future. Host will be Albert E. Burke, economist-geographer, above.

DTH Sports Editor

Deacons Were Plenty Tough Saturday

From the Carolina-Wake Forest game Saturday, this observer feels that there are two points which should be made for the benefit of those who were not on hand.

2-Carolina did not play as badly as it might seem and the reason is point number one.

The Tar simply encountered a team which had the desire to play its heart out and did exactly that. The Deacons don't know the word quit and that was obvious to the estimated 15,000 fans on hand for the battle.

Jim Tatum said after the game that he had never been happier in winning by a touchdown. Rightly so. The Tar Heels should be proud of the victory, for in no other contest this season have they met more determined opposition. The Deacs have certainly won the admiration of football fans, writers and coaches, and before this season is over, you look for that intangible quality to be rewarded.

Line Looked Good And Cummings Shone

Saturday's game cannot be labeled exciting. For the most part, it was a sluggish mid-field battle with neither team exhibiting any tremendous offensive power. But it gave the unsung heroes in the front wall a chance to shine. Defensively, both ball clubs showed some very fine prowess.

Tatum has pointed to boys like Phil Blazer, Mac Turlington, Stu Pell, Ralph Steele and Ronnie Koes as instrumental figures in the Tar Heels' victory. Buddy Payne played his usually fine game, highlighted by his teriffic catch of Jack Cumming's pass in the end zone for Carolina's first score. Turlington also hauled in a pass which looked almost impossible.

As for Cummings, little could be said to overrate the play of this promising sophomore signal-caller from Lower Merion, Pa. Smiling Jack was the epitome of calmness all afternoon as he directed the ball club with the precision of a veteran. If one single man had to be given credit for the victory, it would have to be Cummings. He has definitely labeled himself a man to be reckoned with in future competition.

Gaca Showed 'Em How To Move A Football

There was another fellow out there Saturday who showed his ability to play this game of football. His name was Giles Gaca, a hard-running fullback who has been riddled with injuries all season. Gaca grinded out 90 yards for the Tar Heels and scored their second touchdown. Giles' performance has probably won him the starting assignment against Tennessee this Saturday.

There was, however, something missing in the Carolina attack. It's hard to say just what. It could have been the absence of Dave Reed and Leo Russavage. But it must be remembered that halfback Jim Schuler did not play, and hard-charging Don Coker played much less than he has in the past. Add this up, and you might find that missing bit of potency.

Perhaps the weather had a good deal to do with the more or less "sluggish play" which was prevalent throughout some parts of the game. It was a miserable afternoon, not conducive to good watching or good playing.

Deacs Have Good Comedy Team

Wake Forest Coach Paul Amen called the game a "moral victory for his Deacs,'" at least. The Deacon mentor has done a great deal in keeping up the morale of his ball club through these trying weekends, and he must have received some consolation in his club's performance against the Tar Heels.

Amen, 'Coach of the Year' in the ACC 1956, is one of the most likeable fellows in the coathing ranks. He is a relatively quiet, unassuming person who never gets too excited about anything. He sidekick is a fellow named Floogie Ariel, the Deac trainer and one of the funniest fellows around. The two would make a good comedy team.

On hand in the press box was Charlie Carpenter, the fellow who was destined to quarterback the Deacs this year but underwent an operation and had to lay out a season. Charlie was doing some spotting for the press.

Did He Score Or Not, Who Knows?

Rumor has it that one of the refs told one of the Carolina players that fullback Pete Manning did not go over just as the half ended for the Deacon's touchdown. The way we heard it, one ref thought he did and threw up his hands, the other said he didn't. Doesn't make too much difference now, and besides, it's just a rumor.

Jack Cummings was the top kicker for Carolina Saturday, booting the ball five times for 168 yards and a 33.6 average. Don Coker kicked once for 31 yards and Curt Hathaway had one 34 yard kick.

Top receiver for Carolina was Buddy Payne who caught three chunks for 46 yards, one good for the aforementioned TD. Mac Turlington accounted for 25 aerial yards and Emil DeCantis had 15.

Sutton Going Great For Redskins

Ed Sutton is going great guns for the Washington Redskins. The ex-Tar Heel star was great against New York Sunday, scoring one touchdown. The Redskins have what is perhaps the finest crop of rookie backs in the National Football League. Aside from Sutton, Jim Podoley, Don Bosseler and Joe Walton are all seeing plenty of action in the nation's capitol.

Speaking of Washington, reminds of us the time "way back, when" the Washington Senators were having a hard time seeing daylight in the American League. Some ingenious Washington fans erected a big banner out in center field which read: "Washington, first in war, first in peace and last in the American League."

Scene on the campus: Unhappy students looking downcast and walking toward the gym. Reason: Physical education has resumed after two weeks layoff, compliments of the flu bug.

Watch out Oklahoma. The Sooners are getting closer and closer to the inevitable. Saturday, Colorado gave Bud Wilkinson's crew the scare of its life. The mighty Sooners just did edge by the four touchdown underdog Colorado team, 14l3. Everybody's gunning for the Sooner powerhouse now.

Never have seen a coach singing the blues like Bill Murray of Duke. Guess he's shooting for that perfect record, because the State game didn't make much difference. The Durham contingents have the Orange Bowl bid wrapped up. But didn't that State club give the Devils a tough time Saturday?

Light Work Is Held By Tar Heels

Carolina players who participated in the 14-7 victory over Wake Forest last week took it easy today, drilling in light gear.

Other members of the squad had a long session of heavy contact work as the Tar Heels began preparations for the homecoming game with once-beaten Tennessee here Saturday.

Center Ronnie Koes, who played an outstanding game against the Deacons, was in the infirmary with a sinus infection. There was no word as to when he will be released for practice.

Asst. Coaches Pat Preston and Fred Tullai presented a scouting report on Tennessee and defenses were set for the high-powered Vols, who are led by tailback Bobby Gordon.

Duke Faces Tough Tilt With Tech

DURHAM, N. C., Oct. 28 (AP)—Duke is in for another rough Saturday this week against Georgia Tech, according to the scout report given at Duke's regular Monday press luncheon today.

"Just because Georgia Tech isn't undefeated when we are playing them this year, doesn't mean they don't have a great team and that we can expect to have an easy time of it," scout Herschel Caldwell told newsmen.

"Tech has a very good defensive team and, I might add, well-drilled in every respect," Caldwell continued. "I do not think their defense is better than the offense , especially their passing attack.

"Tech has changed its offensive setup this season and once the team gets together their boys will run with anybody. They have 17 different formations from which to run. Also, fumbles have hurt them a lot this year."

Caldwell, defensive end coach, has been scouting Georgia Tech since 1933, when the Duke-Tech series started. Caldwell has seen the Yellow Jackets go against Auburn, and LSU this season.

Coach Bill Murray added that anytime a team goes to Tech's Grant Field to play a game, it's hard to win.

"However, we feel we have a jump in preparing for Tech," Murray said. "N.C. State runs many plays similar to Tech and we just experienced a hard week in preparing for State's offense."

Duke Blue Devils Begin Preparations For Tech

DURHAM, N. C., Oct. 28 (AP)—Duke' Blue Devils, smarting from a frustrating tie with North Carolina State, began preparations today for Saturday's game with Georgia Tech.

Coach Bill Murray told reporters at a press luncheon today that "we play Tech every year and we know it's tough to beat them any time at any place." He pointed out that since taking over the reins at Duke the Blue Devils have played Tech three times in Atlanta and have taken two defeats and a tie.

Assistant Coach Herschel Caldwell, who scouts Tech, told the newsmen that Coach Bobby Dodd "has a typical Tech team with stronger defensive ability than usual and an offense that's liable to break wide open at any time."

WAKE FOREST SIDELITES

WF Greek Week Had Miserable Finale, Thanks To Tar Heel Club

By ED ROWLAND

Carolina paid the Deacs back for a disappointing 6-6 tie in 1956 with a win Saturday, but it was a pity not many fans were able to see the game.

Bowman Gray Stadium, a horseshoe-shaped concrete affair, holds only 17,000 persons. But the televised battle between State and Duke must have drawn many fans indoors, because only some 15,000 persons showed up for the game.

And the proverbial "a great time was had by all" does not apply to the occasion. Wake Forest was celebrating Greek Week, with queens, fraternity displays on campus, and a big dance. And some half a dozen high school bands were present for half-time activities.

But to lose the game caused many good Baptists to drown their sorrows, or something. They didn't yell very much in the second half.

Roy Thompson reported in the Winston-Salem Journal Sunday morning that the fraternity display drawing the most comment was in front of the Sigma Phi Epsilon quarters.

They had a mannikin lying in a bed wearing a black brassiere. A sign said, "I dreamed I beat Carolina in my Maidenform Bra."

It turned into a nightmare.

And on the Carolina side of the stadium fans were subjected to taunts and ridicule from the Wake Forest Deacon. But late in the game he was being cajoled by a Tar Heel holding a shepherd's staff when another Carolina gentleman crept up behind and threw a flying tackle on the Deac.

It was a better tackle than some on the playing field. But the two finally shook hands and parted friends.

And throughout the game it rained —not much, but enough to make things miserable. And it was cold.

It was the kind of day that internal fortification is deemed necessary by a large segment of the population. So said fortification was downed by great gulps.

Dr. Polgar Amazes, Amuses Over 800 In Memorial Hall

By DAVIS YOUNG

Dr. Franz Polgar entertained a crowd of over 800 last night in Memorial Hall with his amazing show entitled "Fun With the Mind."

Dr. Polgar is the world's foremost hypnotist and kept the crowd in complete suspense throughout his performance. He stated at the beginning of the show: "Tonight you will witness something different, for it is as well known fact that we know little of the human mind.

"The purpose of my program is purely entertainment. I perform an travel alone and work entirely without stooges. If any one of you can prove that I am making use of any tricks, I will give you a personal check for $5,000.

"I sincerely believe that telepathy does exist and that it is the basic form of communication among animals."

One of his most trick popular tricks was taking he check with which he was being paid and giving in to a volunteer to hide in the audience. Then by use of what he termed "telepathy" he was able to find the object no matter where it was hidden.

Dr. Polgar had 16 people on the stage and thrilled the crowd with his ability to execute a "mass hypnosis." The volunteers were told to clasp their hands tightly and concentrate on what Polgar said.

Through this method he was able to hypnotize most of the 16. Those that didn't come under his power immediately, later were told to shake hands with Polgar, with took them into a state of trance.

While in this state of hypnosis the volunteers were convinced that they were doing anything from riding in an airplane to drinking vodka. The audience howled when Polgar had one of his subjects, unknown to him at the time, give a lively demonstration of Elvis singing "Hound Dog."

Polgar had his volunteers hunting for shoes that they were holding in their hands, playing pin ball machines, and searching for sputnik. His power over the minds of those on the stage could not be doubted by anyone saw his convincing performance.

His acts were throughly enjoyed by the entire group. His versatility is hard to match and his showmanship is above reproach. An extremely enjoyable two hours, well worth one dollar.

Vaccine To Be Given At Gerrard

Tomorrow, Friday Are Shot Dates

University officials today announced a "convenient" on campus clinic for distribution of Asian flu vaccine with hopes that students would respond to the shots.

In another step to ward off any major Asian flu outbreak here, plans were disclosed to administer the vaccine between 11 a. m. and 1 p. m. Thursday and Friday at Gerrard Hall.

"We are doing this in an attempt to make it as convenient as possible and as time-saving as possible for students here," said University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth.

At the same time, Dr. Hedgpeth said some 2,000 doses of the vaccine will be available and urged "all students to avail themselves of this opportunity."

Free doses of the vaccine formerly have been offered at the infirmary, but student response to the shots fell far short of university expectations.

This new step, Dr. Hedgpeth asserted, could play an important role in protecting the student body against any major outbreak—assuming they appear for the shots.

In making the announcement today Dr. Hedgpeth warned against receipt of the vaccine by anyone allergic to eggs or chicken.

But he added, "I recommend all others to take the vaccine at this time, irrespective of the fact that they may have had recent colds or respiratory infections but are now free of fever."

Officials hoped that proximity of Gerrard Hall to classrooms and living quarters on campus would result in a big turnout for the vaccine.

Scholar Speaks At UNC Friday

Dr. Frederick L. Schuman of Williams College in Massachusetts, a foremost scholar in international relations, will speak here Friday evening at 8:30 p. m., Nov. 1 at the Louis R. Wilson Library assembly room on "How Many Worlds?" His subtitle is "The Human Prospect, 1957."

The public is invited to the lecture which is sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board and Pi Sigma Alpha, political science fraternity.

Dr. Schuman is the Woodrow Wilson Professor of International Relations at Williams College. He formerly taught at the University of Chicago at Harvard, Cornell, and the University of California.

He is the author of eight books on political science subjects, the most prominent being "International Politics" and the most recent being one published this year, "Russia Since 1917."

UNC Professor Is Recognized

Keener C. Frazer, UNC professor of political science, recently received a certificate in recognition of his services at the Naval War College in Newport, R. I. during the academic year 1956-57.

The honorary award from the U. S. Naval War College reads: "This is to certify that Professor Keener C. Frazer has completed the Course in Naval Warfare and has filled with highest distinction The Chester W. Nimitz Chair of Social and Political Philosophy during the Actdemic year 1956-57."

For the past two years Prof. Frazer was a visiting professor on the staff of the Naval War College while on leave from UNC. In a recent communication to Consolidated University President William C. Friday from Thomas H. Robbins Jr., Rear Admiral of the U. S. Navy, Prof. Frazer's work at the Naval War College was commended.

"Professor Frazer has given unstintingly of his time and effort and has most effectively applied his skill to the unusual problems and specialized needs of the Naval War College," the letter stated.

In 1936 Frof. Frazer joined the UNC faculty; he has also taught at the University of Alabama, the University of Virginia and Johns Hopkins University. At the University he is professor of international law and international politics in addition to heading the Southern Council on International Relations.

K. C. FRAZER

Integration Mandate Appealed By Citizens

RALEIGH, Oct. 29 (AP) —A group of Greensboro white citizens today took to the State Supreme Court their fight against integration in some of the city public schools.

They filed an appeal asking the high court to reverse a superior court ruling which upheld action of the Greensboro school board in assigning six negro students to previously all-white schools.

In Guilford County Superior Court, Judge L. Richardson Pryer dismissed an action brought by the white citizens

Judge Preyer denied a petition for a temporary injunction which whold have barred the admission of the Negroes pending the outcome of court action. At the same time he dismissed the group's appeal of the local board's action.

Both rulings came before the opening of the fall school term. The six negro students involved have been attending schools to which they were assigned since school opened.

The pubils reassigned from negro schools to the previously all white schools under the North Carolina pupil assignmnt law were: Harold McDuffie Davis, Elijah J. Herring Jr. and Russell Herring, all attending Gillespie Junior High School; Josephine Ophelia Boyd, the Senior High School; and Brenda Kay Florence and Jimmie B. Florence, both the Gillespie Elementary school.

The white citizens submitted six petitions one for each of the Negro students, and in each one asserted the action of the Greensboro Board was "not in the best interests" of the negro children.

They further asserted that the action reassigning the negroes to previously all-white schools would "disrupt the orderly and efficient administration" of the public schools there.

Medical Staff Lauded By IFC

In recognition of the efforts of Dr. Hegepeth and the University medical staff in caring for patients during the recent flu-like epidemic, IFC President Bill Redding yesterday expresed his appreciation in behalf of UNC's 24 social fraternities.

In an "open letter" to Dr. Hegepeth, Redding said:

"On behalf of the fraternities at the University of North Carolina I would like to express our appreciation to you and your staff for the job you did during the recent flu outbreak

"The sincere concern and earnest effort that was shown by the infirmary staff in their daily visits to our houses and in their care of patients in the infirmary is indicative of the high professional integrity of the entire staff.

"We are all aware of your unselfish contributions and are very grateful for them."

Juniors, Soph, Frosh Officers Nominated Last Night At SP Meet

MARY LEGGET BROWNING

The Student Party met last night to complete their slate of candidates for the November elections. Vice-Chairman John Brooks presided in the absence of Chairman "Whit" Whitfield.

For the office of President of the Junior class, the group nominated Danny Lotz. For Vice-President, Leon Holt was nominated.

The candidate for the position of social chairman of the Junior class will be Carolyn Donnelly, who defeated Cynthia Lewis.

Harold O'Tuel was the nomination for President of the Sophomore class by acclamation. On the slate will be Caleb White for Vice-President of that class. The group selected Ann Morgan to run for the office of Sophomore Class Secretary.

Nominated for the office of Social Chairman of the Sophomore class was Betty Hobson. The office of Treasurer of this class has no nominee at present. The candidate will be named by the Advisory Board.

For six one-year seats in Town Men's district I, no nominations were made. Bob Furtado gained nomination for a one-year seat from Town Men's district II by acclamation.

In a field consisting of Jim Holmes, Bill French, Kenny Freeman, Harold Donagan, Parry White and Jim Hohnson, Holmes, Donagan, White and Honhson were nominated for one-year seats in the Student Legislature.

Kenny Friedman and Harry Gellis were nominated to six months seats.

In Dorm Men's III, Tommy Kearns was nominated for a six-month seat by acclamation.

Charlie Graham was nominated [illegible] Men's IV. John Brooks and Garry Greer were nominated for one-year seats from this district.

For nomination for two seats for Town Women, Jeanie Margaret Meadows and Sandy Kedknocker were nominated.

Homecoming Plans Made

The University Club and GMAB are joining forces in an effort to make homecoming weekend the "biggest, bestest and mostest" the UNC campus has ever seen, according to Frank Inman, president of the University Club.

In keeping with the Carolina tradition of homecoming displays, dormitories and fraternity and sorority houses have been asked to set up a competitive display for the Carolina-Tennessee weekend.

Trophies will be presented to the dormitory and fraternity or sorority house with the best display. All displays will be judged between 9 and 12 noon Saturday.

Inman urged that an all-out effort be made by dorms and houses in fixing attractive displays.

Homecoming alumni of the University also will be cordially welcomed to the campus this weekend by GMAB and the University Club, with dancing, entertainment, prizes and refreshments scheduled.

A dance on Friday evening and a parade will be lead-off event. A homecoming queen will be selected at the dance in Woollen Gymnasium.

At Graham Memorial following the game prizes will be awarded to the alumnus who "came from farthest away from Chapel Hill," it was announced. Other prizes will go to the alumnus with the most children.

Still more will go to the former coed attending who is a member of the oldest class represented by a coed, and also a prize to the oldest alumnus attending.

Music will be provided by a "combo" and Durward Jones of Chapel Hill will be master of ceremonies.

Fraternities and dormitories will as usual have exhibits on the occasion of homecoming, with the display depicting the impending game Saturday between Carolina and Tennessee.

Noted Author To Speak Here

Frederick L. Schuman, noted author, journalist, and world traveler, will speak on the Carolina campus Friday night, it was announced Tuesday by Dan Goldrich, president of Pi Sigma Alpha.

Schuman's topic will be "How Many Worlds?—The Human Prospect, 1957," Goldrich said. The 53-year-old lecturer is the author of "International Politics," "Night Over Europe," "Soviet Politics at Home and Abroad," and "Russia Since 1917" as well as a number of other books.

"Dr. Schuman is a vigorous defender of civil liberties, political democracy, and human dignity," Goldrich said. "He has recently earned the distinction of being denounced by Pravda as 'an active ideologist of American Imperialism.'"

The speech Friday will be at 8:30 p. m. in the library assembly room. There is no admission charge.

Hurled Bomb Injures Ben-Gurion

The bomb thrower, identified as Moshe Ben Jacob Douek, a 25-year-old Jew, was seized in the gallery by a maintenance employe and held for police. Authorities said Douek was unbalanced mentally and had tried to burn an Israeli hospital a year ago.

Police quoted him as saying he had a grudge against youth Alyah an organization for the immigration, training and absorption of new immigrants in Israel.

Officials listed the casualties thus:

Ben-Gurion—superficial injuries from splinters in the hands and left leg.

Foreign Minister Golda Meir—slight splinter wound in the right foot.

Health Minister Israel Barzilai—scratches.

Communications Minister Moshe Carmel—broken bone in the left arm.

Shapira underwent surgery and received a blood transfusion.

Parliament resumed its session—with the police guard reinforced and public spectators barred—a little more than two hours after the bombing. Speaker Joseph Sprinzak told the deputies Ben-Gurion's condition was good.

The government radio station announced that the Prime Minister had been detained in a hospital, despite his insistence that he be permitted to go home.

Mrs. Meir was allowed to go home after treatment.

Barzilai attended the resumed parliamentary session.

Most of the wreckage had been cleared away by then.

The only signs of the incident were small holes blown in the walls and floor, where the bomb exploded about two feet from where Shapira and Carmel had been seated.

Douek was grabbed by a maintenance employe, Moshe Greenfeld, before police moved in. Greenfeld was making an inspection tour when the bomb exploded. Both Greenfeld and Douek were injured slightly in their scuffle in the gallery.

One Of 34 Tar Heels Are Hit

RALEIGH (AP)—A State Board of Health official estimated today that flu has struck one of every 34 Tar Heels—for a total of about 131,000 cases since around mid-September.

Already the number of cases in the current epidemic has probably exceeded any previous outbreak in state history except 1918's record-breaking epidemic, said Dr. Jacob Koomen, chief of communicable diseases control in the health department's division of epidemiology.

Dr. Koomen added that "there's no way of saying whether we're at the peak or not." He noted that the number of cases among school children had begun to decline in some counties, including Wake and Durham, but was still on the increase in other counties.

Yes, The Student Council Merits Last, Loud Word

There has been a great deal of controversy concerning Sunday morning's editorial: "Student Council Merits Last Word On Suspension."

Thus we feel obligated to elaborate on the points which we sought to make:

(1) That any student whose name is smeared with accusations concerning "discipline" and supposed violation of the Campus Code, which puts students on their honor to behave as gentlemen at all times, is entitled to a just and objective trial by just and objective authorities—the Student Council.

Such a trial may clear the names of suspended athletes Reed, Russavage and Donnatelli. And it may stop ugly whisper campaigns concerning "the disgraceful behavior of three University athletes," including the football team's co-captain.

As far as most people are concerned, the mention of Coach Jim Tatum's suspension evokes implications and ugly shadows of misbehavior on the part of the athletes. But there is little evidence to support such blatant accusations. Thus in this case, and in future cases, if such occur, men whose names have been smeared by various and sundry rumors reverberating throughout the state and nation such have the opportunity to clear their reputation—through just trial by jury.

(2) That we do not disagree with Tatum's right to discipline his athletes. Any organizational head is entitled to disciplinary authority, and such authority is necessary.

But, students who have been suspended from athletic squads, or from student government posts or any other position—with resulting ugly rumor circulation — are entitled to trial by an appellate authority — a non-partisan authority such as the Student Council. Possible arbitrary suspension from positions with inability to retaliate is an ugly precedent to establish.

(3) That students violating the Campus Code — athletes or others — must be tried by the Student Council.

Student autonomy encompasses the necessity of students disciplining themselves. If such discipline is sacrificed and neglected in any instance, then student self-government suffers irreparably.

(4) That no Universityite, student, administrative official or faculty member is in so high a position that he or she can override honor.

If conduct violations occur, then the affected authority must receive notification of such violation.

The Student Council's trial of Reed, Russsavage and Donnatelli affords these athletes an opportunity to vindicate themselves.

Any action it takes — if precedents of the worth-while and capable council are followed — will be fair and non-partisan.

We feel that Chairman Mack Patton and the council has acted wisely in attending to the suspension case immediately.

UP's Enthusiasm Grows: Election Prospects Good

The enthusiasm apparently generated by the University Party during nominating sessions is indeed admirable.

Any time students convene for three and a half hours to nominate student government representatives, the sense of debate and responsibility which comes to the fore is indicative of a strong, flourishing student government.

Approximately 350 University Party representatives — an extraordinary number—selected junior class officer candidates, freshman class officers, dorm men's legislative seats and town men's legislative seats.

The University Party is to be highly complimented, and we salute them vigorously and vociferously.

If such generated enthusiasm paign for student governmental horizon during the coming campaign for student gobernmental posts, the academic year 1957-58 should be among the most active student government has ever witnessed.

Perhaps the University Party should have demonstrated more planning in plotting its agenda for Monday night. Maybe a smaller slate of selections would have enabled the party to complete nominations before coed closing hours.

But nevertheless, the UP's attendance and lively debate merits the highest praise.

Good Will & Misconduct

Leaders from Duke University and the University here are meeting this week in a good will session.

This meeting is an annual affair. Its purpose is to deter or totally prevent any misconduct — painting Silent Sam, painting Page Auditorium, salting letters on playing fields, throwing beer cans, etc.

The meeting affords, an excellent symposium for exchange of ideas — a central dissemination point.

IT is bad. It is bad. It is bad. It is bad.

It's bad.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

No Love Labors Lost Between Profs & Stus

Gail Godwin

There certainly is no love lost between the majority of professors and their students around here. In the professor's eye, the student is a seat number to which a more or less permanent I.Q. is assigned after the first guiz. To the student, "the man up front" is a competitor with whom he must match wits.

I went to one of my professors after I had been absent to give him an excuse. "Who are you?" he said. I told him my name. "No, I mean what is your seat number," he replied impatiently.

In one of my larger classes which numbers eighty-five on the roll, a girl dared to interrupt the professor with a question. It seems he had contradicted himself twice in the course of an explanation, thus confusing the class. The girl asked him to please explain once more.

He looked as if he were invoking the gods of wisdom to send a bolt of lightning down on the ignoramus who had slowed down his 60 mile-a-minute lecture. "If any of you still don't understand, I'll explain it after class sometime. Right now I am hurrying to get through this chapter." He dismissed the question.

Professor, why are you in such a hurry? Did it ever occur to you that we might not understand the material as well as you, who have been over it many times and taught it to many classes?

Professor, why are you so evasive? Don't you want us to explore the bright world of the learned as you have? Do you want us to be in the dark forever?

I do not think all professors fit the above descriptions. Most of us are lucky enough to have one exception who brightens our day.

He is not racing his departmental peers to see who can cover the most chapters the quickest. He does not drone. He does not use ambiguous words. He is interested in his field and he wants his students to be interested too. Therefore, he exerts some effort to say something they will remember.

I have a political science professor who, I venture to say, knows all his students names. Maybe he has a little chart on his rostrum that we can't see, but at any rate he addresses us each by name. In fact, he even speaks to us on campus. He wears collegiate clothes, sits on the desk and smokes, tells us his war experiences relating to the subject at hand, and has a store of unusual cases to illustrate legal points.

He does not race to get through grading our papers, but goes slowly, explaining by the side of each wrong answer why it was wrong.

I have a journalism professor who can be seen up at Y-Court regularly. He has not lost contact with his students.

It would make classes so much happier if the relationship between the teachers and the taught could be improved. Maybe it is partly our fault. Maybe we have forgotten that they are people and not blobs in front of our desks.

The only remedy is interest. Interest in one side of the desk by the other side, and vice versa.

Myriad Views On Athletics Retorts On Tatumism Edits

EDITOR:

The football team and Coach Jim Tatum have done a good job this year and deserve a lot of credit. Whether they win or lose Saturday afternoon, these boys work hard all week. They spend a lot of time and effort trying to have a team that can compete with and win over other college teams. Why? Because the students and others within the state like football as a spectator sport, and they demand winning teams.

Some of the athletes maintain an exceptionally high scholastic average. They all have to conform with the usual University standards just as all students do. The football players that you portray as ogres with special privileges are just people, students with superior athletic skills. Could there be some jealousy that causes this animosity evident in those editorial attacks?

You continue to imply with your vague, empty writing that you know of some improper practices within the Athletic Dept. You hint of recruiting irregularities. We suggest you quit those unfounded attacks or make public what you know about it all.

Until we learn different, we shall continue to believe that the Athletic Dept., the coaches and their staffs are well-organized, efficient and well-meaning.

EDITOR:

In reference to the Sunday (October 27th) editorial in The Daily Tar Heel, I would like to ask a few questions. What is the intent of such an article?

Is the writer trying to discredit our coach in the eyes of the student body? Is he trying to get the three exfootballers expelled from school? Is he trying to get Dave Reed reinstated? Is he saying that gentlemen cannot drink beer? Is he saying that drinking beer constitutes a violation of the Campus Code?

Is he inferring that our administration officials are not capable of doing a job commensurate with their rank? Is he trying to incite the resignation of coach Tatum? Did he infer that Coach Tatum was responsible for lack of funds at the Maryland library, and for the low standards of admission and grading at the University of Maryland?

Is he saying that scholastics are necessarily sacrified in the interest of athletics? Is he suggesting that the Student Council should have authority to overrule Coach Tatum?

Or, is he merely trying to provoke thought? If any of the former are true, I shall dismiss them as meager mutterings of a misledmite, and levy partial blame upon myself for supporting his election. If the latter is true ,his purpose should certainly have been accomplished.

W. R. FRYE

EDITOR:

It amazes me that someone has the audacity to constantly try to start ill feelings toward Coach Tatum. Coach Tatum has done ery many things to help our University, and he would be better understood, if only some people would stop and take notice instead of searching for something to write about.

As any coach, Tatum wants to win. It is not that those of ue who have goals in life, also have a great desire to reach that goal? Should we look forward to falling short of our ambitions?

I think the people who write the editorials for this paper should recognize what Coach Tatum stands for. Has Tatum not boosted our school spirit to very high levels? Is it not true that football players have to maintain a certain average in order to be eligible to play? And did Coach Tatum not make his high moral standards clear when he dismissed two of his most valuable players at a time when the answers to these questions will give more of an indication as to what kind of a person Tatum is than the articles written by those persons who have to search for things to write about.

Who are we? Are we the leaders in student democracy, in free speech, and in workable administration-student relations? Or are we the dog's tail that seeks to find the bark?

Is it necessary for us to examine the press policies of other universities? Can you name me another institution that is ahead of us in student democracy? Why, then, should we spend the time, effort, and money, experience undue hard feelings, and imitate schools that have nothing to offer? If any change in the student press is warranted, I feel that it should, most logically, come from within.

One of the perrenial gripes aboutth e Dialy Tar Heel is lack of proofreadind. We submit that the responsible people are doing every thing in their power to combut this. In every paper of good standingth eir will be a certain amount of errors in the copy, but most of them will be caught befor the paper goes to press.

There are always some errors which do get by the proofreaders, but these are few, and they only addto hte desirability of the paper. Some people are always looking for mistakes to comment on, thisseems to geve them a feeling of superiority over the capus journalists.

These people are more numeroushere than is usually thought to be the case. Soooo— there are mor avid readers in this group proportiunately to the number of errors?

In case some of you missed it in Sunday's paper: Lt. Governor Guy Hardwich, in a telegram to President Eisenhower after the murder of Albert Anastasia, has suggested that the president move Federal troops from Little Rock to New York City.

To quote briefly from the telegram, "Respectfully invite your attention to the total breakdown of the law of the land in NYC . . . Anastasia, the cold-blooded executioner of the old Murder, Inc. was assassinated yesterday in a barber chair . . . Reportf urther Anastasia had beaten five murder raps through the murder of key witnesses . . . mob rule prevails . . . gang murderers are on the loose. Obviously local law enforcement unable to cope with the situation. Respectfully suggest that you . . . pull out the bayonets from state of Arkansas and move them forthwith to the state of New York where there is real, not imaginary, job to do. Situation in Little Rock and South Peaceful."

We believe that what he suggests (and not quite as respectfully as he maintains) that Ike send the occupation troops to New York where they will be killed by gang wars. And this is a likely prospect. If enough troops are killed in New York City then the president would have more trouble enforcing integration in the South. This is to the advantage of the state of Alabama particularly for they might well anticipate even more trouble on the same issue.

If the people in the South are able to keep gang warfare alive in New York City, and if Eisenhower's forces are moved there, then the South will be safe. Send contributions to Murder Inc., General Delivery, New York, N. Y.

Since the entire meaning of Saturday's column was cut bfore it appeared in print I will relate it here as it is essential to the understanding of my following columns:

Beawolf saw that the Eagles were losing their liberty by the very means that were being employed (investigation and abridgement of free speech) to defend their individual rights from the threat of Bearist tyranny. Disgusted, Beawolf realized that the only way for him to preserve his freedom was to find a new land to live in.

Years later, while in the Alps, news reached him that the Eagles had become exactly like the Bears in tyrannical government, and the two tribes had finally reached the point of war when the Cro-Magnon peoples swept through France and drove all the Neanderthals to extinction.

News Item:

Bucharest, N. H. Wearing a halloween mask to avoid his being known to potential subversive suspects, Special Agent Nathaniel Hawkeye testified today that Mami Everfetterd, 98, had uttered subversive remarks while taking a shower on the night of last February 29th.

Hidden microphones, Hawkeye explained, connected to a tape recorder had been planted in Miss Everfetter's rooms in a Federal Old Age Home upon the request of neighbors who reported her as having suspicious beliefs.

Miss Everfetter, who doctors report as being near death due to a stroke suffered last spring, was brought to the hearings on a stretcher. When asked if she had said that she wished they had served red boiled lobster for supper on the night in question, Miss Everfetterd replied that she did not know, as she has been unable to remember "particulars" for the last four years.

The question was then repeated with the warning that excuses would not be of help, and anything she said under oath could be held against her. Miss Everfetterd appeared to reflect for a moment before she replied, "Well, I guess so. I likes red lobsters enough anyways."

Her statement was immediately taken as a confession, and a charge of treason was victoriously brought against her.

It was a beautiful day for a hearing, and many spectators turned out for it. The air was sweet and just slightly sharp, and the trees ranged in blazing colors from yellow to bright scarlet.

Students On Bridge

Today's hand, which comes from last Monday night's duplicate tournament, contains several difficult decisions in both the bidding and the play. North-South manage to get to four spades, whics is a sound contract, but along the route East and West have both bid diamonds. Over South's bid of four spades, West bids five diamonds, which is an excellent sacrific bid. If West were to play the hand at five diamonds, he would ordinarily go down only one trick. This would result in a loss of 100 points, which is a small price to pay to stop North-South from making a game

Neither side vulnerable; North deals

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	WEST	SOUTH
1 C	Pass	1 S	2 D
2 S	3 D	4 S	5 D
5 S	Pass	Pass	Double
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead 3 of hearts.

West is not allowed to play the hand at five diamonds, however. North decides to bid five spades, mainly on the basis of his singleton diamond. This is a precarious contract but it is not a bad gamble. West doubles.

West opens his singleton heart in the hope that he can eventually get a ruff. South plays low from the board, and picks up East's jack with his king. Since West did not lead a diamond, South should suspect the possibility that the three of hearts is a singleton.

At the second trick, South leads the ten of spades from his hand. Since West has doubled, South plans to play West for both the ace and jack of spades; if West ducks, South will play low from the board.

Unfortunately, West is not clairvoyant and does not know that his partner has the jack of spads. Therefore he plays his ace on the first trump trick in order that he will still have a small spade with which to ruff a heart (he hopes). Normally West should play low in a situation like this, but in this case he plays the ace in order to save his small trump.

Now West must guess which of the minor suit aces his partner holds. If he makes the right guess, the contract will be set when his partner gets in and fires back a heart. Since East raised her partner's diamonds, West decides that a diamond lead is the best bet. Although this is the logical guess, it turns out to be wrong; South wins the trick with the ace.

Declarer now ruffs his other diamond in dummy. He then leads the king of spades, both opponents following suit. He must now get back to his hand, and the only way is by leading a heart. West shows out of hearts, but by now it is too late for him to ruff since all his trumps gone.

Declarer lays down the queen of spades to draw East's last trump, and it is now a simple matter to knock out the ace of clubs and then claim the rest of the tricks. South is fortunate to make his shaky contract.

Note that if declarer had played the ace of diamonds and ruffed a diamond before starting to draw trumps, his contract would have been defeated. Not only would such a line of play have created entry problems, but what is worse, it would have given away the location of the ace of diamonds. West would then have had no trouble guessing that his partner held the ace of clubs when he got in with his spade ace.

It is true that West could have defeated this contract with any one of several different defenses, but the defense he chose left nothing to be desired. He was just unlucky.

Pika Partying

A chartered bus carried the Pika forces up to Winston for the Tar Heel-Deacon game Saturday, and after cheering the "Big Blue" on to victory Pikas and their dates climbed aboard for a return trip to the Hill where a party was in the making.

Pika pledge class officers are Tommy Smith of Spartanburg, S. C., president; Don Harris of Rocky Mount, vice president; David Grigg of Albemarle, secretary-treasurer; and Biv Hendrix of Morgantown, social chairman.

KAs—Here And Everywhere

Scattered about over the state, KAs found numerous ways of enjoying the weekend. While one group and their dates were spotted at Winston cheering for the Tar Heels, another group was at the house listening via radio.

Another few turned to TV to watch the Duke-State game while still others were stationed over at William Neal Reynolds Coliseum in Raleigh at the Ice Capades.

Elected to lead the pledge class are Al Travis of Weldon, president; Jim Hoskins of Cleveland, Tenn., vice president; and George Davis of Durham, secretary-treasurer.

New KA pledges include Bruce Beverage of Atlanta, Ga.; Bob Turner of Charlotte and Henry Manning of Windsor.

Sigma Chi Sweetheart-Pledge Banquet

Not often a group has two reasons to celebrate, but the Sigma Chis certainly did last Tuesday night.

A banquet at the house nto only honored their pledge class, but also spotlighted Nancy Jo Rush, who was formally pinned as "Sweetheart of Sigma Chi." Also in attendance was Dr. James Godfrey, who is the chapter advisor.

For weekend fun, the chapter partied up in Greensboro at Tony Schiffman's house to celebrate the Carolina victory.

Attend Meeting

George Artope Serves As Treasurer Of GMAB

Newly appointed GMAB treasurer is George Artope, senior from Greensboro. Artope was selected for the position by the executive committee of GMAB.

"Artope will have a tremendous amount of responsibility serving in the capacity of treasurer of GMAB," said Benny Thomas, president of GMAB. The treasury consists of $10,000 divided among the fourteen committees which comprise GMAB.

His duties include being able to account for this amount at all times and being able to advise each of the committee heads of his financial condition at all times. He is also responsible for preparing periodic reports for the president to present to the Graham Memorial Board of Directors.

Artope is working towards a B.S. degree in business administration with a major in banking and finance. He is treasurer of Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity.

Preston Likes Tennessee Team

What can football fans expect of Tennessee this weekend when the Vols come to Chapel Hill to help Carolina celebrate Homecoming.

The man most qualified to answer this, is Assistant Coach Pat Preston. Pat was on hand at Jim Tatum's press conference yesterday, and his overall appraisal was that the Vols have improved with every game.

Preston has seen Bowden Wyatt's single wing assemblage in all but one of its games this season. He missed the Auburn game which Tennessee lost, 7-0 for its only defeat.

"Tennessee is a very good ball team," Preston reported. "The boys run hard and block hard and they hustle all the time."

Preston continued that the Vols are not too interested in ball control. "They play for the breaks. They like to give you the ball and depend on their defense to get it back in your territory."

Option Play Is Most Potent Weapon

Tennessee is a comparatively small ball club. Preston estimates that the entire team averages about 190 but that most of the backs weigh about the same as the linemen.

Preston expressed the view that the Vols were a speedy aggregate, able to get down under kicks. Thus, they kick a lot when in their own territory on third down. "They like a kicking game that will get you backed up in your own territory," said Preston.

Both Tatum and Preston concurred on one point—that the option play is one of the Vol's most potent weapons. They also run the end sweep, draw and buck lateral frequently, but the option play is the one which causes their opponents the most trouble.

"I'd venture to say that over 50 per cent of their plays are option," Tatum stated. This of course, aids their passing game considerably.

Gordon Capable Replacement For Majors

Individually, Preston seemed most impressed with the play of tailback Bobby Gordon. Gordon has stepped into the tremendous shoes of Johnny (Drum) Majors, the Vol's great 1956 All-American. Preston describes Gordon as a boy who can run and pass and a fine man on punt returns. Gordon has completed over 50 per cent of his passes and bears close watching Saturday.

Behind Gordon is letterman Al Carter who has been injured during a great part of the season. Preston also liked Carter, but feels there's a good chance he won't play much Saturday. That leaves sophomore George Wright as Gordon's number one understudy.

At fullback the Vols have Carl Smith and Tommy Brunson, both good boys, according to Preston. Wingbacks Bill Anderson and Stockton Adkins are veterans who ran with Majors last season and can give you a lot of trouble.

Preston described end Tommy Potts as very agile and quick and singled out guards Billy Johnson and Lon Herzbrun and center Dave Stottlemyer as the outstanding line contingents. Johnson, incidentally, is the only regular lineman from the 1956 squad.

Carolina Has Physical Problem At Center

Notes from the press conference.

Bowden Wyatt, who succeeded Bob Neyland as head coach at Tennessee, is not a "substitute by units" man. Wyatt likes to put them in individually and doesn't play his second and third team much until the game is wrapped up.

Physically, Carolina is suffering most at center this week. Number one pivot man, Ron Koes is in the infirmary with a chronic sinus condition and might have to miss the Tennessee game. Second stringer Jim Davis is still taking things easy due to injuries sustained against Maryland T.hat leaves either Will Hardison or Dick Need to go against the Vols.

One bright spot is that halfbacks Jim Schuler and Don Coker are back in good shape, as is fullback Ed Lipski. Lipski, however, might have lost the fullback starting slot to Giles Gaca, who performed brilliantly against Wake Forest.

The Tennessee team will arrive in Durham Friday afternoon at 2:30 and will come to Chapel Hill for practice at 3:30. The Vols will be housed at the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

Sooners Replaced By Aggies In AP Poll

The Oklahoma Sooners have been replaced in the Associated Press' weekly football poll. Two weeks ago Michigan State took first place from the Sooners, now it's Texas A&M. This because of the close shade which the Sooners had, beating Colorado, 14-13. Colorado, incidentally moved into 18th place.

The Atlantic Coast Conference still has two teams in the top 20. Despite a tie, the experts are apparently still convinced hat Duke is a better club than N. C. State. The Blue Devils are rated seventh and the Wolfpack holds onto tenth place.

Navy, beaten only by Carolina, is now in 16th place and the Tar Heel's Saturday opponent Tennessee is in 17th.

Only the first five teams remain unbeaten. After Texas A&M and Oklahoma come Iowa, Auburn and Notre Dame in that order. All except Oklahoma have 5-0 records, the Sooners are 6-0.

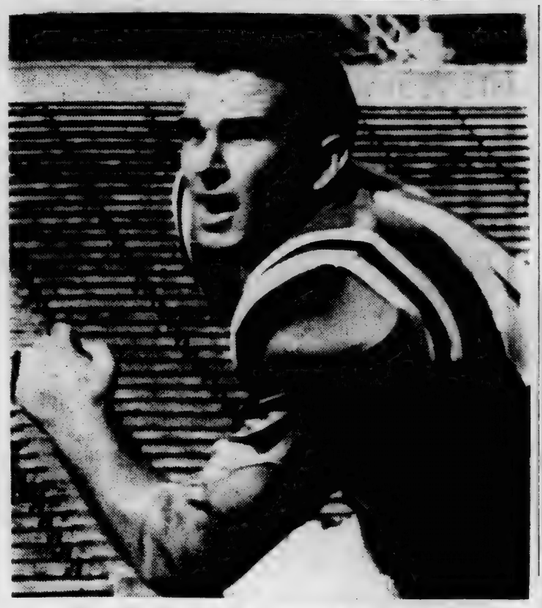
ALL THINGS CONSIDERED

Carson Pleased With Play Of Tar Babies

By DAVE WIBLE

When Carolina's freshman football team, the Tar Babies, defeated the freshman of Wake Forest 14-13 last Friday night in Greensboro, they found that the "like father, like son" relationship between the Deaclets and the Wake Forest varsity is not true.

The Deaclets are far from being the weak ball club that the Wake varsity is and the ball game last Friday night proved it. They had five scoring opportunities during the game but three times they could not build up enough steam to cash in on their positions—one time on the 2-yard line and another on the foot marker. The big Tar Baby line held fast when it counted and ruined the Deaclet chances for a victory.



Tar Baby Coach Bud Carson summed up the game like this: "I think we looked well considering that we were not able to use some of our key players because of sickness and injuries. Two of our starters, fulback Frank Riggs and tackle Joe Kulpa were not able to play but their positions were well filled by Alex Rice and Jim Shumate."

"Shumate had been running guard all season but changed over to tackle Friday to fill in for Kulpa. He and guard Rip Hawkins played a very fine defensive game especially when the going got tough on the goal line."

In the backfield, Carson complimented the play of quarterback Russ Hollers and halfback Sonny Folckermore and Lenny Beck. Hollers did a nice job of signal calling, mixing up his plays very well. He proved his worth as a ball carrier by picking up several long gains through the middle on quarterback sneaks.

Folckermore and Beck shared the ground gaining glory for the evening with consistant running. Beck set up the second Tar Baby touchdown when he intercepted a Deaclet pass on the Carolina 35 and expertly picking out his blocking returned the ball to the Wake 6. Folckermore did not have an opportunity to shake loose but he did grind out a lot of yardage on quick handoffs over tackle.

The next Tar Baby game will be against the Virginia freshman, Nov. 8, here. Up to now they have won two and lost one, the loss being to the Wolflets of State 20-6.

OUTSTANDING NEWCOMER—Fullback Giles Gaca has probably won himself a starting position against Tennessee Saturday for his fine performance against Wake Forest. Gaca, injury riddled all season, gained 90 yards for the Tar Heels in their 14-7 victory.

Frosh Booters Battle State In Raleigh

The Carolina freshman soccer team will seek its first win of the season when it faces the N C. State freshman squad today at 3 p. m.

The contest, to be played in Raleigh, marks the first time the two teams have met this year as an earlier game was called off because of the flu, whoch had hit both teams.

Coach Chuck Hartman's squad held a long scrimmage with the varsity Monday and a light workout Tuesday in preparation for the State game .

Hartman's team dropped its first game of the year last week in a tense double-overtime 2-1 loss to the Duke freshman team.

A chance for revenge against the Blue Imps will come this Friday, when the Tar Babies will meet the Cross-Country Teams Meet Sat.

By RUSTY HAMMOND

The undefeated Carolina varsity cross-country team gets back into action this Saturday in a triangle meet against Tennessee and archrival Duke University

The meet is scheduled to get underway at 11 a m Saturday, and will be run at Finley Golf Course here.

The freshman team, in another triangle meet, will take on the Duke freshman and Myers Park High School of Charlotte. The frosh harriers will start five minutes ahead of the varsity and will probably finish about ten minutes after the varsity has started.

In their only other meets of the season, the varsity has been beaten Clemson and Virginia. Coach Dale Ranson said that" Although most of the boys are running very well, we still aren't back to full workouts." The harriers missed meets with Maryland and State because of the flu, and knocked off practice Oct. 14, not starting back until Oct. 25.

"I am very pleased at our previous team efforts and I think we have an excellent chance to take the meet this Saturday," Ranson remarked.

He announced that the boys who will run Saturday are Wayne Bishop, the boy who set a track record at Clemson and ran first in the Virginia meet, Captain Everette Whatley, Dave Scurlock, Cowles Liipfert, Alex Coffin, John Reaves, Jim Hunter, and Doug Henderson. The flu and injuries has taken a definite toll of the Tar Heels.

Howard Kahn, previously the number 5 man, has been unable to practice. Fick Arthur is still out, and Joe Friedberg has a sprained ankle.

Lewis Dormitory Captures Honors In Annual 'Rod And Gun' Events

By Tommy Johnson

Lewis Dormitory won team honors by one point over Kappa Alpha fraternity in the Rod and Gun Field Meet, Tuesday afternoon at the Durham Wildlife Club Area.

Seventy-five entrants participated in the affair which is sponsored annually by the intramural department. A group of some 35 students was on hand to watch.

John Crawford won a close victory over Bill Sharpe, 134 to 231, to win the target rifle competition for the second year in a row. This event was the most popular with 30 entrants. Max Vallotton and Bill Hayworth tied for third and fourth place honors. Harry Wells was fifth.

Gay Cowen was victorious in the trap shooting competition after a run-off battle with Al Jordan and William Crutchfield. Each of these sharpshooters had a first round score of 23 for 25. In the run-off, Cowen hit 11 of 12 to finish two ahead of Crutchfield who hit 9 of 12. Jordan hit 8 birdies. Charles Forbes and David Collins came in fourth and fifth, respectively.

Tommy Nelms took top honors in the archery competition with a score of 182. He was 21 points ahead of Dave Gore who scored 161. Wayne Irvin, Jim Smith and Pete Brake were third, fourth and fifth respectively.

Jerry Corbin headed the list of 12 entrants in the bait casting competition with a score of 54, four points ahead of Don Nicholas. Ritchie Smith and Tom McIver, who each scored 50 points. Chuck Schlapkohl came in fifth with a 48.

Coach Walter Rabb, director of intramural activities, presented the winners with trophies. Lewis received a handsome plaque for winning team honors.

Director Rabb termed the event a success and expressed a desire to form a UNC Rod and Gun Club on the campus. He said that a "Big Four" Rod and Gun Meet will be held next Spring.

Monarchy Said Aid To Britain

The British monarchy will continue.

That is if the Dialectic Society has anything to do with it. In Tuesday night's meeting a bill to condemn the British monarchy was voted down 5-2.

Opinion varied, but on the whole British Royalty was favored. Among these Senators in favor of the monarchy was Irwin Avery who said that although politicians come and go, the Monarchs are the ones who bind the Commonwealth together.

He said that the Queen's good will tours foster friendly relationships among Britain and other nations of the world.

Guest speaker Tom Warlick added were it not for the monarchy, the Empire might fall apart.

Andrew Canoutas said that "we can only see the economic aspect of a British Institution." He continued that although financing the Royal Family may seem expensive, U. S. support of National battlefields and museums make Royalty seem "like a needle in a haystack."

Speaking against the monarchy, Pat Adams said that the monarchy was "eating up the fat of Britian" and also of the United States. He also said that the monarchy has been "useless for the past 400 years."

Rudolph Alperts called the monarchy "a barbarous institution of rule by one ruler."

General opinion of the Di Senate was that the monarchy is a vital part of British Tradition, and that without it the Empire could not have endured.

World In Brief

Maynor's Money Hoax

DURHAM, Oct. 30. (AP)—Informed sources today wrote off the reported finding of $162,000 by Vernon L. "Jitterbug" Maynor as a hoax. The money, they said, is in worthless confederate bills.

The FBI, which has examined the money, would make no comment on the report. The agency said it "no longer has an interest in the case" and said that "should speak for itself."

"It takes quite a period of time to check $162,000 in real solid cash," the FBI said.

Little Rock

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (AP)—President Eisenhower said today he hopes and prays it soon will be possible to withdraw all federal troops from Little Rock, Ark.

On his order, troops have been at Little Rock since Sept. 24, to enforce a Federal Court order for racial integration of the city's Central High School.

Eisenhower moved the troops in after mob violence occurred.

On another aspect of the whole racial situation, Eisenhower said he was having difficulty in finding just eactly the people he wants to serve on the Civil Rights Commission set cp by Congress this year.

The two matters came up at the President's news conference.

Court-Martial

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (AP)—The Army said today court-martial charges have been filed against M. Sgt. Roy Adair Rhodes, who testified at the espionage trial of Rudolph Abel that he turned Russian informer for pay.

The Army said the charges against Rhodes include one that he violated U. S. espionage laws.

Rhodes, whose home is Eatontown, N. J., testified at theA bel trial that he collected between $2.500 and $3.000 from Russian agents.

Rhodes said he went to work for the Soviets while serving as a motor pool sergeant at the U. S. embassy in Moscow. The Army said he was on this duty from May 1951 to July 1953.

Registrar, Admissions Committee To Meet

Roy Armstrong, director of admisions, and the University of North Carolina will be hosts today and tomorrow to the fall meting of the Executive Committee of the American Assocation of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers.

Armstrong is president of this association.

The meetings today and tomorrow represent few ever held on a college campus.

The opening session will be held today at 9 a. m. in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

The business of the Executive Committee will include: progress reports on various research projects being conducted by the association and plans for the regular meeting of the entire association in April in Cincinnati.

Armstrong said the assocation is responsbile for valuable educational aids, such as a recent manual sent out to college presidents on studies of space ulitization in colleges and universities. This manual enables colleges to make self surveys of facilities in preparation for increases in enrollment.

The American Association of Collegiate Registrars and Admissions Officers is composed of 14,000 college members.

Members of the Executive Committee who will be here today and tomorrow include: Herman A. Spendt, president-elect of the association from the University of California; Miss Florence Brady, secretary, from Occidental College in California; E. Vincent O'Brien, treasurer, from Fordham University also, Ted McCarroll, vice president from the State University of Iowa; Clyde Vroman, vice president from the University of Michigan; S. A. Homecoming Court Selections Today

Girls Will Reign Over Weekend

The 1957 Homecoming Court will be chosen this afternoon at 4:15 p.m. in Gerard Hall by four judges; Mrs. Bill Aycock, Sam Magill, Dr. Virgil Mann and Bob Cox.

At press time 21 coeds had been nominated by mens' dorms and fraternities and quite a few other dorms and fratermities were planning to turn in their candidates' names.

Nancy Royster, Graham; Wanda Ward, Manly; Caroline Warren, Old West; Betty Davis, Everett; Doris Peter, Ruffin; Frances DeArmon, Chi Phi; Caroline Osborne Kappa Alpha; Coleman Jenkins, Pi Kappa Alpha;

Kay Wren, Joyner; Patsy Poythress, Mangum; Helen White, Theoa Chi; Sally English, Grimes; Betty Barnes, St. Anthony Hall; Marsha McCord, Delta Upsilon.

A court of ten girls will be presented at an informal dance after the pep rally on Friday night. After the presentation of the court, the people at the dance will choose the Homecoming Queen of 1957 by popular vote. The Queen will be crowned at the end of the dance.

She will also be presented along with the nine other members of the court and escorted onto the field by the members of the Scabard and Blade at the half-time festivities of the game on Saturday.

On Friday, before the dance, there will be a parade composed of the cheerleaders, the band, the team, the Homecoming Queen candidates and a police escort. This parade will start at Woollen Gym at 7 p.m. and move to Pittsboro Rd., the Carolina Inn, Raleigh St. and back to the parking lot by the gym.

After the parade the bon-fire will be lit and a pep rally staged.

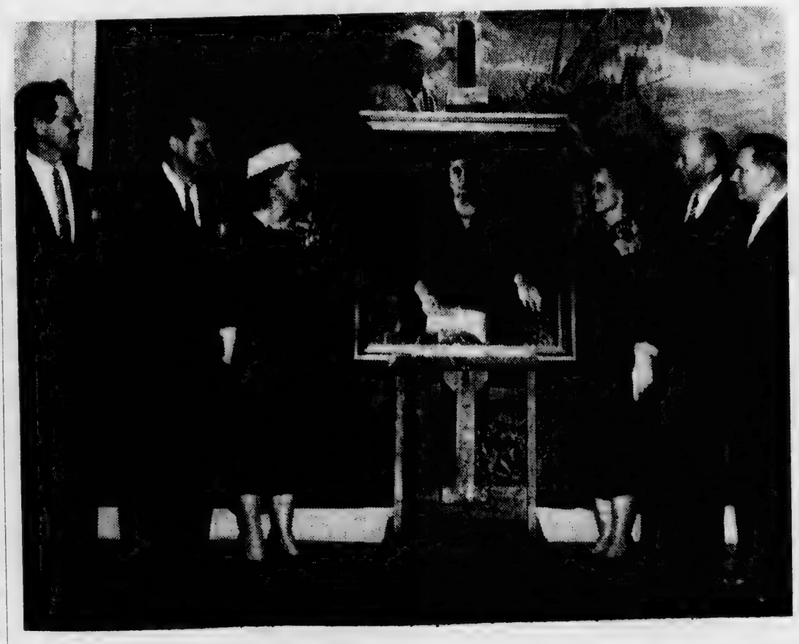
Dulles Held To Blame For Communist Gains

The Philanthopic Literary Society voted 5-3 Tuesday night to condemn Secretary of State John Foster Dulles "for destroying the friendship and respect" which other nations had toward the United States.

Representative Jim Tolbert said the "United States has lost the respect and admiration" of the countries abroad. He claimed "the whole ship of state may founder."

"Victory in the Mid-East is going to the Communists by default," he remarked.

Representative Clarence Simpson blamed Eisenhower as the source of the present trouble. He wanted to amend the bill so it would be directed against Eisenhower.



Blaming the whole citizenship of the United States for the trouble, Guest Judy Huntress said, "we have too many prejudices in our country." She claimed that the American tourists were destroying some of the friendship for this country.

Representative David Matthews presented a list accusing the Eisenhower Administration of actions which he did not like. He named the situations in Indo-China, the Suez Canal and Hungary.

Representative Stanley Black said "the Suez Canal crisis has been the main blunder he (Dulles) has made."

Conditional Representative Roger Pouchee called the debate "a crude butchering of our Secretary of State." He explained that Democrats had been the underlying cause for much of the present-day situation.

Inactive Representive Ethan Tolman asked the Phi to look more deeply into the question and to explore to find the causes of today's situation.

Solons Slated To Meet Today

Student legislators will debate three bills and a resolution in tonight's meeting.

The legislature will convene in Phi Hall, fourth floor New East, at 7:30 o'clock.

Tonight's bills involve the revision of Student Legislature by-laws, the debt incurred by the former humor magazine, Tarnation, and the establishment of a committee to study Lenoir Hall.

The resolution to be considered concerns the placement of trash cans in the quadrangles on campus.

Bob Carter's (SP) bill to set up a committee to revise by-laws of the legislature is scheduled for committee report again.

The bill introduced last week by Ed Levy (UP) for the legislature to pay a $452.81 debt of the Tarnation is also up for action tonight.

Held last week for further study was Pat Adams' (SP) bill to establish a committee to study Lenoir Hall. The Ways and Means Committee will report on study made during the week.

Cut System To Return To Normal

UNC medical authorities stressed again Wednesday the importance of student receipt of Asian flu vaccine being offered free on campus here today.

Their pleas followed only by one day a report from the State Board of health that one of every 34 Tar Heels has been afflicted by the disease since mid-September.

And, the report added, in some North Carolina counties the disease is still on an increase.

In an attempt to curb any major outbreak here, infirmary officials will conduct on-campus clinics at Gerrard Hall between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. today and Friday.

University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth said the Asian vaccine will be offered free of charge to all students requesting it at Gerrard Hall during those hours.

At the same time, announcement came from Dean of the Faculty James Godfrey that class attendance will resume on a regular basis beginning next Monday.

Cuts, under that system, can be excused only by the infirmary or the dean or advisor of the student who missed class, Dean Godfrey said.

Since October 7—at the height of an influenza epidemic on campus—students have been on their honor to excuse themselves from classes in case of illness.

Dean Godfrey expressed his gratitude to both students and faculty for their cooperation in the emergency action which resulted from overcrowded infirmary conditions.

Two nurses, a secretary and one doctor will be on hand at Gerrard Hall today and Friday to conduct the "convenient" vaccine distribution clinics.

Institute Given Grant For Study

A $13,400 National Science Foundation Grant was awarded to the UNC Institute of Field Physics it was announced today.

The award was made to Dr. Bryce S. DeWitt for research in gravitational field theory. Swedish physicist Bertel Laurent, on a year's leave of absence from the University of Stockholm, will also work on the project.

The Institute operates within the UNC Dept. of Physics and is mainly concerned with problems of gravitation. Agnew H. Bahnson Jr. of Winston-Salem is the Institute president.

Institute Starts Today For Employment Group

A two-day institute for employees of the Employment Security Commission of North Carolina will begin here Thursday at the Joseph Palmer Knapp Building of the Institute of Government.

The meeting is jointly sponsored by the N. C. chapter of the International Assocation of Personnel in Employment Security, the N. C. Employment Security Commission, and the Institute of Government.

The theme of the program is "Living with your job." Charles B. Ware Jr., personnel director of R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company in Winston-Salem will speak at the first session on "What Do You Want From Your Job?" Wade will follow Albert Coates, director of the Institute of Government, who will welcome the group, and Henry E. Kendall, chairman of ESC, who will offer a few words of greetings.

On Thursday afternoon and Friday morning there are four sessions scheduled on what supervisors can do about improving supervision providing leadership, delegating authority, and improving communications. The sessions will include lectures, movies, tape recordings and small group discussions.

A panel consisting of Dr. T. T. Jones of Durham, physician to Wright Automatic Machinery Company; Dr. Preston Dunning of Kinston, industrial physician with E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company; and Dr. Hans Lowenbach, professor of neuropsychiatry at Duke University, will discuss "What Can Supervisors Do About Counseling Employees" on Friday afternoon.

The final session on Friday will be on "Employees' Responsibility for Administrative Improvements." The speaker will be Jack Hurt, Bureau of Employment Security, U. S. Department of Labor, Washington, D. C.

Georgia Boys & Bayonets & Ol' Marv's Leadership

"Of course, we'll close the schools, the laws are already set up. And if anyone started to federalize the guard, we could just discharge it, then form a state militia under the Second Amendment to the Constitution, the right to bear arms. No Georgia boy can be made to turn his bayonet against a fellow Georgian. These people just won't do it. I know these people. Georgia will never be integrated. The people won't stand for it."—Georgia Gov. Marvin Griffin.

It becomes increasingly evident that Georgia Gov. Gruesome Griffin is the ostentatious leader of Southern resistance to the Supreme Court's 1954 desegregation decision.

The part played by Griffin and his confidant and collaborator Roy Harris, anti-integration leader, in the Little Rock drama in infamy also becomes increasingly evident.

Gruesome Griffin and Hard-Headed Harris apparently established the prelude for the Little Rock drama with a trip to Little Rock some two weeks befor ignominious anti-integration violence began on Sept. 3.

It was upon arrival at Little Rock Municipal Airport that Harris reputedly made this statement:

"Why, havin' us at the mansion's the worst thing could happen to Faubus. It'll ruin him with the integrationalists and the liberals."

Thus the one compliment which could be paved to Ozark Orval—that he had the courage of his convictions — appears misplaced. Griffin and Harris apparently prodded Faubus into his calling out of the National Guard and resistance to the U. S. Constitution, as interpreted by the Nine Tall Men.

Griffin's plan to avert integration, also, is the only thing more absurd—to date—which has come out of the South's dilemma—more absurb than Faubus' ferreting.

Such obvious bias and prejudice should be a beacon for the South—a beacon which should guide it from, not into, the troubled waters of violence. Griffin and Harris are names which become more and more synonymous with the brand of fanaticism brandished by John Kasper.

The argument that Faubus was pushed into his decision to call out the integration-deterring National Guiard is further substantiated by Harris' statement concerning a speech which he made before in Little Rock some two weeks before Faubus' decision:

"In the speech, I told them that Marv would use the National Guard, the state patrol and every able-bodied man in Georgia to keep 'em out of the schools. I believe that's what put Faubus on the spot . . . .

Of course, Harris seems bound to a little self-aggrandizement.

But, nevertheless, it appears obvious that Faubus was not necessarily acting out the courage of his convictions. He was pushed.

. . .And the only good thing to be said for Faubus and Little Rock drizzles down the drain. . .

. . .And Ol' Marv' Gruesome Griffin leaps to the fore as the leading advocate of violence and anti-integration. . .

Strong Through Education, Weak Through Ignorance . .

The world's current 2.7 billion population continues to grow and multiply amazingly—and death rates are tumbling precipitously.

According to statistics released by the United States delegate to the United Nations Population Commission Kingsley Davis, the world's population has almost doubled in the past 70 years, is expected to redouble very child, theoretically, is entitled to equal educational opportunities. But does it necessarily follow that educational facilities will grow in proportion to the population increase so that children will continue to be granted such educational privileges.

We think facilities can be increased proportionately. And we see no just argument for limitation of education to the favored few—freezing of enrollment figures through entrance examinations proposed by some educators.

America has progressed ahead of the world, in most respects, due to its public school and higher educational benefits. In these trying times when Russian technological advances are evoking a tremor among many of the earth's peoples, there is—less than ever—a logical argument to support denial of equal educational opportunity through restrictive entrance examinations.

America is strong through education; it is weak through ignorance; it survives through an enlightened populace.

Hobgoblins & Propriety

Tonight's the night of hobgoblins and witches and jack 'o lanterns and all that sort of Halloween hobnobbing.

It'll be trick or treat night for many youngsters—and it'll be rest or arrest night for many of the local cops.

The spirit of Halloween should assuredly be observed, but it shouldn't be observed in a malicious sort of way which will lead to police action.

Students have in the past observed hobgoblin night with a pregnant sort of unrest but no action—or with malicious stunts. There ought to be a compromise somewhere between these two extremes.

We advocate that students give lee-way to their emotions and live a little—within the bounds of propriety, as prescribed by University officials and cops. . .

Live, darn it, but live rationally and with some conservatism. . .

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Nationalism & Neuroticism & Moderation . . .

By Curtis Gans

Nationalism and ethnocentrism are like good drinks.

In moderation they provide both the variety and flavor that life needs. In excess they drive the senses of man away from reality and carry man to actions that he in soberer moments would call irrational.

The spirits of nationalism and ethnocentrism have been responsible for almost every major war in the history of man, and it is this spirit that precludes any world union, indeed any peace.

Almost all peoples are to some extent or another influenced by the culture that surrounds them. In one way or another, they also have a certain amount of partisan feeling towards that culture, despite the criticism that they level at their nation.

It does not take many people to fan the fires of this feeling until it gets to be a militant feeling in which the people possessing this militant nationalism consider themselves superior to any breed of people on earth.

If this feeling is expanded, it will make the people suppose that in being in the "cramped quarters" that they are, they are unable to prosper as they could. They may feel that their nation is being attacked and that they must defend it. They may, if this feeling is extended, feel that they are the only people in the world capable of governing the world.

It is not hard to see why Hitler had the fantastic success he did in Germany. For he preached the superiority of the "German race," and spelled out the doctrine of the "lebensraum."

The German people, whose natural national affections were stimulated, gave support to this movement, which in the cold light of postwar, many Germans admit was wrong in principle as well as action. The result, however, was World War II.

So strong is this feeling among peoples towards their nation that Stalin in World War II dropped international communism as his policy cornerstone, and adopted the plea for the defense of "Mother Russia." This proved to be successful in uniting the Russian people of Russia to repulse the German invaders.

Hypothetically this same idea might have application in the present day. Last week, Marshal Zhukov was dismissed as head of the Russian army. If the case is that the soldiers of the Russian army are so allied to Zhukov that they present any danger to the Russian leadership, perhaps the best method of uniting the Russian people and the army under the Khrushchev and Bulganin regime is to start some military action for the glory of "Mother Russia."

It must be remembered in this modern age, that no weapon that has proved effective and useable has not been tried in war after its development. Thus, the hydrogen intercontinental ballistics missile stands as a tool in the hands of the minority in their vain hope to keep power over the majority of mankind. That minority can be a handful of men who drive into a group fervor a larger body of men called a nation who could, if not destroy the world, at least turn the world into a large ocean of blood and rubble.

This picture should strike fear and horror in the minds and hearts of the majority of men. It may eventually lead to a world union based on fear, but even this is wishful thinking.

Moreover, this union in fear is a poor substitute for international understanding ofthe natural diversities of men placed in different communities, in different geographical areas, and making different adaptations to their environment.

The U. S. is not free from this spirit of nationalism. It caused legislators to balk at signing the U. N. Declaration of Human Rights and still prohibits the U.N. flag from being flown above the U. S. flag in any place in the U. S. and at any U. S. establishment throughout the world. The spirit is being intensified by the current drive towards conformity of all Americans towards blind uncritical yes-men for the U. S. government.

It is not inconceivable that the U. S., and not Russia, can provide the generating circumstance for world war in which nuclear weapons are used, if this nationalistic trend in America continues.

It has been argued in this column that a realistic foreign policy for this country is to aid the primary spirits in many countries—nationalism and hunger. At the same time U. S. foreign policy must be far sighted enough to see that the eventual breakdown of nationalistic barriers in the U. S. and throughout the world is the ultimate goal to be sought for. Without some sublimation of the nationalistic and autonomous feeling in all countries the U.N. cannot succeed and world peace is but a pipe dream.

A world grasping for security under the dominion of fear is an awful spectre. A third world war is equally frightening. There is another alternative.

Tatum Tumblings & Vaccine Vexation

EDITOR:

Although there can be no question of an editor's right to take and express opinions as he sees fit, we feel that when these opinions are expressed in terms which are misleading, inaccurate, or unworthy of his paper, he has overstepped this right. Accordingly, we would like to take issue with the Tar Heel editorial of October 27 concerning Coach Jim Tatum's recent dismissal of three of Carolina's football players.

The right to take such action is completely Coach Tatum's, and we know of no college where such jurisdiction is shared by any branch of the student judiciary. Tatum's actions in no way could be construed—as the editor implied—as "pushing around" the Student Council.

The Student Council tries cases involving violations of the Campus Code, and such a violation may have occured in the case of the three players in question; if so, the case will be tried in the usual manner, and completely apart from any action on the part of Coach Tatum. We are sure the editor is awart of these facts, and we feel that his editorial was misleading, perhaps deliberately so.

We would also take issue with the disrespect shown Coach Tatum in the editorial in question. If the editor is not necessarily obligated to reflect student opinion, he is at least called upon to conduct himself according to the codes of gentlemenliness which Carolina students would maintain. Carolina's football coach is properly called Jim Tatum — "Jovial James," "Ten-Gallon Jim," and other such terms are not only unworthy of a gentleman, but reflect a childishness which we feel should be left out of the editorial columns of the Tar Heel.

Coach Tatum was brought to Carolina to build a football team. So far as we now know, his actions in attempting to do so have not been unethical, or in any way designed to override student government, the administration, or, least of all, to wreck the scholastic standards of the University. If the editor knows of any such incidents, he should bring them out in the open where proper consideration can be given them. Until that time, we suggest and sincerely hope that he will give his undivided attention to building a more constructive paper.

In regards to today's article on University Physician Edward M. Hedgepeth's concern over a lack of student response to the Asian flu vaccine at the infirmary, I would like to express the following:

Does Doctor Hedgepeth really expect the UNC student to hike over to the infirmary, taking time out from studies, labs, classes and various local appointments, and receive the "hurry up & waiting period offered?" wouldn't it be just as the time saving, economical and feasible to administer the vaccine for a period of two days at a temporary sub-station on campus plus the distant infirmary. Realizing, however, the flu vaccine would avert another epidemic later, I should believe infirmary officials would want to dispense these, long waited for, doses as quickly as possible.

FURNAI'S FERRETING:

General & Specific Micro's A Must . . .

By Joyce Furnai

One of the reasons we-all came to college was for the ever predominent must in really enjoying life, education. Now the question may arise—what is an education? Well, there are all sorts, varieties, and kinds; but here I make reference to the "bookish" kind. Now another question looms before the eye, this being what sort of education should we procure from books?

From the college point of view it should be the comprehension and digestion of the idea, in the main, generalized.

Now with some of Carolina in focus this is not a correct assumption. It seems that some members of the faculty are in direct opposition to this theory.

It is true that they generalize in class, sometimes even to the point of vagueness, but come quiz time, one of two things happens: either the prof asks completely detailed questions, (and in studying for the quiz the latter are about as hard to spot as a unicellular protozoan locomoted by cilia in a bucket of water) or the questions are so ambiguous that one wonders whether or not he wants a condensed version of the book or just your head. In either case some of us wind up on the losing end.

Now that we, the students, are occupying the precarious position on a limb of the tree of knowledge, we realize we must make the grade on the next quiz; therefore in our readings we seek to spot questions, and in doing so miss the crux of the well-rounded education. We work for the instructor's admiration instead of our own, and when we leave, (whether or not with degree in hand) all we have is 10% of the detailed generalized picture, the other 90%, according to psychologists, is forgotten.

Oh, well, patience is a virture, and maybe we'll pass that quiz yet, for after all that's the important thing and not how much we learn! Meanwhile better go borrow a microscope and thumb thru those books.

MORE ON TATUM:

And Comments On Edit Freedom

EDITOR:

I suppose I should address this more specifically to the person or persons who wrote, "Student Council Merits' Last Word on Suspension," The Daily Tar Heel, Sunday, Oct. 27, 1957.

Who, the d . . . . do you think you are? Or who do you think the Student Legislature is? the football coach?

Doubtless, few people agree 100 percent with what you call "Tatumian Tactics", but let's face it, "Pal," he is the coach. He is here to coach the UNC football team, and more specifically to build a football power at Carolina. He did what he had to do. So why can't you give the guy a break.

What do you say, we let the football coach coach the football team, and the DTH editor run the Daily Tar Heel, and try doing your job without always kicking the props of an already shaky pedestal. Your whole paper seems to be dedicated to the slogan, "Down with Tatum."

I'll be interested to see the Tar Heel the day the basketball team starts on the down hill skid.

Don't get me wrong. I am not bitter. However, I do think you overdo this business of giving Tatum h . . . .!

PHILLIP C. ADAMS

EDITOR:

The editorial in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel, "Student Council Merits Last Word on Suspension," was an excellent example of the enlightened editor analysis which has dominated this publication for years.

Who else would have thought that Sunny Jim might have been unfair in his actions against the three footballers. (Do you think he's possibly a subversive agent working for Bill Murray?)

Who else would have reasoned that simple infractions of training rules are under the jurisdiction of the Student Council and possibly serious enough for suspension from the University? (Are you predicting a crack-down on students who drink beer after library hours?)

Who else would have noticed that Jim's actions show he now wishes to be disdainful toward student government? (Should Mr. Evans post non-athletic sentinels outside his office door?)

Who else? No one! Nobody but you calumnious editorial-writing fanatics who can go straight to the portion of h . . . reserved for Daily Tar Heel editors, while our Tatum-blessed team compiles a winning record.

ED O'KEEFE

EDITOR:

The plague-like proportions of the current semi-epi-whatever-it-is have driven newswriter Pringle Pipkin to what surely must be an exaggeration of sympathy and concern. In today's Daily Tar Heel he writes:

"Lenoir Hall's effort to supply the students in the dorms sick with soup is reported to be going well."

Or is this a subtle way of extending her attack on Lenoir Hall where the soup has on occasion made us sick at least?

May we suggest that Pipkin at his typewriter confused with sentence structure not add to the general unhealthiness of those students on campus diseased reading the daily news.

CAROLINA CARAVAN

Fans Will See One Of Nation's Few Single Wing Teams Saturday

By JAKE WADE

And that would be the University of Tennessee Vols, Carolina's opponent in the latter's Homecoming game. Tennessee still uses the single wing, special Tennessee version. It will look a little strange, as it comes along so seldom these days.

Of course you get a smattering of it in the multiple offense, as employed by the undefeated N .C. State team ,but Tennesee really harks back to the old days.

HOW'S THAT AGAIN?—The tailback is the fellow who is equipped to do everything—run, pass, kick, block and tackle.

Tennessee has a good'un in Bobby Gordon, and the Tar Heels will have to handcuff him if they hope to spring an upset and turn back the favored Vols.

The story goes that one young Tar Heel player, who has consorted only with T and Split-T football during his career, was puzzled when one of the Carolina coaches referred to Tennessee's tailback.

"What's a tailback?" he asked.

FAIR CATCHES—Spectators at the North Carolina-Wake Forest game noticed early the tendency of the Tar Heels to call for fair catches on Deacon punts.

This was in the game's design. The Deacons in earlier game had not been distinguished with their kicking game. Tar Heels were told they likely would have little running room with short punts.

Ironically, Tar Heel halfback Ron Marquette elected to field one when he was well covered, dropped it, and Wake recovered. The Deacons' touchdown dated from that.

Later, it developed that Ron, who has been doing a fine job at halfback after being moved from quarterback, had never before handled a punt in a college game.

QUARTERBACKS—A star may have been born when sophomore Jack Cummings stepped into the starting quarterback role for the Tar Heels against Wake Forest last week. Jack made some mistakes, of course, but came off with fiine honors.

The Tar Heels have another highly competent quarterback in veteran Curtis Hathaway, who was not taken off the alternating unit because Coach Jim Tatum felt he was needed to stabilize this less experienced group.

A third highly promising quarterback, Nelson Lowe, is still on the bench. Coaches have indicated they would like to keep him there, if possible, to save a year of eligibility, since he has not played thus far. Injuries to Cummings and Hathaway could change this plan, and Lowe, one of the hardest workers on the field in practice, stays ready.

Cummings' passing and kicking have especially impressed. He is a poised, cool operative and calls a game that pleases his masters.

Frosh Soccer Match Is Postponed

Frosh, Varsity Booters Are Hardest Hit

Cancellations continued to plague Carolina's soccer teams as yesterday's scheduled game between the Carolina and N .C. State freshman teams was called off.

The game was to have been played in Raleigh and would have marked the first meeting between the two teams. Coach Chuck Hartman said that the game will be rescheduled.

The cancellation marked the fourth time a scheduled soccer game has been called off. The varsity squad has had three games called off since it last played on October 8.

The freshman team has played only one game so far this year, dropping a 2-1 decision to Duke in Chapel Hill.

The freshman will have a chance to gain revenge against Duke Friday when they meet the Blue Imps in Durham.

Carolina's varsity soccer team is scheduled to play Pfieffer on the same day in Chapel Hill.

Magazine Article On Jim Tatum Is Considered Generally Good

"Jim Tatum of the Tar Heels" is the title of a story about the celebrated Carolina head coach, who had preferred no magazine piece appear about him until he completely restored the school's football fortunes.

"Handsome and swaggering, six-foot-three and broad of shoulder, Tatum arrived at Chapel Hill in 1956 with the best ten-year record of any major college coach," the story reports. "North Carolina had turned to him after suffering through six straight losing seasons.

The story, written by Mal Mallette of the Winston-Salem Journal-Sentinel, is considered generally as highly favorable and pictures the big fellow's "generousness and considerateness" and fine treatment of his players and staff. While it emphasizes his burning desire to win all the time, it points out that he insist on his players sticking by their academics.

It quotes a Maryland associate as saying, "Jim started his career making headlines and he always will. But I know he believes anything he says is helpful to football. He would fight anybody — With words or his fist—if they gave him any guff about the value of football."

Flu Clinic Ends Today At Gerrard

Asian flu vaccine will be distributed today in another on-campus clinic at Gerrard Hall between 11 a. m. and 1 p. m.

University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth said yesterday that 242 students showed up at the on-campus clinic yesterday for the flu shots.

However, he did not think that as many students took advantage of the "convenient" and free vaccine as should have.

Dr. Hedgpeth said, "It is entirely desirable to have 75 percent of the student body take the shots."

The staff at Gerrard Hall today will be prepared to care for about 1,000 student who want the vaccine.

Two nurses, one doctor and a secretary will be at Gerrard Hall to conduct the clinic.

The clinic today and the one yesterday were set up as a convenience to the students.

The purpose of these clinics is an attempt to help curb any major outbreak of Asian flu cases here. According to a report from the State Board of Health one of every 34 Tar Heels has been afflicted with the disease since mid-September.

The report further said that in some North Carolina counties the disease is still on an increase.

VACCINE DISTRIBUTED—Shown above is one of 242 UNC students who received free Asian flu vaccine shots in Gerrard Hall Thursday. Shots will be distributed again today between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m.

Sputnik Will Be Discussed

Four campus professors will discuss Sputnik, Russia's Earth satellite, Monday, Nov. 4 at 7:30 p.m. in GM's Main Lounge, according to Bill Jones, chairman of the GMA Student-Faculty Forum Committee.

The speakers will be Professor Shepard of the political science dept., Everett Palmatier, chairman of the physics dept., and Anthony Jensano, manager of Morehead Planetarium.

Dr. Jones will discuss the impact of Sputnik on the domestic-political scene and in the world at large with respect to the position of the United States.

The scientific technological aspect of Sputnik will be considered by Dr. Palmatier.

Jenzano will point out Sputnik's significance in the realm of astronomy.

According to Bill Jones, there remains a possibility that a fourth speaker from the statistics department, who has done considerable research on the satellite, will speak.

The speakers, after giving their preliminary talks, will serve as a panel for a question and answer session, according to Bill Jones.

Refreshments will be served, and the forum is open to students, faculty and townspeople, Bill Jones said.

NO FREE FLICKS

No free flicks are scheduled tonight and Saturday night.

Friday free flicks was not ordered because of the possible conflict with the Homecoming Hop. Mike North, chariman of the GMAB Free Film Committee, said.

Saturday free flicks will be suspended indefinitely, probably for a month, he added. "We were running low on your budget by showing flicks twice a week," North said.

IDC Tries Three; Only One Guilty

Three students were tried in an official session of the IDC Court on Wednesday, reports Patrick Leonard, clerk. The students were tried for violations of regulations governing university residence halls.

One student was found guilty of possessing and using a hot plate in his room. He was also charged for stapling papers to his dresser. The court fined him $2.50 and put an official reprimand on his record.

The court found the other two students not guilty of damage to university property.

Editorship Recall Vote Threatened

Solons Defeat Lenoir Hall Bill

Tarnation Debts Will Be Paid

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature, meeting last night, defeated a bill to establish a committee to study Lenoir Hall and a resolution calling for trash cans in the dormitory areas.

The legislature passed by a vote of 21 to 13 a bill to pay debts of the Tarnation, former campus humor magazine. The sum of the bill is $451.06 which will be paid by the Student Activities Fund.

After the business of the evening was concluded, Kannaiah Konuri, a private citizen who is a good will ambassador from India, spoke to the body on the problems which the Indians face.

The Ways and Means Committee report deleted some of the more "obnoxious parts" from Pat Adams' (SP) bill 'to investigate Lenoir Hall so that the bill was less pointed at the management of Lenoir Hall.

Speaking on the bill Adams said he had made the bill constructive. He charged, however, that some of the food in the 40 cent special "was just not up to par." The bill failed 28 to 10.

In speaking for his bill to place trash cans in the dormitory areas, Al Walters (SP) said "no one can honestly say that trash is better looking than trash cans."

The bill was defeated by a vote of 15-21; the vote against the bill was largely from the University Party.

At this point Speaker Don Furtado rebuked what he called "a usually bi-partisan legislature" for "acting like children." He said he did not think the legislators were thinking for themselves.

Ed Levy (UP) termed the payment of the Tarnation debt a "moral issue." He claimed the Tarnation was considered an official organ of student government. He did, however, say that when the Tarnation went out of business it was receiving student funds.

Levy said he did not believe that this payment would be setting "a bad precedent."

Long opposed the measure and named three organizations which also had debts. He claimed the debt was bad management on the part of the printshop.

He called it selling a bad precedent and said he would introduce three bills to pay the other organization's debts.

There was a good deal of debate as to whether the printshop thought the Tarnation was being supported by student funds. The opposition to the bill came largely from the Student Party.

Petitions Assert Bass 'Incompetent' For Top Daily Tar Heel Office

A recall election for editorship of The Daily Tar Heel was in the making today and backers were hoping to include the vote in November 12 campus elections.

Petitions calling for recall were distributed yesterday, asserting that Editor Neil Bass "has proven himself incompetent, irresponsible and incapable of functioning any longer in his present capacity."

The petitions were being circulated by Wally Kuralt, sophomore from Charlotte. He declined to say who else was backing the recall vote.

"Actually it doesn't matter," he said, "because there are so many of them."

Neither would Kuralt elaborate on charges against Bass, although he said they grew out of recent editorial stands taken by the campus newspaper.

Kuralt said 1,050 names—or one-seventh of the student body—are required to call the revote. He said he believes the names will be obtained by Friday night.

Asked who might oppose Bass in the recall, he said that backers of the vote "have no one in mind to run for the post."

Under the student constitution, petitions with the required number of names would be handed to Student Body President Sonny Evans, who would then call for the election.

If a sufficient number of names are obtained for the recall vote it would mark the second such election held on the UNC campus in the past three years.

Co-editors Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder soundly defeated a recall opponent in February, 1956, in the first recall election in the history of the university.

Students demanded a recall then after Kraar and Yoder had editorially attacked football coach Jim Tatum, predicting a return of "big time athletics" to the UNC campus.

Press Freedom Is Real Issue In Vote — Bass

Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass predicted today that UNC students "will uphold editorial freedom of expression" if a threatened recall vote is effected here.

He said the issue involved" in the recall which Sophomore Wally Kuralt initiated Thursday is "freedom of the press guaranteed under Art. I of the United States Constitution."

Bass's remarks came after Kuralt announced distribution of petitions across campus charging that the current editor is "incompetent" for the post.

"Petitioner Kuralt is endangering, far more than he realizes, editorial freedom of expression," Bass remarked. "If such recall action were to be successfull any future editor would be working under severe limitation of expression."

Bass said the "threatening possibility of a recall election would force him to limit his editorial coverage purely to popular issues."

"It appears that petitioner Kuralt —riding on the coat tails of opposition aroused by editorials opposing professional athletics—feels he can forward his own editorial aspirations, or those of a hidden dark horse whom he will support."

The curent editor continued that "connetations of petitioner Kuralt's ambitious threatened recall election are vastly more far-reaching than he imagines."

"I feel confident," Bass added, "that the student body—regardless of opposition on particular issues —will uphold editorial freedom of expresion and see through petitioner Kuralt's dangerous schemes."

Planetarium Adds Staffers

Retired Naval Captain Walter C. Holt and Mrs. R. L. Glasser have joined the staff of the Morehead Planetarium, it was announced today by Planetarium Manager A. F. Jenzano.

Captain Holt will asist Dr. Otto Struhman, retired UNC physics professor, as narrator of the special demonstrations for school children, and Mrs. Glasser heads the newly created division of educational activities.

A line officer while in service, Capt. Holt held staff positions with the Atlantic Fleet Command and in Canada, and commanded a ship during World War II. "His interest in navigation as well as his knowledge of astronomy well-equips him as a narrator," Jenzano said.

Mrs. Glasser, whose husband is a member of the faculty of the UNC School of Machine, is a school teacher by profesion, having taught elementary grades in the Baltimore County Schools in Maryland. She conducts the school groups through the Planetarium's art and science gallaries and answers questions of children in order that they may better appreciate and understand the sciences.

The Planetarium's demonstrations for school children ave given at 11 a. m. and 1 p. m. on Wednesdays through Fridays during the school year. Following the visit to the Planetarium, school groups, which have made requests in advance, will be taken on a guided tour of one of the University's science departments.

SP Candidates Wanted At 'Y'

Studen' Party candidates who have not visited the Student Party campaign headquarters, upstairs in the YMCA, are urgedto report to Campaign Coordinator Rudy Edwards or Legislative Coordinator Erwin Fuller today between 2-5 p. m.

Candidates have been asked to bring a reproducible photograph of themselves and their elections fee.

Today is the final doy for submitting photographs.

World In Brief

Middle East

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Oct. 303. (AP)—Rival plans for settling the Syrian-Turkish border crisis were submitted to the U.N. General Assembly today. They reflected a split in the 82-nation body and it appeared doubtful if either would get the required two-thirds approval.

Syria, which has been contending for more than three weeks that Turkey is about to launch an attack, formally proposed that the assembly appoint a seven-nation fact-finding commission to investigate the situation on both sides of the border.

Labor Probe

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (AP)—A lawyer for the Englander Co. testified today the big mattress firm signed a master contract with the teamsters union at a time when only 6 of its 17 plants were organized by the teamsters.

Sydney Korshak of Chicago, the attorney, told the Senate rackets committee the company accepted the word of a teamsters official that the union represented a majority of Englander's employes throughout the country.

At the time, Korshak testified, the Teamsters had organized six of the company's plants, while one was organized by the retail clerks and one by the steel workers.

Robert F. Kennedy, committee counsel, said this meant that employes in nine plants were brought into the teamsters without any election or any consultation on whether they wanted to be represented by the union.

Economy

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (AP)—President Eisenhower said today the nation's economy is "taking a breather after a long surge of rising effort." Any serious downturn would bring prompt government action, he indicated.

Eisenhower told his news conference he sees conflicting factors at work on the economic scene—and not all of them either on the downside or the upside.

The government, he said, is watching all sectors of the economy very closely so officials will "be ready to move in when they possibly can."

Presidential advisers, he reported, are also keeping tabs of the stock market "as an index of the confidence of people" in the nation's well-being.

CANDIDATES APPROVED

The Women's Bi-Partisan Board has endorsed the following girls as candidates for Women's Honor Council in the fall elections: Nancy Adams, Anne Eckerson, Sue Donisthorpe, Susanne Hafer, Wanda Hearne, Douglas Kellam, Betty Root, Susan Purser, Lillian Shannon house, Carolyn Vaught, Paddy Wall, Jane Welsh. There are to be four junior seats filled in the election.

Resentment

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30. (AP)—A long classified U. S. Army document reports there has been considerable resentment among Soviet military men over meddling by politicians in military matters.

It said that after wartime glory, some of the top Red Army men were shabbily treated.

The document is four years old. It apparently was declassified from its secrecy ranking about two months ago, but quietly.

A second, and generally ignored, Army publication, "The Information Digest," indicates the Army recently completed a reappraisal of the Soviet armed forces —and that U. S. superiority is doubtful.

Medical Staff Again Lauded

Tom Walters, IDC President, thanked Dr. Hedgpeth and the University medical staff for caring for patients during the recent flu-like epidemic in an "open letter" yesterday.

In this letter, Walters said:

"Speaking in behalf of the men's Interdormitory Council and for residents of the men's dorms at UNC, I want to thank Dr. Hedgpeth and the staff of the student infirmary for the fine, conscientious consideration which they showed to those of us who were affected by the recent epidemic of flu.

"There are many examples of this fine work in the dormitories where there were excessive cases and where these cases could not have possibly visited the infirmary. The doctors and nurses on the staff then went beyond their duty in order to maintain the best care for these marooned persons."

ALL SAINTS DAY

Today being Feast of All Saints day, there will be a celebration of the Holy Eucharist at 5:30 p.m. at Chapel of the Cross Episcopal Church.

HOMECOMING TIME AGAIN

Activities Tomorrow Will Usher In Weekend

By DAVIS YOUNG

Parades, rallies, dances, beauty contests, receptions, and frat hops will all play an important part in the 1957 Homecoming Day festivities beginning tomorrow night on the eve of the Carolina—Tennessee game.

A parade will start the ball rolling at 7 p.m. Friday night. It will kick off at Wollen Gym going up to Pittsboro Rd., the Carolina Inn, Raleigh St. and back to the parking lot by the gym.

Featured in the parade will be the cheerleaders, the band, the team, the Homecoming Queen contestants and a police escort. The termination of the parade will mark the initiation of the pep rally and bon-fire ceremonies behind Wollen Gym.

It is hoped that various team leaders will speak to the crowd at some time during the rally. Head Cheerleader Frank Black had this to say concerning tonight's rally: "Once again I urge the entire student body and anyone back for Homecoming to turn out for the rally.

"These rallies are extremely important to the morale of the team. Let's show Tatum and Co. that we are behind them 100 per cent.

Following the rally the annual "Homecoming Hop" will begin in the gym featuring the music of "The Embers," a well known local combo and a floor show. Sometime during the dance the Homecoming Queen will be selected and presented along with the nine other finalists composing the Homecoming Court.

On Saturday, Homecoming displays will be shown and judged. They are being sponsored by the dorms and fraternities. The winners will be announced at half-time and presented trophies by the University Club.

Saturday's game will pit the wice-beaten Tarheels against the leceptive single wing forces of Tennessee's Bowden Wyatt. Wyatt's charges have met defeat once this season at the hands of Auburn 7-0, and are always dangerous.

Immediately following the game there will be a reception at Graham Memorial for alumni and friends. Music will be provided with Durward Jones of Chapel Hill acting as master of ceremonies.

Saturday night will see a host of fraternity gatherings from one end of the campus to the other. At 1 a.m. the coeds will be back in the dorms, and Homecoming Day 1957 will fade into the past.

Auto Dealers

MOORESVILLE, N. C., Oct. 31 (AP)—Two Georgia automobile dealers were killed and a third was injured early today when a freight train struck their car at a crossing near here.

Police identified the dead as Reuben John Westbrooks, 47, of Mt. Airy, Ga., father of 11 children; and John K. McDuffie, 44, of Baldwin, Ga., father of two children.

The injured man, 30-yearold Edwin Blackburn of Alto, Ga., suffered a broken leg and internal injuries, but was listed in good condition. The three were on a northbound trip to buy automobiles.

Campus Stores & Prices: Remedial Action Needed

Campus stores are among the most cussed and discussed institutions on this campus.

The reasons for this vociferous discussion of campus stores — the book exchange, "Y" supply room, etc.—are outlined very effectively in Student Party legislative Rep. Al Alphin's resolution urging the Campus Stores Committee to examine the reasons for "high prices." Alphin mentions:

(1) High prices charged for textbooks.

(2) Rapidity with which required textbooks are changed.

(3) Phenominally low prices which are paid for out-of-date books. (Such books may be resold by Campus Stores at other institutions for much higher prices than are paid students for them—triple or more.)

(4) The Book Exchange philosophy that profits are to be used for scholarships. (This is taxing the entire student body for the benefit of amazingly few.)

Alphin has an extremely good idea in his Article II of the resolution:

"The Campus Stores Committee should do some research on the idea of locating in advance where out-of-date books are to be used at other schools, in order that more than a token price can be obtained for said books."

We are amazed that the Student Legislature didn't set up a separate investigating committee to examine the Campus Stores and their prices.

But since Alphin and the legislators have decided to work through the existing organization—the Campus Stores Committee—then an immediate report should be forthcoming as to the results of the "research."

Some action should definitely be taken to insure that students get higher remittances for out-of-date books. And that overall book exchange prices be lowered.

We have never particularly catered to the idea that the overall student body should be taxed—through higher exchange prices—so that a minority may benefit through scholarships.

Perhaps if prices are to remain high, then the entire student body should benefit from profits—to the tune of some $50,000 dollars per annum—through kick-backs to improve social facilities in dormitories and commensurate kick-backs to fraternities and sororities.

The profits could be allocated half to the scholarship fund and half to individual dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

Some remedial and beneficial action has been taken through the allocation of a portion of vending machine profits to individual dormitories. But we offer these alternatives to the Campus Stores authorities:

(1) Either lower the overall prices and negotiate with other institutions so that students may get more cash for out-of-date books.

(2) Or divide rather extortionate profits on a pro rata basis between the scholarship fund, which benefits many deserving students, and individual dormitories, fraternities and sororities.

One course or the other should be taken immediately—if not sooner.

Soviet Schedule On Cue, De-Zhukovization & Flu

Events are occurring right on schedule in the Soviet Union.

We felt a de-Zhukovization was in order, just as Communist Party Chief Nikita Khrushchev ordered a de-Stalinization in his ever-tightening plot to ascend to the pinnacle of communist dictatorship.

We also felt that the influenza epidemic sweeping the world definitely could not subside without the soviets getting some propaganda benefits from it.

Now both predictions have come to pass.

In Moscow, Defense Minister and army chief Georgia Zhukov has been accusd by the Communist Party Central Committee of attempting to become another Napolean Bonaparte. Thus party Chief Krushchev is tightening his web, and is overriding Marshal Zhukov's popularity with his troops through an assertion of disloyalty and "Bonapartism."

And in Washington, a visiting Soviet woman doctor has claimed development of a quick-acting, cheap and highly efficient "cure" for Asian Flu. Another claimed example of Russia's high-riding, technological advances.

But we wonder what K's communist-tainted friends in Asia—Nationalistic Nasser of Egypt, for example—would say about the reputed cure for stamping out Asian flu???

And we wonder if Zhukov's military associates will buy K's all too familiar" de-ization" platitudes??? But then, when only one idea is allowed access to the minds of a people, such people usually buy that idea at face value.

Them Good Ol' Trustees

Land-o'-goshen, what's this here modern generation a-comin' to?

Them young'uns over thar' at Wake Forest and at Meredith are now a-wantin' to dance them modern dances, and get all next to each other.

But they'll shore never be able to do all that wigglin' and twistin' together as long as we've got them plain old, down-to-earth trustees.

Why, even the General Board of the Baptist State Convention is a-trvin' to git dancin' allowed on them campuses.

But they shore ain't gonna' be able to do it, 'cause we've got good, old down-to-earth, plain, old-fashioned trustees at them two schools to keep out this new-fangled dancin'.

Thank God for them trustees.

(And thank God for the trustees here at the University who have at least enough modernism about them to realize that dancing is a pleasurable and accepted social custom.)

Energy For Little Hans & Dike Drips

Harry Kirschner

Have you ever heard the old story of little Hans who saw the leak in the dike and stopped it with his finger, saving the town? I saw the modern version on television recently.

Little Hans was plodding home one evening after taking part in a gang war held in the next town. While walking beside the great dike he saw water dripping through a very small opening. True to the blood, he jumped up and stuck his finger in it. Then he yelled for help.

The town was far away but he thought someone might hear him. He yelled again and again.

No one came. He grew very tired standing there, holding the whole weight of the sea back with the tip of his finger. After a time his cries had grown feeble. "Help . . . gasp . . . help . . ."

It looked like the end when suddenly Snap, Crackle and Pop appeared. They quickly gave little Hans a bowl of Rice Mushies for energy. His strength returned with each mouthful, and in a wink of an eye he was strong enough to run to town for help and be back again before the hole in the dike got any larger, . . . he thought.

Off he ran at full speed. But suddenly Little Abner appeared in front of him. Little Hans was running too fast to stop so Abner knocked him down, and stuffed a bowl of scalding hot Cream of Glop down his throat—for energy.

Little Hans, reeling slightly and feeling somewhat heavy in his stomach, started out for town again. He was running along as fast as he could when he heard hoof beats coming up from behind.

The Cisco Kid, at a full gallop, lassoed him neatly around the neck and dragged him down. Dismounting, he ran over and jumped on little Hans' chest and forced him to eat, piece by piece, a giant sandwich loaf of Very Bottom Bread—for energy.

Little Hans started out once again, somewhat the worse for wear. Then he heard hoof beats once more. Profiting from experience, he threw himself to the ground and clasped his arms around his neck. Wild Bill jumped from his horse and landed squarely on Little Hans' chest. Though the boy struggled some, he managed to force him to eat a giant-sized box of Sugar Granite Flakes—for energy.

Little Hans felt quite sick by this time, but he kept going toward the town as fast as he could. His stomach was bloated, and his head reeled to the point where he could not see. He could still hear, however, and he plodded on hopefully as he heard the dike crumbling behind him.

Out of nowhere Fearless Fosdick appeared. He ran up to little Hans, poured a bottle of Tamestump Hair Oil over his head and smoothed it down with his hands, so that he would look good when he got to town.

Finally little Hans staggered into the town square and collapsed. The townspeople ran out to him, but he was so sick that he could tell them nothing. He only yelled because the hair oil had gotten into his eyes, causing much pain.

The townspeople could not hear the dike crash away over his screaming. In two minutes the town was flooded, and all the inhabitants drowned.

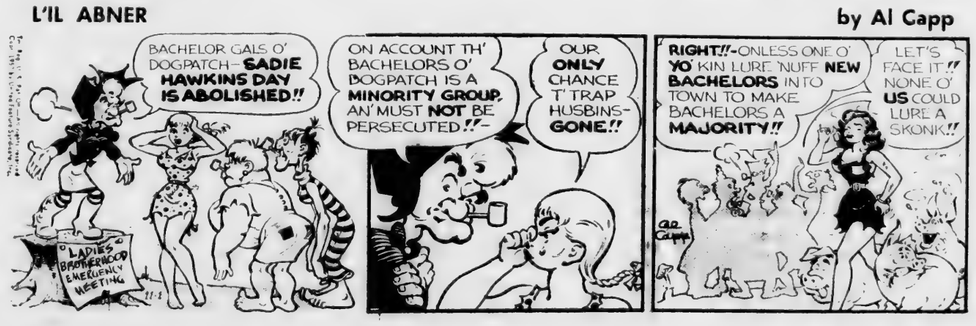
On Human Rights:

Trees With Yellow Leaves And Innate Inferiority Of Others?

(The following selection is taken from a commentary by Edward P. Morgan, who recently spoke here at a YMCA-YWCA-sponsored forum on human rights and civil liberties, Mr. Morgan, commentator for the American Broadcasting Network, provides some excellent food for thought on the issue of civil rights and the general atmosphere of Chapel Hill, its liberties and restrictions. The Editor)

Nobody arbitrarily labels a tree with yellow leaves as being inferior to or having fewer natural rights than a tree with orange leaves ,or brown, or evergreen. But man has not yet learned to live in such harmony. Along the highway in front of certain motels there stood signs which shattered the glowing spectrum of the landscape with one starkly mildewed word. "Colored." It can and should be said that however jarring this label, it is less hypocritical than the real but unadvertised segregation on almost every traveler's route above the Mason and Dixon line.

But how important are any human rights if our society is not strong enough to resist intelligently the challenge of Sputnik and its menacing cousin, the missile? Have we Americans gone irretrievably soft? Just about the time I was crossing the state line into North Carolina, I picked up on the car radio an interview with a college girl from Georgia who was explaining what sorority rush week was like at Chapel Hill. It was, she said, in an accent twice as wide as Peachtree street, the most exciting thing! How do you know, she was asked, which sorority to choose? "Why," she said, "that's easy. You just look at the girls and you decide on the basis of how cute they are and how much fun they would be to live with."



Life at North Carolina, however, as I might have suspected from the university's fine tradition, is not all fun and games. I was quickly propelled into eager, alert, questioning groups of students and faculty. The university was one of the first southern institutions to accept Negroes in graduate school and has had them long enough now as undergraduates not to be overly self-conscious about it. Small beginnings as they may be, such positive items are well to remember; they make the Little Rocks—and indeed the less-publicized Levittowns—that much less agonizing.

There is an atmosphere here that an inhabitant of Washington is not used to. It crackles and not just with the frosty bite of fall. You encounter a ruddy-cheeked European-born professor and his dark-complexioned equally European wife, and he tells you with a chuckle that on the birth certificate form for their baby they encountered questions as to they filled in the first one with the parents' race, and color. So "human." and the second with "pink" and "beige" respectively.

You go to a church service on the campus conducted by a minister who is a fixture in the community but who for his beliefs that Christianity should be applied as well as vocalized has been defrocked by his denomination. You meet a charming, white-haired trouble-maker, resident of Chapel Hill, who makes a career of being against virtually everything and proclaiming her stand, audibly. And you chat with an ex-GI from Raleigh, a law student now, who experienced integration in the armed forces and believes in it and is not afraid to say so though his parents do not hold with him and cannot understand his change.

It is not that these people have the answers. It is that they are looking for the answers, actively, in an atmosphere that encourages search. There is something exciting and reassuring in witnessing this calisthenic of sharpening the mind, of flexing the brain muscles to think. The trouble is the exercise is not pursued enough on a national scale. Why, even when Congress is in session, Washington is never like this.

Combustion On Tatumism Edits

EDITOR:

To imply that one man, because he is the best football coach in the country, is responsible for the academic downfall of a university is even more ridiculous than allowing irritation from an attack of flu to justify suggestions that the best medical staff in the country is incompetent. (When overloaded and probably under-financed, judging from the infirmary's food — or lack of it.)

Having sampled coffee in various parts of the world I feel qualified to say that, with the single exception of that encountered one miserable morning in a godforsaken hole-in-the-wall bar in Yokosuka, Japan, the infirmary's is without doubt the most regurgitable excuse for a beverage ever concocted.

Equally ridiculous, however, is the limiting, by investigating committees, of the freedom of the best press in the country because of the misplaced exaggerations of one man whose ill-chosen, harrowing profession (selling papers) requires constant radicalism to create news when there is none.

Any of the above mentioned "bests" desirous of expressing their appreciation may feel free to send small tokens, preferably liquid in form, to room 105 Manly where the supply of the only time-tested and truly reliable flu preventative is running dangerously low.

EDITOR:

Unfortunately, it has become painfully clear that the sickly editorial page of last year's Daily Tar Heel and the subsequent student embarassment was not sufficient warning to prevent a repeat performance this semester. Those numerous editorials which appeared in the Winter of '56 and the Spring of '57—pitifully poor both in taste and content—are no match for the childishness and absurdity of several printed in the past week. "This great University" that you speak of is being hurt—not by the presence of Mr. Tatum, a proficient and capable man in his own right; rather it is being hurt by one narrow-minded individual who purports to reflect the opinion of the entire student body. Let us look for a moment at your opinions, as you have expressed them, and differentiate them from the facts.

Concerning the suspension of the three football players last week you suggested that the Student Council try the offenders and implied that Tatum had neither offered them a fair chance nor exercised proper authority in the matter. Common sense points out your inconsistency in thought here: these boys broke training rules, not the Campus Code, and were disciplined by the proper authority —their coach. Mr. Tatum would be the last person not to give them a fair chance; they are as important to him as your typewritter is to you.

In another editorial you borrowed a quotation from the Saturday Evening Post and used it out of context to lend an entirely different meaning from that of the article. You said, "Tatum also has said, 'It's a said occasion when academic leaders don't have a sufficient education in athletics—'" while the completion of this quotation is "to appreciate the benefits which athletes receive from the field of sports." Throughout this editorial and others, also, you seem to delight in such expressions as "ten-gallon-headed monster," "swaggering Jim Tatum," and "Jovial James." Stop and think for a minute. Isn't this a pretty childish way of indeavoring to get across your point?

Jim Tatum was invited to come here and coach the Tar Heels; he did not force his way in. His record at the University of Maryland and the standing of that school were duly considered before an invitation was extended. You have made no valid comparison between the combination of the athletics and academics at Maryland and that combination here at Carolina. A good football team here will not damage our academic standards any more than one has at Duke University.

In conclusion, one further point needs to be made. It concerns the effect of your editorials about Mr. Tatum. Apparently it is not enough that you cause dismay among the great majority of students on this campus. Consider, if you will, what younger brothers and sisters of these students, who are still in high school, must think when they read our paper. If, however, you persist in thinking that you truly represent the student's feelings, why not make some effort to verify your stand—i.e., conduct a poll, invite letters, etc.? In any event, if you are unwilling to do that, why not show the common decency to let a fine man, who's doing an awfully good job already, alone.

ROBERT HASTINGS PERRY

And One More

EDITOR:

According to the editorial in Sunday's Daily Tar Heel entitled "Student Council Merits Last Word On Suspension," I have evidently been living under the false illusion that coaches have the authority to suspend any players who break training rules when all this time it has been up to the Student Council to take all disciplinary actions necessary to keep athletes in line.

Apparently the writer of the editorial feels that Coach Tatum has been overbearing, also, in that he has been spending his time on the practice field instead of in the classroom teaching his players the sciences and liberal arts.

Also, it is suggested that now is the time for "Jovial James" to leave town. Now that's not very nice, considering that fact that he has just recently arrived. After all, don't we like to see our football team win? A 4-2 record isn't bad at all.

I believe in the Student Council and the Campus Code just as much as anyone else, and I also believe that football players are subject to them the same as any Carolina student. However, I am of the opinion that the selection, training, and discipling of athletes who break training should be left up to the coaches and not the Student Council. Anyone who actually believes all the "junk" put into the above mentioned editorial, perhaps should trip out of town himself and see just how other college football teams operate.

Five Years Asked For Girard

MAEBASHI, Japan, Oct. 31 — (AP) — The prosecution conceded today William S. Girard did not intend to kill a Japanese shell scavenger and asked a Japanese court to give him a 5-year sentence. It could have demanded 15 years.

Before resting its case, however, the prosecution pictured the 22-year-old Ottawa, Ill., soldier as unrepentant about the death of Mrs. Naka Sakai on a firing range Jan. 30. The question of repentance is important in Japanese courts.

Girard's attorneys will summarize the defense Tuesday. They will contend that while Girard admits firing an empty shell casing from his grenade launcher he acted while on official guard duty.

The three-judge court expects to hand down a verdict two weeks hence. There was much speculation the court, if it convicts Girard, may set sentence at two years or grant a three-year suspended sentence. That would permit Girard to return to the United States with his Japanese wife.

Suspended sentences are frequent in Japan for first offenders, especially foreigners. Acquittals are rare.

Repentance, a factor in oriental justice regardless of blame, could figure in whether a sentence is suspended. The prosecution's final statement argued Girard "has not taken enough measures to console the soul of the victim or to apologize or console the family and . . . we cannot find any evidence of his real repentance."

Will Baptists Dance? Convention To Decide

RALEIGH, Oct. 313—(AP)—The burning issue among North Carolina Baptists of whether dancing will be permitted on the campuses of Wake Forest and Meredith colleges was turned over to the Baptist State Convention today for a decision.

The decision to bring the issue formally to the floor of the convention when it meets in Raleigh Nov. 19 was made at meetings of the convention's general board and board of trustees of the two Baptist colleges.

The Wake Forest and Meredith trustees agreed in a compromise to "suspend" their recent actions in voting to permit social dancing on their campuses pending action by the full state convention.

The general board, in turn, voted to "recommend without prejudice that the convention review its action of 1937 with regard to the prohibition of social dancing in connection with student life in our colleges."

Members of the board made it clear that its recommendation was neither "endorsing dancing nor endorsing it."

"All we are saying is that here are two colleges with a problem and we are asking you to discuss their problem," said Dr. Perry W. Crouch of Asheville, president of the general board.

Earlier this year both the Wake Forest College and Meredith College trustees voted to allow dancing on the two campuses. At a meeting July 22, the general board adopted a resolution expressing "regret" at the action and calling on the two boards "to change as soon as possible their position toward dancing." Later the two college boards voted to reaffirm their position.

In 1937, the state convention adopted a resolution in which it condemned dancing saying it "is demoralizing and tends toward immorality." It expressed the convention's "will and desire that no college or school . . . owned and maintained by this convention, shall at any time . . . promote or allow promoted dancing in its premises."

At the start of today's session, M. A. Huggins, executive general secretary of the convention, reminded the board of the 1937 convention action and told it that "whether we like it or not it still stands."

Representatives of the two college boards presented reasons why they voted to permit dancing. In general, they said the students were going to dance anyway and it would be better for the dances to be held where some control and supervision could be exercised.

"We have condoned no evil," said W. H. Weatherspoon of the Meredith board. "We have undertaken to watch over it. We have not promoted it." He added that "despite all the preaching, you have not produced an ideal situation. They dance at home. They have for years. In my judgment they will be dancing for years to come."

Weatherspoon said that 90 per cent of the parents of Meredith students had written the college asking that their daughters be allowed to dance.

She acknowledged that dancing would present problems, but, she asked if it were "the responsibility of the trustees to say there shall be no dancing or to see that all forms of recreation take place under the best possible conditions."

'Hubcap' Theft Reported Here

A complaint filed with the Chapel Hill Police Department yesterday charged persons unknown with the theft of four hubcaps from a car parked near McIver dorm early Thursday morning.

The hubcaps were from a 1955 model Olds owned by Carolyn Peal, resident of McIver dormitory.

McIver dormitory President Caroline Brown Warren witnessed the incident. She immediately called Chapel Hill police, who promptly arrived, but were nuable to apprehend the theives.

Mrs. Warren placed the time of the theft about 12:50 a. m. According to her, the boys left the scene in a blue and white, 2 door, 1956, Ford automobile. She stated that she saw two boys, but that a third might have been in the car.

Chapel Hill Police reported that no arrests have yet been made, but they are working on the case.

This was the second complaint of this type filed with the police department yesterday. The other case involved the theft of hubcaps from a 1953 Plymouth belonging to Betty Riggins of Durham Apartments.

Syrian Crisis Tension Eases

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Oct. 31 —(AP)—U.N. diplomats sought today to come up with a compromise solution on the Turkish-Syrian border crisis. Tension over the situation eased.

With the 82-nation General Assembly in adjournment until tomorrow on the Middle East problem, delegates were in private huddles in an effort to find a solution acceptable to both sides.

Ambassador Farid Zeineddine of Syria said his country is ready to consider a compromise on its complaint that Turkish troops concentrations on the Syrian-Turkish border are a threat to his country and world peace. He did not spell out what kind of a compromise Syria would accept.

Syria has proposed that a seven-nation fact-finding inquiry commission be sent to the border area and report back to the U.N. within two weeks.

Another resolution, introduced by seven nations and supported by the United States, would have Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold work out a solution if other media tion efforts fail.

Chief interest centered on a suggestion by India to bring Turkey and Syria around the conference table using the "good offices" of Hammarskjold.

Syria was reluctant to accept a role for Hammarsqjold, but India was trying to overcome Syria's objections by having any formal proposal include disavowals by Turkey of any aggressive intent toward her Arab neighbor.

Several of the Colombo powers such as Indonesia were lining up with India. Syria was reported desirous of having Egypt and Saudi Arabia included as co-sponsors of any compromise plan.

Frat Banquet Is Set Today

The UNC chapter of Lambda Chi Alpha, national social fraternity, will hold its 30th anniversary banquet Friday night, Nov. 1, with J. Spencer Love of Greensboro as main speaker.

Love, who is chairman of the Board of Directors of Burlington Industries, will be one of six honor guests at the banquet, set for 6:30 p. m. in the Carolina Inn ballroom.

Other guests will be the Rev. Lee F. Tuttle, Grand High Gama of Lambda Chi Alpha; Archie R. Davis of Durham, president of the Gamma-Nu Foundation; President William C. Friday of the Consolidated University; Chancellor William B. Aycock of the University at Chapel Hill; and Dr. Wallace E. Caldwell, UNC professor of history.

The Gamma-Nu chapter's four nominees for the Yackety-Yack beauty contest, to be held soon on the campus, will also be recognized at the banquet. They are Misses Carrie Malvina Baker, Wilson; Elizabeth French Grayson, Dallas, Tex.; Helen Beatrice Hunger, Montclair, N. J.; and Diana Ruth Johnson, Asheboro.

MEMPHIS, Tenn.—The 1958 Maid of Cotton will open her 50,000-mile international tour in Jamaica at the height of the winter resort season, the National Cotton Council announced today.

The new fashion and good will envoy of the cotton industry will fly from New York to the Caribbean island on January 28 via a DC-7C of the British Overseas Airways.

During her six-day visit in Jamaica, the Maid will appear in a charity fashion show featuring outstanding cottons from the 1958 lines of leading American designers. The show will take place on the smart tropicial terrace of the Round Hill Club on Montego. Fashion commentator will be Mrs. Ouida Wagner of BOAC, the Maid's flight wardrobe advisor.

The Round Hill Club, the Maid's Jamaica headquarters, is located near the end of a peninsula richly endowed in West Indian history. Atop the hill itself are the remains of a fortress built by the Spanish in the sixteenth century and later reconstructed by the British.

Nearby, too, was the anchorage and camp for the ships and men of Henry Morgan, the famous English pirate who raided Spanish ships and cities.

While in Jamaica, the Maid of Cotton will visit New Seville, where Diego Columbus, son of the great discoverer, built the first cathedral in the New World. In the capital city of Kingston, she will view the brilliantly colored tropical plants of the Royal Botanic Gardens. She also will have the opportunity to participate in such year-round sports of the island as tennis, golf, fishing, and boating.

A complete motion pictures record of the Maid's visit to Jamaica will be made for later release throughout the United States.

Plans for the trip— first to be made to Jamaica by a Maid of Cotton—are being worked out by the Council in cooperation with the Jamaica Tourist Board, an official agency of the island's government.

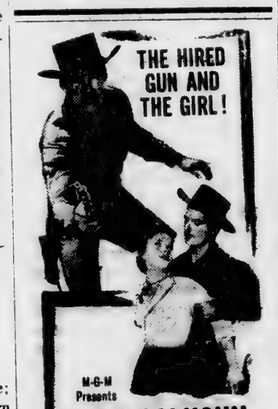
The Maid will return from Jamaica to Miami on February 2 via British West Indian Airways. Her North American tour will take her to 32 cities in the United States and Canada before she leaves for Europe via BOAC in early June.

To be eligible to be Maid of Cotton, a girl must have been born in a cotton producing state, must be between 19 and 25, at least 5 feet, 5 inches tall, and must never have been married. Application forms may be obtained from the National Cotton Council, P. O. Box 9905, Memphis 12, Tenn. Deadline for applications is December 1, 1957.

Sponsors of the Maid of Cotton tour are the National Cotton Council, Memphis Cotton Carnival Association, and the Cotton Exchanges of Memphis, New York, and New Orleans.

Self-Defense

JACKSONVILLE, N. C., Oct. 31 (AP)—Police today quoted a Negro civilian worker at the nearby Camp Lejeune Marine base as saying it was self-defense in a quarrel over his wife that led to the pistol slaying of a Negro Marine this week.



Onslow County Chief Deputy H. R. Morton said June Humphry, 25, asserted in a statement that Staff Sgt. Richard A. Watkins, also, 25, had been going with Mrs. Humphry and he found them at a third person's home Monday night.

Phonics In Reading Program To Be Aired

The use of "phonics" in the school's reading program will be discused here Friday and Saturday at the fourth statewide Conference on the Teaching of Reading.

Opening session is scheduled for 8 p. m. Friday night at Carroll Hall, with Dr. Carl F. Brown of the UNC Education School presiding. Dr. Donald Durrell, director of Boston University's reading program, will speak on "What is the Place of Phonics in the Reading Program?"

Following Dr. Durrell's talk, a reception for the conferees will be held in Peabody Hall.

Group discussions of the phonics question will be held Saturday morning, with several North Carolina educators serving as consultants. They are David Shepherd, director of Charlotte's reading program; Miss Mabel Rudisill, instructor at Duke University; Miss Elizabeth Black of Queens College, Charlotte; Mrs. Annie Knotts Hoyle of Western Carolina College, Cullowhee; Keith Holmes of East Carolina College, Greenville; and Miss Julia Wetherington of the State Department of Public Instruction in Raleigh.

Four supervisors of public schools will lead these morning talks: Mrs. Bernice Wade, Chapel Hill; Miss Frances Lacy, Raleigh; Miss Jessie Baxter, Alamance County; and Miss Sallie Newman, Person County.

Tht final conference talk, set for 10:45 a. m. Saturday, will be given by Dr. Durrell, speaking on "The Instructional Program in Phonics.

Dr. Durrell, a former dean at Boston University, is one of the leading authorities in reading and reserach in phonics, and is known as an author, lecturer and creator of educational and diagnostic tests.

Homecoming Features Old And Colorful Rivalry

Tomorrow is Homecoming Day at Carolina and there could be no more appropriate opponent than Tennessee to help Tar Heelia celebrate this annual event.

The Carolina-Tennessee rivalry dates all the way back to 1893 when the Tar Heels routed the boys from over the mountain, 60-0. Since then, the two clubs have furnished North Carolina and Tennessee fans some outstanding football.

The Vols hold a 17-8-1 all-time edge in the colorful series. The Tar Heels haven't been able to beat the single wing minded Vols since 1948 when Charlie Justice and Co. turned the trick, 14-7.

This game, like the majority of contests between the two schools, should be an exciting one. The Vols rate the edge in lieu of their 4-1 record as opposed to a 4-2 mark for the Tar Heels. But anything can happen when these two state universities clash, and tomorrow should be no exception.

Vols Are One Of Few Remaining Single Wing Powers

The Vols will furnish a special treat for avid football followers who remember the days of the "good ole single wing." The formation has become almost extinct now, and Tennessee is one of the few remaining single wing powers since the inception of the intricate T formation and its numerous diversities.

Actually, by comparison, the single wing is a simple formation and, in our opinion, much easier to watch. It's simplicity, however, is misleading. When used by an accomplished team, it can be a devastating conglomeration of complex patterns capable of tricking even the best defenses.

Tennessee is just such a team. Jim Tatum has stated that his main problem tomorrow will be to stop Tennesee's offense. The single wing is a power formation and the Vols use it effectively to grind out yardage.

It also offers opportunity to execute the versatile option play with adept precision. In this manner, the tailback or halfbacks can run or pass without any appreciable loss of efficiency. Tennessee has used the option quite consistently this season, and the fans in Kenan Stadium will probably see some very tricky football tomorrow.

Teams Should Be Strong Physically

In all probability the two clubs will be at almost top physical strength for the two o'clock kickoff. Carolina will be hurting at center, but otherwise should be in good shape. Number one and two centers, Ron Koes and Jim Davis might miss the Homecoming game because of physical incapacities. Aside from this position, the Tar Heels should be all right.

Tennessee is reportedly missing only the services of veteran tailback, All Carter. Carter, however, is not the number one signal-caller. That post belongs to Bobby Gordon, who many see as a real All-American candidate.

Gordon is the top ball carrier for the Vols with a total of 249 yards in five games. This is a good example of the difference between the two formations. Seldom, if ever, is a quarterback the team's leading ground gainer. Gordon has also completed 12 of 22 passes for 169 yards and leads the team in kickoff and punt returns as well as punting average and scoring.

Wide Distribution In Tar Heel Statistics

Just for the record, Tennessee's first five games have gone like this: Auburn (0-7), Mississippi State (14-9), Chattanooga (28-13), Alabama (14-0) and Maryland (16-0).

Tennessee Coach Bowden Wyatt describes his club's victory over Maryland last weekend as "the team's best offensive and defensive showing of the season." Pat Preston, assistant coach here, said recently that the Vols had improved with every game.

Statistically speaking, the top passer for the Tar Heels is sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings. He's only thrown the ball 19 times, but has completed nine for 160 yards. Buddy Payne is the top receiver with 8 catches for 120 yards.

Carolina has three men tied for top scoring honors. Payne, Dave Reed and Jim Schuler have each scored 12 points. Don Coker is the leading kicker with a 39.9 average and Daley Goff still leads in individual rushing with 166 yards. Emil DeCantis is close behind with 150 yards.

National Champs On TV; 8 Games Here

A few quick sports shots.

Two of Carolina's 1957 football players are planning to study medicine upon graduation. One is end and Co-captain, Buddy Payne and the other is junior end, Takey Crist.

Cage star Tommy Kearns, practically everybody's All-American, is planning on going to law school. Tommy is a senior majoring in history.

Harvey Salz, a sensation as a freshman in '55 who was out of school last year, was talking about the Tar Heel cagers the other day. "I think we're all in good shape," Harvey said, "now if we can just get that ball to start dropping through the loop."

The pre-season varsity roster lists 15 men, six of whom were members of last year's freshman team. The list includes five seniors two juniors, and two sophomores who were out last year.

The Tar Heel cagers are slated to appear on television at least once this season. Their Jan. 18 encounter at Clemson is an afternoon affair and will be televised.

The national champs will play eight games in Woollen Gym and only one will be against a non-conference foe—that's William and Mary here, Jan. 7.

Final Freshman Cage Cuts Will Come Today

The final cuts for positions on the freshman basketball team will be made after practice today.

Coach Buck Freeman disclosed yesterday that four players will have to be cut since only twelve players are carried on the team. Freeman had hoped to see several members of the freshman football squad come out for the practice sessions, but their duties on the gridiron have kept them off the basketball court.

Jim Donohue has returned to the squad after having been sidelined with a sprained ankle. Donohue, the tallest member of the squad at 6-8, is being counted on heavily to furnish some scoring punch for the Tar Babies.

At the moment the first team is composed of three scholarship players, Doug Moe, Lou Brown and Jim Donohue plus Tam Shuford and Roland Longenecker.

The freshman schedule presently lists nineteen games.

Vols Invade Chapel Hill Tomorrow

KNOXVILLE, Tenn.—Unpredictable Tennessee, which dropped its season opener to Auburn and since has won four consecutive games, will journey across the Smoky Mountains to do battle with the Tar Heels of North Carolina this Saturday.

The powerful and aggressive warriors of Jim Tatum hold victories over Clemson, Navy, Miami and Wake Forest. Judging from the Tar Heels' past performances and the scouting report of Vol assistant coach Ralph Chancey, the Volunteers will have their work cut out for them this Saturday in dueling with the mammoth Carolina team. The Tar Heel forward wall will outweigh the Vols 24 pounds per man from end to end. Carolina's line averages 215 pounds, the backfield 187.

Tatum took disciplinary action last week against three of his players, including starting quarterback Dave Reed. Instead of wrecking the Carolina offense, as might be expected, the sudden change in quarterbacking gave the Tar Heels a lift, Chancey reported.

Cummings was Fine

"I thought Jack Cummings, the sophomore who took Reed's place, did a great job of directing the team. He has the poise, confidence, the know-how and finesse of a seasoned performer," Chancey declared. The 188-pound youngster from Lower Merion, Pa., will engineer the Carolina offense again Saturday at Chapel Hill.

Bad news for Vol tacklers is the information that Jim Schuler, fleet halfback from High Point, N. C., will probably be back in the Tar Heel starting lineup after missing last Saturday's Wake Forest game because of a minor leg injury. Tatum said that Schuler has the potential to be the greatest running back he ever coached.

Best Game Yet

Coach Bowden Wyatt termed last week's game with Maryland the best offensive and defensive showing the Vols have made this year. Wyatt declined to single out any individuals and called the victory over the Terrapins the result of "a terrific effort by the entire squad."

A great factor in the success of the Vols in compiling a 4-1 record midway through the season has been their tremendous kicking game plus their ability to apply pressure and block opponents' punts. Bobby Gordon, one of the nation's top punters with a 44.2 yard average, has been the team's most effective kicker. His quick-kicking has kept Tennessee's opponents deep in their own territory. The small, but cat-like Tennessee linemen have applied pressure to enemy punters and in addition to blocking four kicks their quickness and alertness has hurried the opponent in getting away its boots.

Wray Carlton Is Nation's Third Scorer

NEW YORK, Oct. 31 (AP) — Jimmy Taylor of Louisiana State has forged further ahead of Colorado's Bob Stansky in the major college football scoring parade.

N-C-A-A- Service Bureau statistics released today showed that Taylor has compiled 62 points as compared to 57 by Stransky. Taylor scored eight of his team's 14 points against Florida Saturday. Stransky registered six of Colorado's 13 against Oklahoma.

Duke's Wray Carlton ranks third with 51 points, followed by Overton Curtis of Uath State with 49. Four players are tied for fifth with 48 ponits each.

Bob Mulgado of Arizona State has the most points-after-touchdown, 17 of 24 attempts. Charles Rash of Missouri has converted the most extra points without a miss, 13. Jack Norris of Oregon leads in field goals with three.

Against Deacons

Gaca Refused To Quit; Results: Fine Game

By WAYNE THOMPSON

Giles Gaca was just waiting his turn. When it came, he responded with the biggest offensive splash of any Carolina back this season as the Tar Heels nipped Wake Forest, 14-7.

Gaca, a 205-pound senior fullback, came off the bench last Saturday in a starting role to churn out 90 yards in 16 carries for a 5.6 average. He scored the winning touchdown on a plunge from the two and reached his peak for the first time since his brilliant spring showing after his sophomore year.

He's hoping he will be tapped again for top service against highly favored Tennessee here Saturday.

TRICK KNEE

Gaca won his letter but was used only sparingly in 1955 as a sophomore. He carried the ball only seven times for 13 yards.

He blossomed out big in the 1956 spring game and was considered a sure bet for the ACC All-Star check list that season. That's when he ran afoul a trick knee and was in and out of commission during the season, alternating with Wally Vale.

This past spring he was still plagued with the knee, an injury he aggravated in a softball game. Meanwhile other promising fullbacks came along. Yet he was rated number one fullback when the fall campaign opened.

All fall he has worked hard, often pausing in practice to slip his knee back in place. Sounder operatives moved out front and he has been idle on Saturdays until last week. That's when starting fullback Ed Lipski was himself sidelined with an injury and Giles was called upon from the beginning.

BIG WEEK

Gaca, who likes to play football, was tickled pink. He ran hard. In fact, so hard that his jersey was continually being ripped from his back. When told after the game that he was the contest's leading rusher, he just shrugged and said, "I got most of the yards on the fumble play."

The resplendent miscue which Giles recalled had indeed given him a 28-yard gain when a mate recovered the ball he had dropped. But he also had mustered 62 others to run up the 90-total.

"It was my week for 90's, I guess," Gaca mused. "I got a 96 on a test in one of my classes before we went to Wake Forest."

Gaca doesn't talk much. He's not over impressed by his showing last week. He just hopes it's enough to insure a starting role against Tennessee.

Baseball Meeting Today Will Feature Movies

Coach Walt Rabb has announced that a meeting of all varsity and freshman baseball candidates will be held in Woollen 302 today at three p.m. The purpose is a film session in which pictures of the fall practice will be shown.

Pfeiffer Cancelled

Flu Bug Drops Booters For 4th Straight Time

By JIM PORKS

Again? Oh yes, once again!

That was the story yesterday as another varsity soccer game was called off—the fourth straight game to be called off.

Carolina was scheduled to play Pfeiffer Junior College here today at 3 p. m., but a phone call to Coach Marvin Allen from Pfeiffer finished that.

As for the reason of the cancellations, Allen said it was the same old reason, flu. He said flu had just hit the Pfeiffer campus and that all athletic activities there had been called off.

LONG LAYOFF

The Carolina varsity squad has not played a game since October 8, when it lost to Lynchburg College, 4-3. In its only other game, the team won over Roanoke College, 3-0.

Since then, games with Washington & Lee, Virgiona, Davidson and Pfeiffer have been called off. The games with Davidson and Virginia have been re-scheduled.

Coach Allen said that the Pfeiffer game will not be re-scheduled as the Tar Heels will have to play two games per week beginning next week.

Allen, who has coached soccer at Carolina almost continuously since it was started as a varsity sport, said that this year marks the first time any scheduled game has been cancelled or postponed.

FLU BUGGED

All four games were called off because of the flu bug; however, only once has Coach Allen asked that a game be cancelled or postponed. Allen had to call off the Virginia game because at one time he hardly had enough players to make up a team. The other three games have been called off by the rival coaches.

Carolina's next game is scheduled for Tuesday, when they meet the Davidson Wildcats at Davidson.

The freshman team, apparently, will play this week. Coach Chuck Hartman's squad will face the Duke freshman team today at 3 p. m. in Durham. The Blue Imps beat the Carolina freshman squad last week, 2-1 in an overtime game.

Is Notre Dame Making Great Comeback?

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Oct. 30 (AP)—How far have Notre Dame's Fighting Irish come back? The month of November will tell.

Coach Terry Brennan's revitalized footballers have improved 100 per cent recordwise over last year with four consecutive victories. The Irish rank No. 5 in the national AP poll and Notre Dame's large grid faithful is gay again after gloomily suffering through the school's worst season in history, 2-9, last year.

Does this mark a phenomenal rebound, or the normal improvement of a sophomore team turned junior, plus a favoring early season schedule and a coaching staff stiffened with added experience?

Close observers won't believe any football miracle has happened under the golden dome until Notre Dame plays its next four games-against Navy this Saturday, Michigan State, Oklahoma and Iowa, in that order.

Plans Near Complete For Elgart

Plans are well underway for the approaching Germans weekend. Mark Cherry, Germans Club President, has announced that the featured attraction for the Germans dance will be Les Elgart and his band.

Elgart will appears in concert on the afternoon of November 8, at 3:30, and will play for the dance that night from 9-12 p. m.

He will bring 16 orchestral pieces and his vocalist for the concert and dance. Leo do Lyon, humorist, also had been tentatively promised for this date, but he will be unable to return from his European tour until the 16th of this month.

The decorations for the dance, which is held in Woollen Gym, will be more extensive and elaborate this year than in former years. This will be part of a new emphasis on the atmosphere of the dance itself.

The Germans Club also announced the election of John McKee, Zeta Psi, as vice-president replacing Dave Moge, Sigma Nu.

TO APPEAR FOR GERMANS—Internationally-known Les Elgart and his No. 1 dance band in the United States will appear here next Friday for 1957 Winter Germans. Elgart, above, directs his 16-piece band which also includes a vocalist. The concert is at 3:30 p.m. and the dance will be held from 9 to 12 p.m.

Foreign Tour To Be Talked

For those who have a yearning to travel, plus a desire for further education, the NSA has a program which combines both interests.

Miss Carrie Smeltzer, assistant director of Educational Travel Inc., a subsidiary of the U. S. National Student Assn., will be on campus Dec. 3 to meet with those interested in foreign travel programs.

For ten years, Educatonal Travel, Inc. has been providing a low-cost foreign travel program and maintaining a travel information and advisory service for American students.

Since 1948, 4,000 students have participated in ETI tour programs.

ETI tour prices range from $785, for 54 days, to $1,045, for 81 days.

ETI is able to offer inexpensive foreign tours because of its close cooperation with similar European Student Union programs, and because it is a nonprofit organization.

The European Student Unions make many of the travel arrangements for ETI and provide travel guides.

Each guide is a student representative of his country, familiar with the history, customs and cultural heritages of his native land. In each country a different student guide accompanies ETI tours.

Tour programs include visits to Holland, England, Scotland, France, Germany and Italy, among others.

Those students interested in attending the Dec. 3 meeting should contact Whit Whitfield, NSA Coordinator, as soon as possible. Whitfield has announced that unles there is sufficient response the meeting will be cancelled.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included: Misses Ann Riggins, Nancey Greene, Emory Burkhart, Mary Alys Voorhees, Katheryn Walsh, Wadie Mikhail; Faye Dark, Sara Jane Nicholson, and Sue Gilliam.

And Messrs William Branch, Frank Montgomery, Richard Lee, John Clare, Michael Deutsch, James Tyndall, Robert Barnwell, Edward Faulkner, Luke Forrest, Robert Station, Kenneth Brimmer, Frank Netherland, Ronald Koes, John Lyon, Roger Goodson, Paul Marshburn, Guy Dority, Metro Fedorchuk, Sidney Seymour, James Summey and Thomas Soboski and Jim Owens.

World In Brief

Taylor Withdraws

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—(AP)—Gen. Maxwell D. Taylor, Army chief of staff, today withdrew by request as principal speaker at an Alabama Veterans Day observance in Birmingham.

Taylor announced his action by releasing an exchange of telegrams with Raymond Weeks, director of the Birmingham committee, which had invited the chief of staff to speak there Nov. 11.

In his message, Weeks said that his committee was "greatly embarrassed" but had reached the regretful decision to "release you from your obligation" to speak in Birmingham.

Since the time of the invitation, Weeks said, there had been "unfortunate procedures" which have "stirred up emotions and prejudices not only n the South but all over the country."

Weeks did not say directly what these "unfortunate procedures" were, but presumably the reference was to dispatch of federal troops to enforce federal court orders for integration of Central High School in Little Rock, Ark.

Nixon-Knowland

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—(AP)—Sen. Knowland (R-Calif) will step out of the way of Vice President Nixon in the 1960 Republican presidential primaries outside of California, it was reported authoritatively today.

That does not necessarily mean Knowland won't try for the presidential nomination. Presidential primaries do not determine the choice of the national convention, although they can influence that choice. Friends say Knowland hasn't made up his mind about trying for the big prize.

Ike's Speeches

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—(AP)—President Eisenhower today chose Nov. 13 and Oklahoma City as the time and place for the first of a series of confidence - boosting speeches to the people.

The speech, beginning at 10:30 p.m. EST that Wednesday night and running for half an hour, is to be on "science and security."

The central nature of the whole series was laid down by Eisenhower in a New York speech Oct. 22. He took note than of public concern over America's scientific position, national defense, economic strength and foreign policy.

Navy Airplane Is On Display

In conjunction with a Navy Recruiting and Officer Procurement team to be here Nov. 4-5 "Miss Cougar," a transonic navy jet fighter, will be displayed in the Morehead Parking Lot.

The airplane was shown yesterday starting at 1 p. m. and will be on the campus until 5 p. m. Nov.7 The engine of this turbojet can be viewed through a portion cut away from the tail assembly.

The engine, which is just like its operational counterpart, can be operated at slow speeds so that all of the inner-component parts may be observed under actual operating conditions. The Navy Recuiting and Officer Procurement team coming from Raleigh will be located in the YMCA Building from 8 a. m. to 4 p. m. on Monday and Tuesday.

The team will consist of representatives of the various Navy Officer Programs including Aviation Officer candidate, officer candidate school, Wave and nurse programs for college seniors.

A representative from the Naval Air Station, Norfolk, Va., will present information concerning the Naval Aviation Cadet program for the two year college man.

A ramp built around the aircraft will enable students to get a close view of the machinery. Navy personnel will be on hand to explain the intricacies of the aircraft and to answer question regarding the Navy $90,000 pilot training program.

This aircraft is designed exclusively for carrier operation and is presently being flown at the "Annapolis of the Air" at Pensacola, Fla.

Kuralt Fails To Name Candidate

By ANN FRYE

Wally Kuralt, spearheading a recall election for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, said Friday some 800 persons have signed petitions calling for the vote.

Officials said Thursday that 1,050 names—or one-seventh of the student body—are needed before Student Body President Sonny Evans can order the recall.

At the same time Kuralt said "three or four" persons are being considered as candidates in event the election is affected. He would not elaborate on the statement.

Kuralt initiated the recall Thursday with distribution of 25 petitions across the campus. He charged that current Editor Neil Bass is "incompetent."

Kuralt said the petition did not stem from recent editorial policies of Bass, but from "general incompetence of Bass in managing the paper and staffs."

As to possible candidates in a recall election, Kuralt said that three or four persons are trying to decide on one of themselves to run so as not to split the vote. Kuralt would not comment further on possible candidates.

He said, "I have nothing to do with the candidates. That's out of my line. All I'm doing is to conduct the recall."

As to the petitions now circulating, Kuralt said that the signing of those petitions is moving along as well as he had hoped.

Funeral Plans For Dr. Leary

Funeral services for Dr. Deborah Cushing Leary of the UNC School of Medicine, who died in New Jersey Tuesday, will be conducted Friday at 3:30 p. m. in Boston, Mass.

Her husband, Dr. Welt of the UNC medical faculty, survives, along with her mother, Dr. Ogla Leary of Boston.

In asking that no flowers be sent, in accordance with the wishes expressed by the family, it was suggested that gifts in lieu of flowers be sent to the Deborah Leary Foundation, the UNC School of Medicine, Chapel Hill, for projects Dr. Leary was pursuing in the Department of Obstetrics and Gynecology.

SEEKS FIFTH WIN—Tar Heel mentor Jim Tatum, above, will be seeking the fifth win of the current season when his unpredictable Tar Heels meet the Tennessee Volunteers in a 2 p.m. game today. The Vols are a slight favorite over the Carolina eleven.

Tennessee Is Favored In Colorful Rivalry; Heels Seek Fifth Win

By BILL KING

It's Homecoming Weekend at Carolina and the highlights of the festivities gets underway this afternoon at two o'clock in Kenan Stadium when the Carolina Tar Heels clash head on with the Tennessee Volunteers.

It's the renewal of an old and colorful rivalry between two state universities whose football history occupies a niche in the archives of great American football annals.

The Vols come into the contest sporting a 4-1 record and holding a slight edge among the oddmakers to blemish Coach Jim Tatum's 4-2 mark with the Tar Heels of 1957. But this is a familiar role to the surprising Tar Heels. There times they have been labeled underdog this season, and three times they have retaliated with impressive victories over supposedly powerful teams, namely, Clemson, Navy and Miami.

The Tar Heels would like nothing better than to send the old grads away boasting of "our Carolina team, "but to accomplish this feat they'll have to reckon with one of the country's most unique single wing assemblages.

DEFENSIVE BATTLE?

Indeed, the single wing formation is the life blood of this vaunted Tennessee attack and the Vols have the horses to shoulder the burden. But the Tar Heels are not without a counter attack as Tatum has an ample supply of hard-running backs and capable passers to match offenses with the rugged Tennessee contingents.

Thus, this could turn into a brilliant defensive struggle with the bouquets going to the team which is most able to make the proverbial cheer of "hold that line" a reality.

Weather could play an important part in this fiasco. Should the elements cause the ball to be unpassable, both teams could open up a strong ground attack. Weather permitting, however, there should be a lot of passes thrown today.

If such is the case, Tatum will probably send his number one chunker Jack Cummings to the firing line. The sophomore signal-caller took over for Dave Reed last week at Wake Forest and handled the team like a veteran, completing nine passes, one for a touchdown.

GORDON LEADS VOLS

The Vol's attack will be centered around tailback Bobby Gordon. Gordon leads the team in practically every department and has completed over 50 percents of his passes this season. Gordon is the acknowledged master of the devastating "option play" and it's a sure bet the Vols will use this frequently.

With the cool and collected Cummings throwing, it's unlikely the Tar Heels will call upon the run-pass play as much as in the past, but this is a dangerous weapon in case Smiling Jack isn't up to par. Actually, this is a form of the option play, and consequently, could lead to some razzle dazzle football.

Both clubs are possessors of a formidable ground game also. The Tar Heels have boys like halfbacks Daley Goff, Don Coker, Emil DeCantis, Jim Schuler and Ron Marquette around to move the pigskin.

Miss Gail Willingham Is Homecoming Queen

Miss Willingham and her court of 9 other coeds will reign over homecoming activities here today. The queen was chosen by popular vote.

Her court was selected Friday afternoon from 21 candidates. The judges were Mrs. Bill Aycock, Sam Magill, Dr. Virgil Mann, and Bob Cox.

Last night's dance was the first in a series of events scheduled throughout the wekend to honor alumni of the university and visitors from Tennessee.

Other activities today will include, besides the UNC-Volunteer football game at 2 p.m., a reception at Graham Memorial following the game and the showing and judging of Homecoming displays.

Benny Thomas, president of GMAB, which sponsored the dance, said, "To my knowledge this is the first time a Homecoming dance has been given for the specific purpose of selecting the Homecoming Queen. Up until this year she has been announced and crowned on the football field.

"For a function like this, with the exception of Germans, the crowd tonight is terrific. I am well-pleased with the turnout and with the participaion and cooperation of the various fraternities and sororities."

Music Lovers Plan Banquet

The Carolina chapter of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia music fraternity will hold a Founder's Day banquet tonight at Harvey's Cafeteria in Durham.

The guest speaker will be Prof. Allan H. Bone of the Music Department at Duke University.

The fraternity was founded 59 years ago at New England Music Conservatory. Membership is open to all persons interested in music.

Also, Ronald Hamilton, recording secretary; Bill Kellam, treasurer; and Wally Kuralt, pledgemaster.

Ways To Avoid Violence Aired

Ways and means of avoiding violence and promoting good sportsmanship in connection with the UNC-Duke game were discussed in a Thursday night meeting of leaders from both schools.

Student Body President Sonny Evans said yesterday that the co-captains of both teams and the student body presidents planned send letters to students, alumni and friends in the coming weeks.

The letters will urge cooperation between the two groups in avoiding violence in connection with the game. "We will stress player participation, not fan participation," Evans said.

The joint meetings between UNC and Duke leaders have been held yearly since 1945. In that year an outbreak of violence took place on the Duke campus.

Men's Honor Council Chairman George Ragsdale said in connection with the conference: "If the attitude of those people present truly reflects the attitude of the student bodies of Duke, and UNC, I feel that any action will be confined to the football field."

Immunity Is Good 1 Year

The 350 students who got flu vaccine shot at Gerrard Hall on Friday can expect protection from the virus for 9 months to one year according to Dr. Robert B. Lindsay of the UNC Infirmary. The shots require 10 days to become effective, he said.

Although the current epidemic is temporarily declining there is no assurance that it will not break out anew. Flu runs in waves and another outbreak is a distinct possibility.

The flu-type is still unknown, but tests are being conducted to determine its identity. Former patients of the Infirmary who suffered from respiratory ailments, have been asked to report there to give blood sample. The samples are being analyzey to determine the nature of the outbreak.

Reactions to the vaccine are uncommon, and when they do occur, are mild. They usually take the form of sligth headaches or fever. The vaccine, however, should not be taken by persons who have allergies to eggs or who are suffering from respiratory ailments.

The shots were available to the student body, free of charge, on Thursday and Friday. Shots were given between the hours of 11 a. m. and 1 p .m. on those days.

LEGISLATIVE ROUNDUP

Closer Cooperation At Athletic Events Urged

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Dick Sessoms (UP) introduced a bill Thursday night "encouraging closer cooperation among colleges of the Atlantic Coast Conference in regard to visiting student seating arrangements at all athletic contests."

Kannaiah Konuri, a native of India who has been studying tobacco production, processing and warehousing in the United States, spoke to the Student Legislature about India's present problems.

Contrary to yesterday's report Ed Levy (UP) said that the Tarnation was not receiving funds from the Student Legislature at the time it went out of business.

The "whereas" clauses of the seating arrangement bill charged ACC schools "have been increasingly guilty of assigning poor seats to visiting student bodies at athletic events;

"There is an increasing lack of consideration of visiting students at several institutions . . . and visiting students are obligated to pay regular prices just as the general public."

The first article of the bill asked the legislature to "encourage the athletic directors of the ACC" schools "to cooperate in obtaining more desirable seating arrangements for visiting students."

Article two ordered that copies of the bill be sent to the athletic directors accompanied by a letter of encouragement in this project from the UNC Student Body President.

The bill has been sent to the ways and means Committee.

Konuri is traveling as a private citizen; he arrived in the United States in August. The Monday before he spoke to the legislature he appeared before the Reidsville Rotary Club.

Wednesday night he spoke to the Woman's College Student Legislature.

In India, he is licensed to practice law before the supreme court and is President of Nandikonda Project Committee, which is similar to the United States Tennessee Valley Authority.

In his talk he stressed the value of friendship between the citizens of the two democracies, India and the United States. He said the Indians had developed a constitution based on the American Constitution.

He pointed out that India's per capita income was low and that the standard of living was very low, and, therefore, India was susceptible to Communism.

The Speaker said that India was working on five-year plans, but that in a democracy the rights of the citizens had to be respected and so the work was not going as fast as it would under a dictatorship.

He told the legislators that about a 100 years ago Americans had sent missionaries to India. He now asked United States citizens to take a private interest in investing in India's economy.

SP representatives absent were Erwin Fuller, Richard Eisenburg, Jim Johnson and Pat Hamer.

HALF PRICE

President of the Student Body Sonny Evans has announced that date tickets for the South Carolina-UNC game November 9, will be placed on sale at half price.

REPUBLICAN CLUB

The Young Republican Club met last night. After a business meeting, a social was held.

The club has elected the following officers for 1957-58: president, Jim Steele; vice-president, Dave Suckow; recording secretary, Alvira Williams; corresponding secretary, Sally English; treasurer, Emily Stafford; editor of club newspaper, F. V. Dunnorum; committee chairmen: membership, Rick Wolfer, Jr.; publicity, Dave Suckow; program and speakers, Keith Snyder; social, John Moller.

Open Letter To Students On The Recall Issue . .

AN OPEN LETTER TO THE STUDENT BODY FROM THE EDITOR:

The issue of a recall election far transcends any matter of personalities.

Regardless of disagreement with editorial stands or presentation of editorial views, any editor of any newspaper should inalienably have the right of free expression. Without freedom of expression, the editorship of this paper would degenerate and become a verbal point from which non-controversial issues would be cast, from which congenial platitudes would exude with which only professional disagreers could disagree.

Petitioner Wally Kuralt and his supporters must realize that, although they have a perfect right to disagree vehemently with any policies or administration of this paper, institution of a recall election—were such action to be successful—would so severely limit freedom of expression that ensuing editors would be afraid to breathe, without restraint, on the necks of the student body.

There has arisen, periodically, on this campus a movement for editorial recall. The majority of such movements have been by a minority of men who have sought to gain control of this paper, sometimes for personal aggrandizement, through capitalization upon opposition aroused by editorial stands on professional athletics and other unpopular issues.

The assertion of incompetency is, I feel, an obvious cover-up for a manipulated and contrived plot. During the spring campaign, I pledged the student body the best student newspaper possible through application of all my God-given abilities. If I had not sincerely felt then, or if I did not feel now, that I was qualified to produce—through the efforts of an excellent staff—a newspaper of which the student body could be proud, I would never have run, nor would I continue to serve now.

With heart-felt sincerity, and without further planned editorial statement, I let the recall issue rest squarely in the capable hands of the student body, confident that students will see through the contrived plot and support—regardless of opposition to specific issues—the right of editorial freedom of expression.

Students, I feel, do not want an editor who may be intimidated, to speak only on popular issues. And I shall not be intimidated, whether this trait be popular or unpopular.

I entrust the desirability of free editorial expression and my editorship to the just hands of the student body.

Student Legislature Demonstrates Wisdom

The Student Legislature acted wisely Thursday night in passage of a bill to eradicate debts incurred by the now defunct campus humor magazine, Tarnation.

Rep. Tom Long of the Student Party perhaps evoked good logic in his assertion that payment of Tarnation's debt was establishing a bad precedent. But we feel inclined to agree with Introducer Edwin Levy that payment of the debt was a vindication of University student government—a moral issue.

Regardless of just who was responsible for incurring and failing to pay the debts of Tarnation Magazine, a student goverment agency was ultimately responsible for said debts. And the responsibility of student government is to cover for the debts.

A great deal of confidence, we definitely feel, has been restored in student government through payment of the debt. And the Student Legislature has proved that students and student self-government are responsible and dependable.

Student lawmakers also acted wisely in defeating the bill calling for establishment of a committee to investigate Lenoir Hall. Many students will disagree with the palatability of some of Lenior Hall's food. But few will say—with justification—that the management of the student dining hall has been negligent.

Director George W. Prillaman of Lenoir Hall has done a good job, despite a bit of arbitrary action on the part of personnel handling last year.

Immediately after Prillaman assumed his duties, he instigated a study group, gave free meals to students in exchange for criticisms as to how he could better the facilities and management of the dining hall.

Last year, Director Prillaman realligned, it was reported, his personnel policies in line with suggestions recommended by the Student Legislature and interested students. This demonstrates a willingness to negotiate with the student element.

And, with few exceptions, the sanitation grading of Lenoir Hall has resulted in allocation of high sanitation rating.

Thus again, student lawmakers acted wisely in killing the investigation measure directed at the management. The establishment of a study group, which would make constructive criticisms, would, we feel sure, be greatly appreciated by Director Prillaman; but caustic criticism directed at the management would neither be constructive nor wise.

Lawmakers acted responsibly in both these measures.

Vaccine And Response . .

Fewer students than was anticipated have taken advantage of the University Infirmary's provision of Asian flu vaccine.

Dr. Hedgpeth and the University Infirmary worked extraordinarily conscientiously during the epidemic, as we commented. But as we contended, and as we shall continue to contend, the University Infirmary was wholly inadequate to give flu victims proper medical care. Thus it was our thought that school should have been suspended to enable students to go home where they could have been under the supervision of family physicians.

The danger of Asian flu rests in the threat of secondary infections such as pneumonia, which a number of students have contracted.

Stanford University got a wholesale supply of Asian Flu vaccine through the efforts of a university physician who said he harassed pharaceutical firms to th point of absurdity. This type of persistnecy might have resulted in a more abundant supply for the University here.

Nevertheless, the vaccine has been procured, rather late, and students, should comprehensively take advantage of its availability.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Civil Rights Civility And Censorship . . .

Curtis Gans

The central problem facing any democracy, and American democracy is no exception, is the conflict between the will of the majority and the rights of the individual.

It is one of the basic issues that overt southern segretgation problem and covert northern segregation dilemma revolves around. It is the central principle operative in the great debate currently over the American loyalty security boards. It is, in short, at the heart of the civil rights issue.

It is apparent that the will of the majority is the basis of the American government. It is the reason that President Eisenhower is in office instead of Adlai Stevenson, and that the Congress of the United States is Democratic and not Republican.

However, despite the seeming predominance of the will of the majority, not all American are forced to be Protestants. American people do not have to be either Republican or Democratic, or hopefully of any political belief, and are free to criticize their government as members of the minority, and in some rare cases as individuals. The American has the means to express his opinion against every law under the Constitution and may push for any law's repeal.

It seems then that the crucial issue that differentiates democracy from mobocracy and rule of the majority is the principle of the freedom of the individual, so jealously guarded by the Bill of Rights and so zealously being destroyed by recent legislation and trends toward conformity. It is the keynote of democracy and the most important single democratic edifice.

If the freedom of the individual is to be protected and guarded as it maintained here, then some confusing problems arise. In the segregation crisis these problems are thrust into bold relief.

It must be maintained that the right of the individual to be biased and prejudiced must be protected. However, it is also true that the rights of these who are being prejudiced against must be defended. Moreover, it is the right of those who are forced into inferior educational set-ups to take part in better educational opportunities.

But this cannot mean that those having the superior educational opportunities must sacrifice their advantage in order that everyone can have a "happy medium," which always in the past has turned out to be fairly unhappy. This is perhaps only part of the segregation problem but it shows that to defend the rights of the individual one has to encompass all individuals, and this is sometimes difficult.

One rule of thumb is perhaps apparent. If the prejudices and biases are in such predominance that they cut off the rights of the minority, then they are in violation of the primary principle of democracy- the rights of the individual.

"Now, Panel, What's My Line?"

Hence it is affirmed here that no man or group has the right to deprive any individual of his rights which were guaranteed to him in the Bill of Rights, and at any point where the will of one individual or group transgresses the rights of another individual or group, the transgressor must be halted. This is perhaps fundamental in democratic law.

When William McGovern, former assistant to the Attorney General, was on the UNC campus, he stressed the idea formulated by Justice Holmes concerning the ideal form of democracy. He said that the form of democracy is to think of the mass of people as a marketplace in which the cash value or truth of ideas are tested. He added that this was perhaps the best way of protecting the individual's right to speak and the right of the majority to select.

This is a good form of democracy, but as Mr. McGovern agreed if an idea restrictive to the rights of the individual took hold in the marketplace (i. e. an idea like Communism or Fascism), the rights of the individual become subject to the will of the majority. It is then that the marketplace becomes a mob, and the democracy becomes a mobocracy. It is against this that the energies, so lately being employed to negate rights of citizens and to defame citizens, should be employed.

Hence, it is necessary to incorporate into the marketplace a protective wall around each individual, so that he may not lose his rights.

Thomas Jefferson said once. "'I have sworn on the altar of God eternal vigilance over all forms of tyranny over the mind of man." It is this viewpoint that shall be followed in any consideration of civil rights in this column.

Of Sober Solitude And Of Loneliness .

Gail Godwin

Last night about nine o'clock, I walked from the Library over to the Y. I took the easiest course, namely straight through the center of the grass. The air was the kind that wakes up a drowsy mind. The sky was clear and there were a few stars.

I thought of this same spot in the daytime. The big square surrounded by Carroll and Manning and South and the Library. In the light hours, between classes, Carolina's thousands of students travel these walks from class to class, from Y-court to class, from dorm to class. In the bustle of the masses, there is not much thought of the lonely ones. The ones who travel the walks from Hanes to Bingham to Gardner in solitude. They are alone as I was alone as I crossed the campus at nine o'clock.

How horrible to be alone in the midst of crowds, to know the solitude of night when it is daylight.

How many of them are there hunched over a book in the dorm into the early hours of the morning, going unnoticed to lunch, sitting quietly in the corner of a classroom, lost in a glass of beer and a hi-fi melody in the Tempo room? How many are there that we will never meet, never speak to, never sit down and talk to?

And yet without them, this would not be a university. All universities have lonely people. People who plod day after day along their straight and narrow course. People who do not deviate from that course.

How unfortunate they are, we say, to be alone like that. How unfortunate to never sing around the piano, or scream at a pep rally, or put off studying the night before a quiz because something better than studying came up. How unfortunate.

Someday we will inevitably read about some of them. And under their name it will say, ". . . attended the University of North Carolina 1957 . . . Why, I was there in '57, we say, but I never knew this person. He must not have been in very many activities. But wouldn't it have been nice if I could have known him. Just think. I was on the very same campus with him and didn't ever run into him.

How unfortunate.

Rameses X XI

There have been numerous rumors concerning Coach Tatum's being out to get the old editor. There were some who said he threatened a libel suit. Now, the ol' Ram thinks such ridiculous and unfounded action as a libel suit would result in some pretty red faces if the coach suing his own University's newspaper could prove nothing, as he obviously can't.

And the Ol' Ram credits Coach Jim with more intelligence than to evoke more antipathy than he has already evoked. In talking with the old ed, the Ram finds that he's not out to get Tatum, but that he dislikes exceedingly the professional attitude which most coaches smack with—and that such coaches are merely victims of an overall demand — from alumni and the public—for a winning team.

But this doesn't make it right, the editor says. And we think he's right.

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Assertion For UNC Cardboard

EDITOR:

Not knowing exactly where and to whom this letter should be sent, I have chosen The Daily Tar Heel. Rumor has it that the card section of that University for which we don't give a d . . . . is superior to that here at Carolina. This, I find hard to believe. In fact, I find it difficult to believe that anything symbolized by the Blue Devil could possibly be superior to its counterpart which falls under the reign of Ramses IV. However, the card section is my main concern at the moment.

Now, the folks down at the cardboard office have been working extremely hard all year, and have come up with some very good stunts. That's all they can do. What the public sees is what the students do at the games. It seems to me that we need to really get on our toes, and uphold the title of "Best Cardboard in the East" for Carolina.

If we do a good job at the coming home games, it seems that we can face "them" in their own stadium on the 23rd. The last time we did this, it proved quite successful for us, so let's do a good job at the Tennesse and South Carolina games, then travel down the road and show that we are still best.

On Edit Notes

EDITOR

I quote you, "As for not printing letters—even occasionally in poor taste—the printing of Kuralt's bitter and trite personal attack disproves this accusation.' You mention "trite personal attack." I have yet to see a trite personal attack if your little statement at the bottom of Mr. Kuralt's letter is not one.

If there ever was poor taste, it is those little statements which you are in the habit of making and which you apparently think is some sort of clever means of attacking people and which in my opinion is a most ill-mannered act.

You attain no victory over your "little opponents" by adding statements such as you do but you ring out a much greater defeat for yourself than you would otherwise receive.

It is grossly unfair and in bad taste to kick a person when a man is tied and that must be your policy. The writer is tied after he has sent the letter through the mail.

I think this letter is not in bad taste and I want no trite personal remarks nor a headline if this letter is printed. I am not a writer for your paper thus this is merely a letter to the editor which deserves no headline or comment from your "bad taste."

NICHOLS FOR YOUR THOUGHTS:

Politicians And Sleeping Dogs . .

Gary Nichols

I met a freshman who was asking someone the difference between the two student political parties on campus. I thought it was pretty funny since he was already running for an office through nomination from one of the parties.

There's nothing like an informed "politician."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

I've been reading all the blasts everybodys been taking at everybody else (You know: Editor vs Tatum, Readers vs. Editor, Students vs. Professors, Politician vs. Politician etc.) and wondering if this is "Everyone Take a Cut At Someone Else" season.

I thought, just for contrast, I'd congratulate someone for a job well-done, but after looking around I've decided that no one's done anything to be proud of that I can see.

"People are just no damn good!"

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

I watched a fellow sleeping in one of my classes until the professor made a reference to one of our comic strips. The professor was groping for the name of one of the comic strip characters when the sleeper suddenly straightened up and supplied the missing name.

Moral: Sleeping dogs don't always lie.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

A guy I know cut one of his classes to visit another class in the same building. He claims classes are more interesting if you don't have that feeling that you'll be back the next time the class meets.

It's too bad he can't aford the cuts to expand his learning a little more. I've always said that required classes are the biggest detriment to a college education on campus.

DAILY CALIFORNIAN:

Vaccine Pushed

Wide-scale shooting of Stanford students will begin tomorrow.

Immunization against Asian flu for the Stanford student body will begin then. According to Dr. George Houck, Stanford health service physician, 1605 cc. or enough to vaccinate "every student who will stand still long enough," has been received.

But here at the University, Cowell hospital is still almost vaccine-less.

Two months ago Cowell hospital ordered vaccine for the use of California students. However, there is not enough available for wide-scale vaccination.

"Those who have had the flu," said Donald, "have fairly good protection from the disease because they have a good chance of being immune for a year. However," he continued, "a flu victim is not safe from a second attack until he has been well ten days."

Sculptors' Works In Person Hall Display

The works of eight young American contemporary sculptors have been assembled for an exhibit through the month of November in Person Hall Art Gallery on the UNC campus.

The UNC Department of Art, headed by acting chairman Kenneth Ness, has assembled the group of sculptures for public viewing at the Gallery's regular hours.

The first show of this type in eight years, it displays the works of one woman and seven men: Lin Emery of New Orleans; Lindsey Decker of Michigan State University Art Department; Roy Gussow, associate Professor of design at N. C. State College in Raleigh; Kirk Newman of the University of Michigan Art Department; Raymond Rocklin of Great Neck, Long Island; Leo Steppat of the University of Wisconsin Art Department; Robert Rosenwald of New York City; and Howard James Whitlach of the University of Arkansas Art Department.

Yesterday's Answer

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Mary Alys Voorhees, Editor

Horizontal Club Doings

Greetings from the Horizontal Club! Plus social notes from all over.

But first a glance at Halloween in the infirmary. Gay napkins plus small cups decorated with black cats and filled with "candy corn" got patients in the spirit of things, and before the night was over, some of the "sickly" were donning masks made from newspapers and making the rounds playing trick or treat. Much fun!

Chi Psi Funland

Back on campus a social note brings reports of the big doings over at the Chi Psi Lodge, where brothers and dates are celebrating both Homecoming and their "house party" weekend.

Last night when Dixieland was in full swing, they had the Phi Delts as guests, and tonight after a dinner at the Lodge, the spotlight will be on an "Artists and Models" party with music in modern jazz.

And to wrap things up everyone will relax Sunday at a "Concert Party" featuring the same jazz quintet.

Sigma Nus And "Kool Kats"

Over at the end of frat court, the Sigma Nu House will be buzzing with activity as they entertain alums at a reception today before the Carolina-Tennessee game.

Later this evening after the game, and after dinner, Frank Wright and his "Kool Kats" will play for Sigma Nus and their dates.

From cupid's corner comes word of the marriage of Sigma Nu pledge Steve Wilkerson, junior from Greenville, and Patsy Flanagan, also of Greenville. Steve transferred from ECC this year.

ATO Dixieland

To celebrate Homecoming, the ATO's will party tonight at the House in true Southern style with a Dixieland band to entertain alums and dates.

New pledge class officers are Ralph Cummings of Raleigh, president; and Norwood Holmes of Goldsboro, secretary-treasurer.

Delta Psi Masquerade

Zete Fun Begins

To get the weekend fun underway, Zete brothers, pledges and dates journeyed over to Smith's Lake in Durham last night to dine and dance. After a dinner, combo music was provided for dancers.

And after the game today, there'll be more Homecoming fun when Zetes party at the House.

Awards Are Presented 28 AFROTC Members

Awards were presented to 28 AFROTC cadets Thursday at Emerson Field by visiting Col. W. E. McEntire.

Col. McEntire is Assistant Commandant of Headquarters AFROTC at Maxwell AFB, Ala.

He will inspect the facilities and operations of the UNC unit, meet with AFROTC instructors and university officials and visit classes during his visit.

Cadet Lt. Col. Tom G. Farrell, Cadet Maj. Ralph P. Hunt and Cadet Capt. William M. Aldred received the Distinguished Military Award. This is one of the most coveted awards in the cadet corps.

The following men received the Potential Flying Officers Wings, meaning they passed the necessary physical and mental tests to qualify for flying status upon graduation.

Cadet Capt. D. E. Brown, Cadet 1st Lt. W. E. Stewart, Cadet 1st Lt. J. E. Adams, Cadet M/Sgts. E. G. Jacobsen, D. A. Ellis, B. M. Zlotnicki.

Also, Cadet T/Sgts. W. G. Bailey, W. S. Godwin, B. J. Knox, L. S. Stephenson, G. H. Lindsey, J. A. Singleton.

Also, Airmen 1st Class B. W. Baucom, G. E. Darmstatter, L. J. Davis, L. W. Deborde, W. G. Hendren, J. E. Thompson.

ARMISTICE DAY CEREMONY

The Carolina AFROTC Cadet Group is preparing for the Armistice Day Retreat Ceremony to be held on Nov. 11.

The ceremony will be held on the lawn between South Building and Wilson Library at 4:30 p.m. on the national holiday commemorating our war dead.

Cadet 1st Lt. Jerry Cole will introduce Dean Fred Weaver, who will be the guest speaker, and Director of Student Activities, Sam Magill, who will give the invocation.

The AROTC Band will play for the ceremony.

Homecoming Set By Radio And TV Dept.

A homecoming celebration will be held today by the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures at Swain Hall for returning alumni and students.

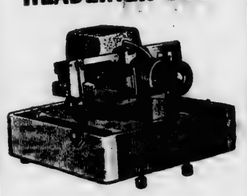
The celebration heralding the 10th anniversary of the Department of Radio, Television and Motion Pictures will include an open house at Swain Hall from 10 a. m. until noon.

New York television and radio directors as well as station managers from across the state have been invited to attend Saturday's activities.

Alumni will be shown around the multitude of hallways and offices which have been built into the barnlike shell which was Swain Hall ten years ago.

Studio As, where refreshments will be served, has been decorated with murals of photographs chronciling the highlights of the decade in which the original radio deparment grew to include television and motion pictures.

Alumni are also invited to attend classes and visit the branches of the Communication Center including the Photo Lab, Recording Laboratories and WUNC-TV and WUNC-FM.



Earl Wynn, who founded the department ten years ago and who is now chairman of the department, will be on hand to join his staff in greeting his students of former years. Wynn is also director of the Communication Center and of the Chapel Hill studio of WUNC-TV.

Dorm Open To Women

Women guests may visit in the social room of Joyner, mens' dormitory, today from 12 noon to 6 p. m.

IDC President Tom Walters announced that the council approved Joyner's request to allow its residents to receive their dates in the social room after assurance that chaperones would be present.

Jerry Baynes, president of the dorm, had submitted the request to the council. Its purpose was to give Joyner residents "a place to take their dates after the football game."

Women guests are permitted to visit in the social room of the dorm only.

Walters said he was pleased at the show of interest on the idea of an open social room. "I think it is a very good idea. I take it as a sign of dormitory spirit. I hope that dorms in the future will continue to plan and carry out such social events, because I feel it lends to dignity and pride to the dormitory."

TRIANGULAR EVENTS SET

Varsity And Freshmen Harriers Run Today

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's unbeaten varsity cross-country team springs back into action here today in a triangular meet against Tennessee and Duke.

The meet, to be run at Finley Golf Course here in Chapel Hill, is scheduled to begin at 11 a. m.

The freshman team, in another triangular meet, will go against Myers Park High School of Charlotte and Duke's freshmen. The frosh harriers will start about five minutes ahead of the varsity and should finish about ten minutes after the varsity gets underway.

2-0 MARK

In its only other meets of the season, the varsity has soundly whipped Clemson and Virginia. They clobbered the Tigers 25-32, and crushed the Cavaliers 21-37. The harriers were hit hard by that slant-eyed monster, the Asiatic flu, most of the past month. The bug forced cancellation of two meets, against Maryland and N. C. State.

Sickness even made it imperative to cancel practice for several days. Practice knocked off on Oct. 14 and wasn't resumed until the 25th. Even though most of the boys have been working out regularly, full practice sesions still haven't been resumed.

Coach Dale Ranson has announced his starting line-up. The boys running today will be Wayne Bishop, who blazed around the Clemson track in 19:56 for a track record, Captain Everette Whatley, Dave Scurlock, Cowles Liipfert, Alex Coffin, Jim Hunter, and Doug Henderson.

Several boys won't run today because of flu and injuries. Howard Kahn, previously the number 5 man, has been unable to practice. Fick Arthur is still out and Joe Friedberg has a sprained ankle.

Harry Miller, Worth Sweet, Neal Chappell, Bob Foxworth, and John Bowles should star for the Freshman.

Somebody Goofed, Barnes Is Still Wrestling Coach

Sam Barnes, the distinguished English professor who keeps his hand in sports by coaching wrestling here, wants it known that he's still on the job with the matmen.

A few days ago an item went out from here about the appointment of a new freshman wrestling coach. Or at least that was what it was supposed to have reported. In some way the word "freshman" got left out. Sam's friends have been calling to find out if he has given up coaching.

He hasn't. He'll be tutoring tht varsity this winter as usual. The new freshman coach is Jim Carse.

Group Named To Select New Coach At UK

LAWRENCE, Kan., Nov. 1 (AP) — The University of Kansas named a six-men screening committee today to select a successor to football coach Chuck Mather.

Dr. Laurence Woodruff, dean of students and chairman of the K. U. Athletic Board of Control, said the board last night accepted the resignations of Mather and five assistants.

Mather, coach at the Big Eight school since 1954, announced Wednesday night he and his staff will step out at the end of the season. Their contracts run until March 1.

BLOOD OFFERED

Seventeen members of the local Scabbard and Blade Company, national military honorary, have offered to make donations at the emergency Blood Bank.

The event marks the first time in the history of the local Blood Bank and of UNC that a group has offered its services as a whole to the blood donation program it was announced.

Tar Heels Host Tough Vols Today

Fullback Giles Gaca will be dangerous should he perform as he did against the Deacs last week, and Ed Lipski and Bob Shupin lead capable assistance at the plunging spot. Curt Hathaway is the number one understudy for Cummings, and a capable man he is.

KOES PROBABLY OUT

The Vols will be counting heavily on the services of backs Tommy Brunson, George Wright and Carl Smith to back up Gordon.

While Tatum will probably use his "top 22" to shoulder the brunt of the load, Tennessee Coach Bowden Wyatt will probably call on his top 11 to go most of the way. Another difference in the two clubs is that Tatum uses the unit system, while Wyatt prefers to substitute individually.

Carolina centers, Ron Koes and Jim Davis are the only Tar Heels expected to miss today's action. Koes has a cronic sinus condition and Davis has not fully recuperated from injuries suffering against Maryland Bill Hardison is expected to get the call at the pivot spot, backed up by sophomore Dick Need. Tennessee's only casaulty is tailback Al Carter.

Strong Tennessee Downs Carolina 35-0; 34,000 See Homecoming Game In Kenan

Single Wing Used To Hand Carolina Season's 5th Loss

By BILL KING

The Tennessee Volunteers unleased a devastating offensive single wing attack and an equally vicious defensive effort to completely overpower the Carolina Tar Heels, 35-0, in Kenan Stadium yesterday.

A Homecoming crowd of about 34,000 sat in stunned silence as the powerful charges of Coach Bowden Wyatt ran through the Carolina defense like it was made of Homecoming decoration paper, smashing for three touchdowns in the first half and powering across two more in the second.

It was the third loss of the season for Jim Tatum's Tar Heels against four victories. The victory left Tennessee with a 5-1 mark on the season.

It was apparent from the opening kickoff that the Tar Heels would have their hands full all afternoon and Tennessee tailback Bobby Gordon was around to verify this with resounding surety.

Gordon ,successor to the great Johnny Majors at the tailback slot, was an All-American himself as he stayed around long enough to insure a victory for his Vols, then gave way to less experienced but almost as capable hands.

It was a disheartening blemish to Carolina Homecoming festivities as the Tar Heels had their worst afternoon of the season against the yard-producing single wing formation which has wrecked many a good ball club.

It took the Vols just six minutes and five seconds to punch across their first touchdown.

Carolina had possession of the ball for just three downs after the opening kickoff before the Vols took over on the Tar Heel's 49 and marched for the touchdown in eleven plays. Gordon carried the leather on nine of those 11 thrusts and wrapped up the drive on a sweep around the right end with 8:55 remaining in the initial quarter. Sammy Burklow kicked the first of five extra points for the Vols to give them a 7-0 lead.

For a while it seemed that the Tar Heels would make a ball game of it as they got one of their famous "breaks" at the Tennessee 12 just after the Vols kicked off.

Halfback Jim Schuler took that kickoff on the seven and moved to the 32, but the Tar Heels could get no further than their own 49 on the next six downs: On fourth down Don Coker kicked to Gordon at the Tennessee five. Gordon was going to let it roll but it bounced back and hit a Tennessee lineman and Carolina guard Ed Furjanic recovered at the 12.

But the Tar Heels couldn't take advantage of this golden opportunity as they were able to move only three yards in the next four downs.

Just after the beginning of the second period, Tennessee got possession on the Carolina 38 and this time it was the Vol's second unit which moved to paydirt.

Actually, Gordon's team moved the ball to the 27 before giving over to the second unit. Gordon's 14-yard pass to wingback Bill Anderson set the stage at the 27.

This time it was tailback Carol Young and fullback Carl Smith who carried the load for the Vols. Young moved to the 23, then to the 16. Smith took over and got to the six in three plays and then Young went off tackle to the two and a first down. Carolina held for two downs before Smith slipped off right tackle for the score with 8:14 left in the half. Burklow's point after was good, making it 14-0.

The Vols pulled further ahead very quickly, converting a Carolina fumble into another touchdown less than two minutes later.

The Vols kicked off and on the first play, Carolina halfback Don Coker fumbled. Tennessee's Joe Lukeowski recovered on the Carolina 33. With the second unit still in, Anderson took a pitchout from Young and went wide to the right all the way to the Carolina one.

Smith could make no progress on the next play, but then Young scooted off the right side for point number 20. Bill Gent's extra point attempt made it 21-0, and that's the way it was at halftime as neither team threatened after that.

Tatum Mystified After Defeat By Volunteers

By DAVE WIBLE

If you want to know what happened yesterday afternoon on the Kenan Stadium turf, the last man to question is Jim Tatum.

The Tar Heel head coach was completely mystified when it came to the problem of analyzing the battle after the game. "Not a thing on God's green acres can help me to understand why we were so helpless today," were his opening words in the post game press conference.

"If they had beaten us with their running pass or kicking game I could understand, but as it was, I just don't know," Tatum said. "I was just like you (the press), a specator watching the game."

Tatum was very concerned about the change of spirit of his charges during the past week of practice. "We haven't had a better week of practice this year and I haven't seen a happier bunch of boys," he said, "but I never saw a flatter ball club in my life as the boys were today, and I am ashamed as a coach for our performance."

Tatum said that he expected the greatest problem with Tennessee would be their kicking game, or a mistake his offensive center would make since his first two centers were not able to play. The problems turned out to be entirely different.

Tennessee showed up with a team that could move the ball, which Tatum says they haven't been able to do all year. This surprised the coach but not as much as his own team's incapability to hang on to the ball. "Ya Know," he said, "before today's game, we have lost the ball only once on fumbles. Today we lost it three times."

The only player Tatum singled out was tackle Ronnie Stallings who was shifted from guard last week to fill in that depleted position. "Stallings was the only boy that had real drive. He had more life than anyone on the team," Tatum observed.

When asked why he didn't use the running pass play which has been successful in the past, Tatum answered, "We couldn't get outside far enough to run it." He then complemented the Vols ends for their fine defensive game. "We just couldn't get through or around them."

It is interesting to note, although it far from affected the outcome of the contest, that Tar Heel Co-Captain Buddy Payne called the pre-game coin flip right, the first time Carolina has won a toss all season.

Ronnie Koes, the Tar Heels' first line center, who Tatum considered a real loss to the team yesterday, is not suffering from sinus trouble as has been reported but a bum knee which he injured at the Wake Forest game last week.

Tatum admitted all through the conference that he was seeking an excuse for the loss. He didn't know why he had lost, but the tone of his voice and his facial expressions were enough to tell that he felt the loss deep down inside.

Grads' Return Highlights Day

By DAVE WIBLE

It was homecoming yesterday afternoon and hundreds, maybe thousands, of Carolina grads gathered up their wives and children and came home to Chapel Hill to see the festivities reigned over Miss Gail Willingham.

Before the game the grads roamed the campus pointing out buildings, walks, and rendzvous spots they once knew so well. They looked over the homecoming displays and smiled with approval.

They pointed to a window, and proudly announced, "That's where I lived." All of this was accompanied by music of all kinds that blared out of the windows of proud hi-fi set owners.

In the fraternity houses the pledges had to look hard to find someone they knew. The grads took over, shaking hands with the older brothers and recalling past experiences. As grad met grad. Everyone was happy.

Then came the game. Tennessee scored and sadness crept over the West side of the stadium.

The Queen and her court were presented during the half and they received the loudest cheer of the game. The winners of the homecoming display winners were announced, Old East in the Dorm division and Pi Beta Phi and Pi Kappa Alpha in the fraternity division, and small group cheers were heard.

The game continued, then ended. Grads moved through the woods towards their cars. The alumni get together at Graham Memorial after the game was a flop. Only fifty or sixty people out of all the graduated classes showed up. The grads just didn't feel like getting together.

Campaign Orders Due For SP Today

Student Party elections officials announced yesterday that the deadline for ordering campaign literature and publicity through the party is tomorrow.

SP campaign headquarters (upstairs in the YM-YWCA) will be open from 1-6 tomorrow afternoon and until 11 o'clock tomorrow night after the compulsory candidates' meeting in Gerrard Hall. Those who have not yet ordered publicity may do so during these times.

Full payment for all materials ordered is due before tomorrow night. SP officials said. They added that no orders will be placed with the printers until complete collection of all fees and expenses has been completed.

Kennedy Will Speak At UNC

[illegible] Kennedy, legal counsel for the current Senate committee investigating labor racketeering, will speak at a public meeting sponsored by the UNC Law School Assn. Tues., Nov. 12, it was announced today by Herbert Toms, chairman of the speakers committee.

Kennedy is the brother of Senator John F. Kennedy of Massachusetts and is himself considered a potential political leader of national consequence.

The meeting will be held at the Institute of Government auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

"The Role of the Attorney in Congressional Investigations" will be Kennedy's topic. The Kennedy brothers were featured in a recent Saturday Evening Post article, "The Fabulous Kennedys."

After graduation from Harvard with an A.B. degree, Kennedy attended the University of Virginia Law School, completing his LL.B. in 1951. During the next year he worked with the Justice Department's Criminal Division, leaving that post to manage his brother's Senatorial campaign.

Since 1953 he has held various counsel posts on the Hoover Commission, the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field.

McLeod had said earlier that the woman made herself beneficiary in at least 84 insurance policies obtained on the lives of relatives, neighborhood children, and acquaintances

Red Spot On Moon?

SAN FRANCISCO, Nov. 2 (AP)-Dr. Edward Teller said today he will not be surprised if the Russians hit the moon on Nov. 7 and "They may even put a red star on it."

Dr. Teller, nuclear scientist called the father of the hydrogen bomb, said the Russians may shoot a missile at the moon on the 40th anniversary of the Red revolution.

"They may put a red spot on it. They may even put a red star on it," Dr. Teller told a conference of elementary science teachers at San Francisco State College.

[illegible] out any doubt we shall stay ahead of the Russians in football," he declared.

Dr. Teller predicted that once a man made missile reaches the moon "getting to Venus or Mars will follow within the century."

Negro Dynamiting

BESSEMER, Ala., Nov. 2 (AP)-Bessemer police today said little progress had been made in investigating the dynamiting of the home of a Negro pro-integration leader.

A dynamite bomb exploded outside the residence of David Hood Jr., early yesterday. Windows of the house were shattered and broken glass was sprayed upon the attorney as he slept on a living room couch with a rifle beside him.

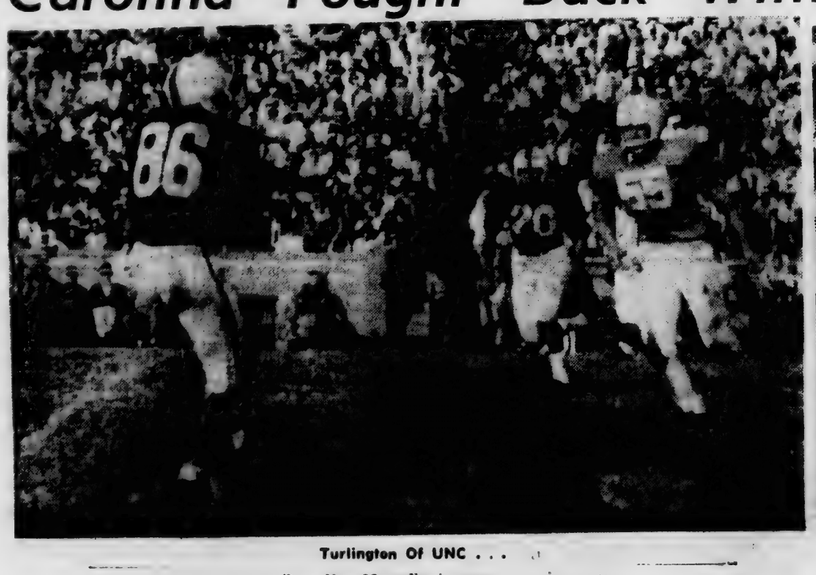
Hood said he had received numerous telephoned threats against his life.

The attorney is representing two Negro men who are attacking a local ordinance barring Negroes from Bessemer's two public parks. They have filed a federal court suit asking that the ordinance be declared unconstitutional.

Khrushchev Is Power Holder

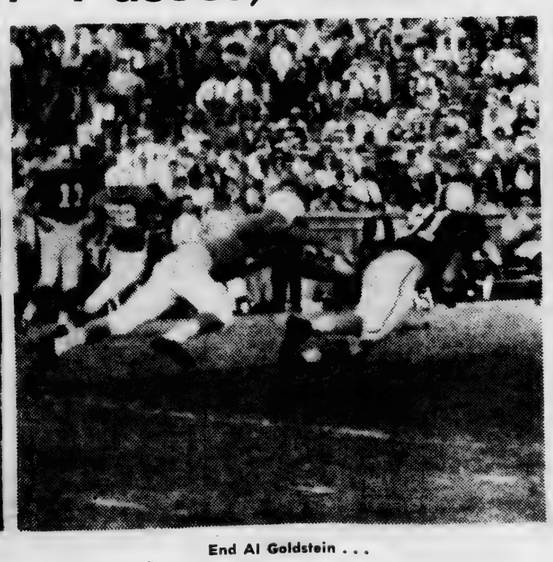
By JOHN M. HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 —(AP)— Nikia Khrushchev appeared to be riding the crest of Soviet power today with his triumph over Marshal Georgi Zhukov. But it could turn out to be a costly victory.



U. S. Authorities said it was impossible to see how Khrushchev could break and disgrace a man of Zhukov's popularity and influence without reaping a bitter harvest of resentment and hostility.

Such a result would probably mean a prolonged period of political instability in the Soviet ruling clique, and indeed that is what some of the best informed officials here foresee.



Khrushchev is formally in the saddle now, as these experts understand it. But he is there because in the space of five months he has deposed several powerful men whom he considered dangerous rivals for his position

They were dangerous because they had friends and influence either in the Communist Party or the military forces and this fact indicates the probable existence of dissident elements which could make trouble for Khrushchev and those who support him in some future political crisis.

Fight For Freedom And A Grim Reminder

"We shall avenge your death."—From the grave marker of a Hungarian patriot.

Tomorrow, Nov. 4, commemorates the anniversary of one of the most brutal instances of suppression of free thought and free action in the ignominious history of such action.

On Nov. 4, 1956, massive and mobilized Russian troops entered Budapest, Hungary, and snuffed out the last flickering flame of liberty. The Hungarian Revolt had begun on Oct. 23, and had progressed purely through the miraculous and never-say-die efforts of a minority of freedom fighters.

Assuredly no amount of Russian propaganda—Sputnik, shaggy dog tales about sending a shaggy dog into space, claims of developmentof a sure-fire sure for Asian Flu, etc.—can eradicate memories of this valiant fight for freedom. Nor can such propaganda eradicate the picture of atheistic Communism inundating and drowning hopes for democratic freedom of thought—a phrase which has now come to mean so much on our local campus.

Colleges and universities throughout the nation, upon th urging of the Christianform," non-profit, non-sectarian organization dedicated to the defeat of atheistic Communism," yesterday commemorated the Hungarian freedom fight with halftime festivities—grim reminders—lest we forget.

One of the Hungarian freedom fighters, Leslie Toth, who escaped Communist tyranny by fleeing to asylum in Austria and who is currently studying in the United States, dramatically describes the revolt in illuminating terms. We quote passages from an article written by Toth:

"In the fall of 1956, Hungarian youth, as universally claimed, occupied not only the platforms of schools but also of political life. . . Hungarian youth became great when it realized that this fight for life and death had to be fought. . . This youth lived in a world where the state meant totalitarianism and dictatorship.

"Our youth lived in a country where there were more spies than street sweeprs, more prisons than hospitals, where the concentration camp was the largest monastery of the Jesuits, where the only country one could love was, according to the orders of the Communist leaders, the Soviet Union, where morals are laughed at and called 'a rudiment of petty bourgeosie,' where servility, falsity and cowardice are the greatest virtues, where attacks against the very nation and the family have begun all over and where th soviet citizen and communisty by right of 'superhumanity' drove millions into imprisonment." the soviet citizen and communist by right of 'superhumanity' drove millions into imprisonment."

After Toth's explanation of the Hungarian Revolt's background, he described the battle in these graphic terms:

"We had not more than a few hours sleep since the morning of Oct. 23. Our clothe were sticky from dirt and sweat. The Russians were chasing us from block to block. . .Bitter fights were still going on in the suburbs. . .It was impossible to walk on the streets with arms and with our dirty and ragged appearance, betraying us at once as revolutionaries. Our having been spied by Russian soldiers would have meant immediate arrest, if not death.

"People were aimlessly walking on the streets, their faces betraying their utter hopelessness and bewilderment. . .Yet, somehow, we had the feeling that even in this vacuum of despair, everybody seemed to wait for something, to expect a mircale.

"My friend Geza said to us during the fighting, 'Even in case we win today, we cannot know what wil happen tomorow. I have not much hope, but there is no choice. Boys, let us do our duty.' Unfortunately, Geza was right. That night the Russians overran us and captured us.

"Geza himself fell in action on Nov. 4, during the second Russian invasion.

"He was no hero. He simply did his duty."

The Hungarian Revolt was a big blow in the belly against tyrannical communism. And while party Chief Nikita Khruschev ever-tightens his dictatorship with contrived plots called ed-Stalinization and de-Zhukovization, the memory of the Hungarian study in blood and ignomy, freedom and the conscientious fight for freedom, muscles and minds lingers on as consistent spur in the tyrannical communist side.

"We shall avenge your death."

Commercialism And Alcohol . . .

In this age of crass comercialism, we spied yesterday a sign on Highway 98 which we felt was the limit.

Outside Durham, both on Highways 98 and 15-501, there are advertisements from the Selected Morticians Association, of which there is a representative in Durham.

Of course, undertakers could find no better spot for their commercials than beside the highway. For, after all, whence could they possibly get more business.

The advertisement's stratgeic position is similar to advertisement of a hot dog stand inside a Russian concentration camp—if the hot dogs could actually be procured.

Commercialism and commercials have definitely come of age.

Next thing you hear of in all probability, will be the Women's Christian Temperance Union's advertising at football games and in long orations in front of alcoholic beverage stores.

But, commercials have definitely come into their own.

And to what dark spot did the age of reason creep?

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Free Opinion Or Recall? Your Choice

Gail Godwin

The "Down With Bass' petition has a far greater significance than meets the eye. Students are jumping on the bandwagon and signing a petition which if successful, will demand a recall.

This is a very democratic kind of student action which is exercised at not only student government level, but state and national also.

Initiative can be very effective if used in the right way, It can be very dangerous if abused.

To decide whether this initiative is a very fine thing, or, on the other hand, somthing arising from petty resentment, we must look at it very objectively and ask ourselves these questions:

Who takes the initiative. . . . and why?

If we look into the background of this first question, we may find some things that startle us. We may find that the originators have other motives than those of meredy corecting a wrong. They may want to exploit an organ devoted to informing the public for their private use, and thus be seizing the first opportunity that arises which will boost them in the eyes of the public. This opportunity, which may come in the form of the editor making the right mistake at the right time. . .The kind of mistake that would arouse mass Indignation, is rain from heaven for instigators of this sort.

On the other hand, if the editor is abusing freedom of the press, someone must have the foresight and the courage to take steps to stop this. In this case, the originators of such a petition are loyal, interested student citizens.

Which is the situation here at Carolina?

If the petition is successful, a recall election must be held. Could the instigators of this petition benefit in any way from a recall election in which the present editor is defeated?

Or are the instigators simply a group of enlightened students who have thoroughly investigated the situation and have reached intelligent and logical conclusions as to how the paper is being run?

What could be the result of this recall?

Will it be a step up or a step down in the history of freedom of the student press?

Will selfish opportunists ride to positions of glory under a false banner which proclaims freedom of the press?

Or will interested students apprehend a lack in their student publication and remedy it by electing a new editor?

Think carefully, students who champion freedom of the press, for only one of the two above conditions can be correct. You are the ones who must decide.

"Now, Panel, What's My Line?"

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Readers Defend Free Thought, And Freedom Of The Press . . .

EDITOR:

Again this odious business of "recall" has been raised over the editorial policies of the Daily Tar Heel for the second time in three years. It is not without misgiving that one observes that a trend is being established whereby the Editor shall be called to account if and when he expresses an opinion contrary to that of the self-appointed divines of current campus thought. But in a deeper and more real sense, the editor is not on trial here, but actual freedom of the press to print such opinions as it feels are to the general good of the campus.

There are those who will counter that since the DTH is financed from fees collected irrespective of whether the student actually wants a copy each day, the Editor should make it his policy to try to agree with that nebulous quantity "public opinion." But if we are to have a newspaper and not merely a publicity sheet for campus activities or a nicely supervised journalism-English project, then the editorial integrity of the Daily Tar Heel must be protected. You have been accused of irresponsible editorial policies. True, I must agree you are a bit radical, but to paraphrase Voltaire, I may not agree with what you have to say, but I will defend to the end your right to say it.

Surely those who advocate a recall must realize that in electing a personality to head a student activity they are electing him for better or for worse. Evidently you have the confidence of a majority of the student body, or you would not now be in the middle of all this ruckus. It is also noteworthy that the fuss is coming from the camp of Charlie Sloan & Company, not from the campus as a whole. I wonder if Mr. Sloan remembers his front-page article, an unabashed piece of campaign propoganda, in which he maligned your qualifications for the Editorship. Is this quite in line with what Mr. Kuralt is now advocating, or was it indeed quite fair tactics? I doubt it.

I had thought that the conformity on campus in the three-button category would certainly not spill over into the realm of the free expression of ideas. It is a great disillusionment to one who had looked on Chapel Hill to be an open-minded student community, but who now finds more and more a trend toward conservatism and conformity. I doubt that this trend has affected a majority of the campus, but it is becoming every day more important.

To Sloan & Co. I agree with you: sour grapes. But I don't think they really realize where all this might eventually lead. The recall of an editor for the expression of unpopular ideas is a dangerous precedent, and I deplore it.

JOE FERRELL

EDITOR:

As a former associate of The Daily Tar Heel, I often found myself in opposition to Editor Bass's stands and treatments to issues of the day.

Recently and currently I find myself in perhaps even stronger disagreement with editorial treatments of the DTH.

I number myself as one of many who are critical of the present policies of the paper which have been reflected in the of 'times unfortunate statements of the editor. And like many, I have taken exception to the editor's display of poor judgement and taste in more than one instance.

But unlike those who are currently circulating a petition demanding a recall election, I do not condemn the right of the Tar Heel editor to think and print as he sees fit.

For this is the basic right of Editor Bass or any newspaper editor for that matter. An editor's claim to office rests on an almost unbounded freedom to put his words and feelings into the force of black print on the opinion page of his newspaper. This is the freedom of press which is guaranteed him in a free society.

To deny the editor's right to expression — regardless of consequence—is to deny the public itself of one of its free institutions.

The danger to freedom of expression and Freedom itself should be underscored in the implications of the current recall action.

If a recall election is effected, the campus community should take into account the dangers inherent in its actions to maintain or remove the present editor.

Recall, to my mind, is a destructive element to free press and society. What is needed in the present situation is constructive, helpful criticism.

If the UNC campus is disatisfied with Tar Heel policies, it could translate its dissatisfaction into a floorwater program of letters describing the why's and wherefore's of its dissension. If it is interested and dissatisfied enough, it could provide individuals who would voice their opinions and disapproval directly to the editor.

MICKEY MOUSE:

Of Shrimp & Mice And Holy Terrors

Walt Thomas

One minute I was standing there slowly and carefully shaving my scroungy countenance when I was suddenly and explosively presented with the bathroom door between my shoulder-blades and one beautiful scar on my chin which bled like the devil and to which even now people point and shake their heads slowly, muttering sad things about wounded veterans.

But it wasn't a bomb or a grenade or anything like that at all that got me. The scar was a gift exuberantly given by a little guy that "boards" around at my Parents' home, and goes under the assumed name of Dwight Douglas Thomas. He's usually called many other names by his friends. Now don't laugh yet, because they aren't necesarily the rock throwing kind, but just other names, manly because his dumb little friends are thrown by the "G-H-T" part of his name. To tell the truth, it throws me too, so I call him Shrimp.

But anyway, just at this minute I was being thrown through the tile wall of the bathroom (the Shrimp calls it the "head"), and in comes the Tee Shirt Terror himself.

"Thanks a lot, Shrimp", says I, acting the big ugly brother to the little Shrimp.

"Your chin is bleeding", says the Shrimp to me, his non-anemic brother, "and I'm sorry".

With this, the little boy that is my brother muscled his way into the room and proceeded to wash his hands.

"Why the devil have you got to wash your paws right now, Knotty One?" I asked.

"Well. . .Mother says I have to wash up before I can watch Mickey Mouse." He spluttered as he scrubbed his face.

I groaned and looked up at the ceiling, holding my martyred chin and growling something about the sacrednes and impeccability of a Mickey Mouse to which little boys must sacrifice their well earned dirt and I my chin.

The Shrimp looked worriedly at me then and, handing me some more tissue he said, "Well ya know, Walt, . . .it ain't just Mickey . . .its the cookies that I'm going to eat, and Mom says that after all those rabbits today. . .well you know. . . She just says I gotta wash 'em.

This wasn't enough for me so I snarled at the very "frightened" little boy who now proceeded to dry his hands in my towel. . .Wash what, Shrimp, your hands or the rabbits?"

He chose not to answer his paper-chinned brother and after leaving my towel well muddied, the boy could ride a bicycle better than anyone else, could eat more doughnuts, had more rabbits, dogs, cats, chickens, and turtles than anyone else (he told me so himself) elbowed his way out. When he heard the familiar strains of the Mickey Mouse song beginning, he broke into a run for the living room. I stood there in the door long enough to se him dive onto the floor head first and skid to a stop just about a foot away from the television screen on which there capered a little black mouse and a fancied that I heard my blood dripping on the floor. Again I groaned up at the ceiling and then glanced at my wounded face in the mirror once more before applying a bright green band-aid shaped like a bug, over my cut. It was the only one left in a box marked "Band-aids for children".

I turned hastily back to the paper roll when I bull-dog with pants on. From the kitchen I could hear Mother unconsciously humming. . ."Mick eeee Mou ussss, Mick eeee Mou ussss."

Feeling better now and looking really dashing with my green bug stuck to my chin, I sauntered into the living room and yelled at the Shrimp (who never hears anything when that black mouse is in trouble) . . . ."Hey, Dwarf, what has Walt Disney got that Walt Thomas hasn't anyhow?" He didn't answer so I sat down and began to hum. . .Mick eee Mou uss. . . Mick eee Mou ussss."

Red Says Syria Still Threatened By Turkish Troop Concentration

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Nov. 2 —(AP)— Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei A. Gromyko said today Syria is still in danger from Turkish troop concentrations on her border.

He also declared, in a statement issued by his U.N. delegation, that "Syria would not be alone in her struggle if she were attacked."

The statement broke the silence Gromyko had kept since Soviet Communist Leader Nikita S. Khrushchev Tuesday night went to a Moscow Turkish Embassy party as "a gesture toward peace" and said, "there will be no war."

Syrian Foreign Minister Salah Bitar told a news conference yesterday Khrushchev's remark did not put his mind at ease. He said Turkish troops on Syria's border still endangered her.

Bitar spoke a few hours after the U.N. General Assembly laid aside Syria's complaint that Turkish forces were massed on the frontier for imminent attack.

Gromyko, echoing Bitars' thoughts, said, "the danger which Syria faces has not yet been removed. The Turkish troops concentrated near the border are not withdrawn . . . . The United Nations should be on the alert."

He said the Soviet Union had "stood up resolutely in the defense of Syria" and support of her complaint. He claimed the assembly debate had exposed U. S. instigation of Turkish "aggressive acts against Syria," discredited the "Dulles-Eisenhower Doctrine" and rallied the Arab countries behind Syria.

Both the United States and Turkey have denied having any plan to attack Syria. Turkey has accepted an offer of mediation from King Saud of Saudi Arabia, while Syria has held back.

Another Soviet delegate said Gromyko, who has been heading the Soviet delegation to the assembly, probably would leave tomorrow for Moscow.

The central committee of the Soviet Communist Party, of which Gromyko is a member, announced there today that it had ousted former Defense Minister Georgi K. Zhukov from its own membership and that of its presidium.

In a public statement, Cuban delegate Emilio Nunez-Portuondo said of the Syrian-Turkish case, "The socalled conflict was tailored at the Kremlin by Mr. Khrushchev in order to degrade Marshall Zhukov."

"Once the purpose of degrading Zhukov was achieved, " he concluded, "it was not necessary to continue pressing the accusations against Turkey—a charge that, anyway, was not taken seriously by anyone at the United Nations."

Gromyko submitted a letter to the U.N. backing up the Syrian complaint a few hours after the latter was filed Oct. 16. He said Turkey with U. S. advice was planning to attack Syria right after the Turkish Parliamentary election.

The election was held Sunday and no attack followed. Syria Wednesday introduced a resolution to have the assembly send an investigating commission to the Syrian-Turkish border. Seven other countries, supported by the United States, introduced another expressing confidence that U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold would work to ease tension.

Neither resolution was sure of the necessary two-thirds vote. So, in a compromise, both sides agreed yesterday not to push their proposals to a decision.

U. S. delegate Henry Cabot Lodge commented that Khrushchev himself in effect had admitted that the whole case was "an artificial concoction and war scare dreamed up by the Soviet Union." Others said Khrushchev had "pulled the rug out from under" Syria.

Gromyko's statement said the assembly "gave a resolute answer to those who wanted to prepare and unleash aggression against Syria." He held Turkey and the United States "categorically object" to sending an investigating commission because "investigations could expose their actions."

He also said the debate showed the Arab countries' "resoluteness to defend their independence" and "the real nature of the Dulles-Eisenhower doctrine . . . alien to the national interests of the Arab peoples and . . . peace."

He said the Soviet Union's warnings it would help Syria if she were attacked were well known and need not be repeated. He concluded that Russia was doing its best to turn the Middle East "from a region of dangerous complications and conflicts to a region of lasing peace."

Disc Jockey Returns Home After Sea Trip

MOREHEAD CITY, N. C., Nov. 2 —(AP)— Melvin West, 28-year-old disc jockey who fell 165 miles short of his goal of sailing 580 miles from here to Bermuda in an open outboard motorboat, came home today to a reception by the homefolks.

He told a reporter that he considered the trip in his 15-foot, 30-horsepower boat a failure because he didn't do what he set out to do, although he struggled against the Atlantic Ocean for 11 days.

But the homefolks told him that it wasn't a failure. Mayor Pat Dill, in a short speech, thanked him for the publicity he had brought this town on the North Carolina coast, and said his friends here were proud of him.

Attendance at the reception and parade was held down by a flu outbreak. West's father, Barry West, who manages a fishing pier here, estimated the crowd at 300.

West was picked up by a Coast Guard cutter and brought to Bermuda. His boat, which he dubbed the S. S. Impossible, is being shipped to New York aboard the Oleander of the Isbrandtsen Lines. He plans to drive to New York towing a trailer and pick up the boat Tuesday morning at a Brooklyn pier, and bring it back.

CHEMSTRAND SCHOLAR AT UNC — The Chemstrand Corporation of Decatur, Ala., has established a new scholarship in chemistry at UNC. First recipient of the $500 grant is Stanley Morris Williamson of Charlotte, above, a senior chemistry major. Selection, based on high academic record, was made by the faculty of the UNC Chemistry Department and the Scholarship Committee.

College Cadet Program To Be Explained Here

The Navy Recruiting and Officer Procurement Headjuarters in Raleigh has announced that a team of Naval officers will be at UNC tomorrow and Tuesday.

University officials have made arrangements for the team to be located in the YMCA Building during their visit. The team will consist of representatives for the various Navy Officer Programs including Aviation Officer Candidate, School, Wave, and Nurse programs for college seniors.

A representative from the Naval Air Station, Norfolk, Va., will present information concerning the Naval Aviation Cadet program for 2 year college men.

Accompanying the team is "Miss Cougar" a transonic Navy jet fighter plane which will be on display in the Morehead Planatarium parking lot until 5 p.m. on Nov. 7. The only difference between this jet and its operational counterpart is the fact that in "Miss Cougar," the trubo-jet engine can be viewed through a portion cut away from the tail assembly. The engine can be operated at slow speeds so that all of the inner-component parts may be observed under actual operating conditions.

The aircraft, weighing 19,000 pounds, is normally catapulted from an aircraft carrier and has 7,250 horsepower at sea level. It is capable of nearly 700 miles per hour in a straight and level flight and over 935 miles per hour in a dive. Designed exclusively for carrier operation, it has folding wings and a wing span of 34 feet 6 inches and an overall length of 40 feet. This is the same type of aircraft that Naval Aviation Cadets and Aviation Officer Candidates are currently flying at the "Annapolis of the Air" at Pensacola, Fla.

A ramp built around the aircraft will enable everyone to get a close view. Navy personnel will be on hand to explain some of the intricacies of the aircraft and to answer questions regarding the Navy's $90,000 Pilot Training Program.

Sticklers!

NO SORRIER WARRIOR exists than the one without Luckies. What's he missing? A smoke that's as light as they come! End to end, a Lucky is made of superbly light tobacco—golden rich, wonderfully good-tasting tobacco that's toasted to taste even better. That's a lot to miss out on—no wonder our chief has grief! Up North, you'd call him a Blue Sioux; back East, a Bleak Creek. But out in the land of the pueblo, he's just a mighty Mopey Hopi. (Smoke signal to you: Light up a Lucky. You'll agree a light smoke's the right smoke for you!)

STUDENTS! MAKE $25

Do you like to shirk work? Here's some easy money—start Stickling! We'll pay $25 for every Stickler we print—and for hundreds more that never get used. Sticklers are simple riddles with two-word rhyming answers. Both words must have the same number of syllables. (Don't do drawings.) Send your Sticklers with your name, address, college and class to Happy-Joe-Lucky, Box 67A, Mount Vernon, N. Y.

Bishop Paces Harriers To Victory Over Duke, Vols

Junior Wayne Bishop's sparkling 19:38.6 performance over a soggy Fetzer Field layout led Carolina's undefeated varsity cross-country contingent to a double win over Duke and Tennessee in a triangular meet held here yesterday. UNC compiled a team score of 22 points, followed by Duke with 53 and Tennessee with 60.

Bishop's pace-setting mark for the 3.8 mile course was a new record, as yesterday's meet marked the first time the present layout had been used. His time was only a few seconds off the record time for the old course, which was approximately the same distance.

SCURLOCK SECOND

Dave Scurlock followed Bishop across the finish line with a 20:10 mark. Scurlock finished very strong, overtaking Stone of Tennessee in the final few hundred yards of the race to gain the runner-up slot. Stone's time was 20:12.

Captain Everett Whitley trailed the three leaders with a 20:34 mark, with Weisiger of Duke rounding out the five finishers with a 21:02 effort.

Moon of Tennesse was sixth, with UNC's Cowels Liipfert, John Reeves, and Jim Hunter trailing him, in that order.

RANSON PLEASED

Coach Dale Ranson expressed pleasure with the team showing after the Tar Heel victory, but he noted that many of the group were still feeling the weakening after-effects of the flu. He added that several boys were still very much off their usual form and that continued workouts to iron out kinks and to get his performers back in top physical shape were on tap for every afternoon this week.

Yesterday's victory established the Carolina squad as definite favorites to retain their ACC championship when the conference finals are held here later this month. In addition to the Blue Devils, who last week extended a powerful Maryland outfit before losing 33-39, the Tar Heels have defeated Clemson 25-32 and Virginia 21-37.

The harriers are at home for a triangular meet with Wake Forest and South Carolina on Friday afternoon.

Summary:

1. Bishop, UNC, 19:38.6 2. Scurlock, UNC, 20:10; 3. Stone, UT, 20:12; 4. Whatley, UNC, 20:34; 5. Weisiger, Duke, 21:02; 6. Moon, UT; 7. Liipfert, UNC; 8. Reeves, UNC; 9. Hunter, UNC; 10. Vol Coach Says This Was Best Effort Yet

By RUSTY HAMMOND

In an interview yesterday, Head Coach Bowden Wyatt of the University of Tennessee seemed extremely jubilant about his team's decisive 35-0 victory over the Tar Heels.

"Today was undoubtably our best game of the season, and even though we had a lot of breaks, we played our best ball," Wyatt remarked. "I think our whole line, which had heretofore been our weak spot, played great today. Gordon and Bronson stood out in the backfield, Gordon running and Bronson blocking for him. We passed more today than we have been doing, and it showed we can go to the air as well as move on the ground. I think the turning point of the game was our first touchdown; it was a tremendous mental lift for the boys."

Scared of Backs

"From our scouting reports, we were scared to death of the running of Schuler, Decantis, and Coker. We knew the line would have to charge especially hard today to bottle up those fast backs. We also rushed Cummings hard on passes, which definitely showed up," he added.

"A lot has been said about our size, but we are traditionaly a small team and we like small, fast boys. We stress speed and fundamentals. Most of our first team is made up of seniors, and I play the first team most of the time because they are the best. If they weren't, they wouldn't be on the first string," said Wyatt.

"Carolina is much stronger than they were last year and they have a much better team than was shown out there today," the coach stated.

Great Builder

Wyatt, regarded by many as the best coach in the nation today, has a reputation for building good teams. He took over the head coaching position at Wyoming in 1947 and turned what had been a so-so team into a conference champion his second year. In 1953 he moved on to Arkansas, which had been the conference doormat for many a year.

In 1954, the Razorbacks weren't supposed to win a game, but they amazed the sporting world by pulling one upset after another. Arkansas wound up Southwest Conference champions and played in the Cotton Bowl.

In 1955, he took over the reigns at ailing Tennessee. When 1956 rolled around, the Vols went undefeated and were ranked number two nationally. Wyatt was named "Coach of the Year."

Vols Topple UNC

penalty and a desperation pass from Jack Cummings to Giles Gaca for a four-yard loss forced the Tar Heels to kick out.

Cummings booted to Gordon at the Tennessee 37 and he moved back to the Carolina 48. Once again the hard-charging Gordon took command, and ten plays later, rolled over from three yards out for the score, with the clock showing 5:05 left. Burklow made it 28-0. Gordon carried eight times in that scoring series.

The Tar Heels played their only encouraging ball in the fourth quarter. Cummings, a real passing wizzard carried the Tar Heels from their own 20 to the Tennessee 46 with passes to Mac Hurlington and Daley Goff. But this surge also bogged down and the rampaging Vols once again took over and marched for paydirt on a 54-yard run by Carl Smith.

On the first play from the 46, Smith broke off the left side of the Carolina line and exhibited beautiful broken field running as he was hit time and again but rolled forward. He finally shook loose at the Tar Heel 20 and a key block by Young took out Carolina's last defender. Emil DeCantis at the nine—and Smith went over standing up. Burklow made it 35-0 with 10:15 left in the game.

Cummings once again went to the air for the Tar Heel's deepest penetration of the afternoon. The sophomore quarterback directed a kickoff-ensuing drive from the Tar Heel 25 to the Tennessee three before the thrust was halted. Cummings completed five passes in the series, one to Ron Marquette and Al Goldstein and three in a row to Don Kemper.

The Tar Heels had a first down at the Tennessee four, but could get only one yard closer to touchdown glory as the Vol's line held fast.

tors' total offense came to only 109 yards.

Duke didn't get into Tech territory until midway of the third period when it moved to the 31 before Tech's line hurled back the threat and forced a punt. A fourth quarter rally carried to the Tech 16 but Joe Delany intercepted a Bob Brodhead pass and killed the drive.

Georgia Tech Pulls 13-0 Upset On Duke

ATLANTA, Ga., Nov. 2 —(AP)— Striking by land and air, Georgia Tech slammed Duke from the unbeaten ranks today with a 13-0 upset victory over the nation's seventh ranked football power.

The Engineers pounded out one touchdown on the ground against the Blue Devils' vaunted defense, and took to the air for the other. Sub fullback Jim Benson dived over from the one for the first score, ending a 59-yard march helped along by a 15-yard personal foul called against Duke.

The clincher came in the third period, when fullback Lester Simerville took a screen pass from quarterback Fred Braselton and scurried 15 yards to score.

But the touchdowns were almost anticlimactic. What had the 40,000 spectators amazed was the way Tech rammed the ball down Duke's throat. Duke's defense against rushing was third best in the nation until Simerville, Benson, Stan Flowers, Floyd Faucette and other Techsters cut loose for 232 yards rushing.

And almost as surprising was the determined manner in which Tech's defense, led by All-America center candidate Don Stephenson, stopped the dreaded Duke attack. The Engineers, old hands at upending unbeaten teams from Duke, held Wray Carlton, George Dutrow and Phil Dupler to 19 yards and one first down in the first half. And the visi-

Frosh Lose In 3 Team C-C Meet

Myers Park of Charlotte, one of the top schoolboy cross country units in North Carolina, handed Carolina's freshman runners their second straight setback as they edged the UNC and Duke yearlings in a triangular meet held yesterday. The final team scores were 38-40-42, with the UNC group trailing the winners.

Norse of Duke produced the day's best individual effort with a 10:15 mark. Close behind were Myers Park's Gilmore and Powell, with times of 10:15.5 and 10:38, respectively. Carolina's top performer was Harry Miller, whose 10:39 effort was good for fourth place. Neal Chappell turned in a 10:52 mark to take the fifth slot.

Summary:

1. Norse, Duke, 10:15; 2. Gilmore, MP, 10:15.5; 3. Powell, MP, 10:38; 4. Miller, UNC, 10:39; 5. Chappell, UNC, 10:52; 6. Lund, Duke; 7. Merriman, Duke; 8. Stockon, MP; 9. Foxworth, UNC; 10. Sweet, UNC; 11. Johnson, MP; 12. Bowles, UNC; 13. Jones, Duke; 14. Huntington, MP; 15. Taylor, Duke.

LOVE IN THE LAUNDRY

Last month we got the following letter:

Dear Van Heusen, you rats:

Thanks mucho for breaking up the hottest romance since Scarlet and Rhett. Me and Laundry Mark x428Fy might be honeymooning in Palm Beach today if it wasn't for your so-called smart ideas. Go shoot yourselves in your ulcers. Respectfully yours, Dorothea Jomes.

We tracked down the story behind it and found that Miss Jomes worked a steam-iron at the Acme Laundry in Eastpox, N. J. Last year, while ironing a shirt belonging to Laundry Mark x428Fy, she had noticed a small piece of paper protruding from the slot on the collar. Curious, she pulled it out and read: "Whoever you are, I love the way you press my shirts. I think I may love you too. Interested?" She blushed, but daringly wrote her answer — "Interested, sorta," and slipped it in the collar-slot. Ten days later came another shirt from x428Fy and, sure enough, another note: "If you can cook like you can write I may be smitten beyond recall. Fascinated?" This time she almost swooned, and wrote back, "Wow, am I!" Anyhow, note followed hot note and Miss Jomes began thinking of turning in her steam iron for a marriage manual. Until one day tragedy struck. x428Fy's shirts arrived as usual, but when Miss Jomes turned to the slot she found it sewn-up. Frantic, she tried to rip it open. No luck. She could feel something thin inside, but she couldn't get to it. And that's how it's been ever since!

You see, x428Fy had switched to slotless Van Heusen Collarite shirts—with sewn-in stays! You should, too! These micro-thin stays can't get lost, keep your collar flat, and launder with your shirt! Specify Collarite next time.

And don't feel bad about Miss Jomes. She took her unhappiness out in hard work and was promoted to assistant manager. We expect a thank-you note from her any day.

THE PARTY WEEK END: ITS CAUSE AND CURE

With the season of party weekends almost upon us, my mail of late has been flooded with queries from young inmates of women's colleges wishing to know how one conducts one's self when one has invited a young gentleman for a weekend. This morning, for example, there were more than 30,000 letters, each containing a lock of hair. I gave the hair to a bombsight maker and the lanolin to a dry sheep of my acquaintance, and I turned instantly to the question: How should a young lady deport herself when she has asked a young gentleman to be her guest at a party weekend?

Well, my dear girls, the first thing to remember is that your young gentleman is far from home and frightened. Put him at his ease. You might, for instance, surprise him by having his mother sitting in a rocker on the station platform when he gets off the train.

Next, what kind of corsage should you send your young gentleman? Well, my beloved maidens, orchids are always acceptable.

If you find, my esteemed fillies, that your local florist has run out of stock, do not be dismayed. Make a corsage out of paper. But pick good, stiff, durable paper—twenty dollar bills, for example.

Remember at all times, my fond wenches, to show your young gentleman courtesy and consideration. Open doors for him, walk on the traffic side of the path, assist him to the punch bowl, zip his parka, light his Marlboros. (What, you ask, if he doesn't smoke Marlboros? Ridiculous, my precious nymphs! Of course, he smokes Marlboros! Don't you? Don't I? Doesn't everybody who knows a hawk from a handsaw?? What other cigarette gives you such a lot to like? Such filter? Such flavor? Such flip-top box? No other, my sweet minxes, no other. Marlboro stands alone, and any man worthy of you, my estimable damsels, is bound to be a Marlboro man.)

If you will follow the simple instructions stated above, my good lasses, you will find that you have turned your young gentleman into a fast and fervent admirer. There is nothing quite like a party weekend to promote romance.

Serafina sat anxiously by the mailbox...

I am in mind of a party weekend some years ago at Miss Pomfritt's Seminary for Genteel Chicks in West Linotype, Ohio. Serafina Sigafoos, a sophomore at this institution, majoring in napkin folding, sent an invitation to a young man named Fafnir Valve, a junior at the Joyce Kilmer School of Forestry, majoring in sap and boles.

Anyhow, Serafina sent an invitation to Fafnir, and he came, and she showered him with kindness and cuff links, and then he went away, and Serafina sat anxiously by the mailbox, wondering whether she would ever hear from him again. Sure enough, two weeks later she got a letter: "Dear Serafina, Can you let me have fifty bucks? Yours, Fafnir."

Whimpering with ecstacy, she ran to the bank and withdrew the money and mailed it to him. From then on, she got the same request every week, and as a result, she became very well acquainted with Ralph T. Involute, teller of the West Linotype Bank and Trust Co., and their friendship ripened into love, and today they are happily married and live in Stamen, Oregon, where Ralph is in the extruded molasses game and Serafina is a hydrant.

Presence Of Asian Flu Confirmed

Luxon Says Removal Lies In Recall Vote

By STAN FISHER

Journalism School Dean Norval Neil Luxon said yesterday he could not see how a student-elected editor can "attack recall as an infringement of freedom of the press."

In the 1956 Yoder-Kraar dispute over a recall vote, however, Luxon declared:

"It is an extremely dangerous and bad precedent that 10 per cent of the student body can bring about an election to recall an editor of a student paper."

It was a sharp turnabout for Luxon, who defined the present issue as one of whether election of an editor is an intelligent method of filling the editor's post.

"If the power of election resides in the student body, surely the power of removal lies there, too," he said.

Luxon said that recall of an editor because he espouses an unpopular movement could "easily result in changing editors monthly, if not weekly."

"Such a course would be somewhat disturbing to efficient operation of any newspaper, campus or otherwise."

Luxon said the two years ago, in the Kraar-Yoder dispute, he "hoped that the student body would reject recall."

"Today, the student body might well take a long, hard look at the selection of the editor," he asserted.

In the 1956 recall row, Dean Luxon vehemently declared that "any campus editor who is chosen has to be guided by this conscience."

"I do not think he has the responsibility to represent the majority of student opinion," he added.

500 Names Now On Petitions

Some 500 signatures have been secured on petitions demanding a re-vote for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, it was announced last night by Wally Kuralt, who is spearheading the move to oust the present editor, Neil Bass.

Kuralt estimated that some 300 additional names have been secured but said they have not been returned to him yet. He added that only ten petitions out of some 100 or 110 circulated have been returned.

Commenting on a story in Saturday's Daily Tar Heel which reported him as claiming some 800 names on Friday, Kuralt said his remarks at that time had been misinterpreted. "I said we beleived we had perhaps some 800 names," he said.

Meanwhile, confirmed reports indicated that some signers were removing their names from the petitions. The extent of these practices was not determined, however.

Kuralt refused to predict who is being considered as a possible candidate to oppose Editor Bass in the event of a recall election. "I will say, though," he added, "that there will not be more than one candidate opposing Bass."

Asked about rumors to the effect that Barry Winston, former Daily Tar Heel columnist, would run, Kuralt said, "I cannot comment on Winston.

Earlier, Winston denied that he was considering such a move. Asked about his possible candidacy, Winston replied, "You must have me confused with someone else."

Kuralt initiated the recall movement Thursday with distribution of petitions across the campus. The petitions charge that Neil Bass, the present Editor, is "incompetent."

PHYSICS COLLOQUIUM

A joint physics colloquium sponsored by UNC and Duke University physics departments will be held Wednesday in Phillips Hall on the UNC campus at 8 p. m. Featured speaker will be Dr. George E. Pake of Standford University; his topic will be "Multi-level Spin Systems."

More Shots To Be Given In Gerrard

UNC medical authorities announced a step-up in the Asian flu innoculation program today after laboratory reports confirmed the presence of Asian type influenza on campus.

University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth said laboratory tests showed that "some of the illnesses recently experienced on our campus were due to the Asian strain of influenza virus."

Plans were immediately disclosed to conduct further on-campus vaccine distribution clinics at Gerrard Hall as officials sought to side-step any major outbreak here.

The clinics will be held Thursday and Friday of this week between 11 a. m. and 1 p. m. Vaccine will be available at no cost to all students who request it.

Officials formerly had planned to conduct only two clinics, both held last week, but disclosed plans for those Thursday and Friday of this week after confirmation of Asian flu here.

They said some 4,500 doses of Asian flu vaccine will be available in the forthcoming clinics, and urged all students here "to avail themselves of this opportunity."

Dr. Hedgpeth said that if UNC students refused to take advantage of the vaccine on hand, it would "be disposed of." He could not elaborate on where it would be used.

Some 1,300 students have thus far received Asian flu shots through the infirmary here, but the number still was far below expectations of medical officials.

They feared that if students refused to take the shots in the coming clinics, threat of a major outbreak would continue to loom over the campus.

THE VOLS

Upholds Tatum's Right In Reed, Donnatelli, Russavage Suspension

University football players Leo Russavage, Dave Reed and Bernie Donnatelli have been cleared of any supposed violation of the Campas Code by unanimous decree of the Student Council.

The Campus Code puts students on their honor to behave as gentlemen at all times.

In unprecedented action, Student Council Chairman Mas Patton of Durham released the results of the council trial of the three athletes. All judicial actions involving students usually remain in the council's confidence, as far as names of defendants are concerned.

Chairman Patton had this to say concerning his release of the detendent's names:

"We would like to emphasize the fact that this statement is being made with the consent and by the desire of the individuals involved, and that by no means does the council intend to set a precedent of connecting names with council reports."

Council Chairman Patton listed the intent of his unprectdented report as three-fold:

(1) To clarify the questioned action of the three athletes.

(2) To clarify Coach Jim Tatum's position as to possible interference with student government or student courts.

(3) To establish the council's pertinence to the situation.

CLARIFIED ACTION

Concerning the athlete's questioned viotation of the Campus Code, Chairman Patton reported that there was difinitely no violation, and that the athletes had violated purely team disciplinary regulations.

TATUM'S POSITION

Concerning Coach Jim Tatum's position in suspending the three athletes from the football team for the remainder of the year, Patton reported:

"The council is of the opinion that the discipline of any of the members of any University athletic team as to the adherence of training rules must, of necessity, be left entirely in the hands of that activity's director."

COUNCIL 'S POSITION

Concerning the Student Council's position in the suspennsion case, Chairman Patton said that Coach Tatum, "realizing that a good many alumni and other people throughout the state. . . . probably would be calling and inquiring concerning the matter of suspension. . .felt that it would be in bad taste to leave the campus for the Wake forest game without reporting his actions to the chancellor in order that the latter might be properly informed."

Patton reported that the question as to whether the three had violated the Campus Code arose in a discussion between Chancellor William Aycock and Dean of Student Affairs Fred Weaver. It was decided here, according to Patton, that the case should be referrred to the Student Council. Coach Tatum concurred with this decision, Patton said, and the case was officially referred to the council by Sam Magill, director of student activities on Saturday, Oct. 26.

This was one day before The Daily Tar Heel advocated editorially that the case be referred to judicial authorities in order that the athletes have opportunity to "clear" their names and dispell "ugly rumors concerning the disgraceful behavior of three University athletes,," among them the football team's Co-Captain Reed.

DAILY TAR HEEL

Concerning two editorial ideas proposed by The Tar Heel, "If Tatum acted unfairly and arbitrarily, then the Student Council should recommend that the athletes be reinstated on the football squad," and, "If the council's investigation reveals that Tatum's suspension was justified, then suspension from school may also be justified." Patton's report had this to say:

(1) "The Student Council merits no word whatsoever nor does it desire a word, particularly a last word, as to the suspension of

Pianist Will Play At Series

Dr. William S. Newman of the UNC Dept. of Music will appear as pianist in tonight's Tuesday Evening Series presentation. The hour program will feature music by Bach, Beethoven and Brahms.

The concert will begin at 8 p.m. in Hill Music Hall. Admission is free.

Dr. Newman, especially interested in Bach, has just completed the first American-written edition of the "Fifteen Two-Part Inventions" by Bach. His arrangement wil be included in the program tonight.

Boethoven's "Sonata in E-flat Major," the second selection on the program, has been described by Dr. Newman as "one of Beethoven's most delightful sonatas." The Brahms pieces, "Seven Fantasias," have seldom been played as a complete set, in the manner intended by the composer.

Both the Beethoven and Brahms selections are among Dr. Newman's favorite works. Neither hes been heard here in recent years.

Dr. Newman has just returned from a concert tour of the midwest and has also performed recently in a number of southern cities. He has been on the Dept. of Music staff since 1945.

Dr. Newman has written several books on music, including two widely used texts: THE PIANIST'S PROBLEMS and UNDERSTANDING MUSIC. A third book, THE SONATA IN THE BAROQUE ERA Has just been completed after some twenty years of research and writing.

Candidates Hear Laws

Around 120 candidates for the fall elections meet last night in Gerrard Hall to listen to Arthur Sobel, Chairman of the Elections Board, speak on the election laws.

After the meeting the Student Party held a short meeting of candidates. The University Party candidates will meet today.

Chairman Sobel told the group that the Buildings and Grounds Department did not want candidates attaching posters to trees or anywhere else except on bulletin boards.

The candidates who mised the meeting must contact the chairman of the Elections Board. If a candidate's excuse is not judged valid by the chairman, the candidate will have to pay a fine of $1.00.

This year the polls will be opened from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. Candidates will be responsible for seeing that none of their literature is within 50 of the polls when the polls open.

Candidates must turn in an expense account to the student goverment office in Graham Memorial before 6 p.m. Monday, Nov. 11.

A failure to submit an expense account will cause a fine of $1 to be leived against the candidate. If the fine is not paid within 24 hours or the expense account is not submitted, the candidate will be disquailfied.

Erwin Fuller spoke to the SP and outlined the contributions which the party had made during the past year.

He said the SP had worked in a junior partnership with the executive branch of the University, made progress toward a parking solution, and had gotten reduced date tickets for certain games.

These candidates who were absent have been asked to contact Arthur Sobel at the TEP House.

They are Catherine Carden, Gerald Freedman, Howard Holderness, Jim Long, W. H. Luesing, G. C. Pridgen, Dick Robinson, Bill Stem, Tim Stevens, Gordon Street, and John Whitty.

Career Guides Are Available

Two career guide books are being distributed to senior men and women by the Placement Service, 206 Gardner, at no charge.

The books are "Career: For The College Man" and "College Placement Annual." They contain employment trends and thousands of company listings to aid the graduate in selecting his job.

According to "Career," more "technical companies" such as Curtiss-Wright and Allied Chemical find their 1958 requirements for liberal arts majors increasing.

The Placement Service urges seniors to pick up these books as early as possible.

Only senior men may receive copies of "Career: For The College Man," the Placement Service announced.

UP To Discuss Fall Campaign

The University Party will meet tonight at 7 o'clock in Roland Parker Lounges in Graham Memorial.

The main discusion of the evening will center around the campaign for the fall election, UP Chairman Harry Braxton said yesterday.

Jerry Jones, UP vice-chairman and this fall's campaign cor-ordinator, and John Minter, UP publicity chairman, will speak at the meeting.

Yesterday it was annuonced that Linda Chappell will replace Dannie Miller as a UP candidate for the Student Legisuature seat for one year from Town Women's district.

In Town Men's III Jerry Appenheimer, Neal Boden and Ed Levy will be UP candidates for one year seats in the Student Legislature.

Running on the UP ticket for six months seats from the same district are Leo Walters, Jerry Blumenthal and Ben Levy.

At the last meeting of the UP the slate for this district was not complete.

World In Brief

Election Day

WASHINGTON, Nov. 4 (AP)—Voters in six states will turn out tomorrow to elect two governors, three legislators and mayors in more than 75 cities.

The off-year balloting may give party chiefs some idea of how the wind is blowing for the congressional election in 1958.

Gubernational contests feature the elections in New Jersey and Virginia, with Democrats given the edge over Republican opponents carrying President Eisenhower's endorsement. These two states, with Kentucky, will also elect their legislatures.

New Fuel

WARSAW, Nov. 4—A Polish Sapce scientist said today he believes the Russians used a new type of rocket fuel to power their new Sputnik.

Olgierd Wolczko, secretary of the Polish Astronautic Society, said it seemed likely Sputnik II was powered by fusion of borax and hydrogen. He said this previously had been achieved only on a laboratory scale. He estimate it would produce twice the power of other known rocket fuels.

By fusion he meant chemical "burning," not fusion in the nuclear sense, he said.

Moon Rocket

MONTREAL, Que. Nov. 4 (AP) —A Radio Moscow news director said today Russia plans to launch a moon rocket soon.

Richard Johnson of the news department of Montreal radio station CFCF picked up a telephone and called Moscow to find out more about Russia's new satellite. He spoke to Ivan Alexanderson, director of Radio Moscow's English-language news division.

Asked by Johnson about Soviet plans to launch a rocket to the moon, Alexanderson said it would be soon. Its chief purpose would be to prove beyond doubt man's ability to navigate outer space and live, he said.

The information would be invaluable to world scienctists, the Moscow radio official said. He added that rocket flgihts by men would be preceded by space journeys with apes for passengers and that this was the next Soviet step.

Could the second satellite, launched Saturday and now circling the globe, with a dog as a passenger,

Forum Discusses Russian Satellite

Russia must have some secret formula for a fuel propelling Sputnik 11 into space, Dr. Everett D. Palmatier, chairman of the physics department, told the Student-Faculty Forum here last night.

"With the fuels we have, it would take 500 tons to get our satellite into space," he said. "The claim that Russia has a new propulsion unknown to us is valid."

Anthony Jenzano, manager of the Morehead Planetarium, said that "it takes 1,000 pounds of vehicle (fuel) to send up one pound of payload. This means that to send up a satellite as heavy as Sputnik II, we would need one million pounds of fuel. This was the first of the Student-Faculty forums, Bill Jones was moderator. The speakers were Dr. S. Shepard Jones, political science Professor; Dr. Palmatier and Jenzano.

Dr. Palmatier explained how the satellites stay up. He said they were shot a certain speed in order that they would fall in relation to the curvature of the earth, keeping an equal distance between the earth and the satellites. If you shoot with a greater velocity, the satellite will tend to follow a straight path away from the earth.

Why send up the satellites? Dr. Palmateier said, "It is a great interest to science to know the atmosphere, temperature — for space travel. We have to know the conditions in which to live there.

Jenzano added that the satellites also permit more direct measurement of space.

Jenzano reported on the recent meeting of an IGY (International Geophysical Year) committee he attended.

American progress has been 13 firings of missile as of September 12, without satellites. There will be six attempts with satellites.

The U. S. satellites will carry proton and geiger counters and other intruments to measure atmospheric pressure, and density.

"Because the earth is not round, the satellite will recess. That error will aid in determining the exact shape of the earth."

Dr. Jones said that he felt that we shouldn't be spending time on placing the blame on anyone for the United States being behind in the satellite race.

He said that the Administration and both parties are involved and should work together for a new policy.

He added that studies were being made of U. S. agencies for most efficient methods in launching a satellite.

"I hope we adopt a policy of restraint," he said, referring to the self-destrucitive weapons in the making.

Muttnik Said 'Significant'

WTSHINGTON, Nov. 4 (TP)—Russia's satellite dog may help scientists decide whether human servival is possible in space, a Navy aviation medicine specialist said today.

"A significant physiological experiment," is the way Dr. Norman Lee Barr sees it. "It certainly could be one of the steps" toward space travel, he said.

Barr, 50, a Navy captain, is head of the aviation medicine section of the research division of the Navy Bureau of Medicine and Surgery. He has been working in aviation medicine research for the past 11 years.

Dr. Barr, asked for his opinion, said he didn't think the Russians were far ahead of the United States in Physiological research looking toward space travel.

Present, Future University Problems Aired

By ANN FRYE

Five Student Government representatives gave an over-all picture of present and foreseen University problems in a meeting with the Visiting Committee of the University Board of Trustees yesterday.

Because of a limited half-hour meeting, only a brief report of what Student Government expects to discuss this year was presented to the committee.

In discussing problems of the present, student representatives talked briefly about athletics, "second class student citizens" and required national discriminatory clauses in sorority and fraternity charters.

The student group emphasized to importance of student representatives on all committees of the athletic council so that they might participate in decision making.

Also in connection with athletics, the student representatives charged a denial of student rights in freedom of choice in the selection of dorms.

The "second class student citizens" was referred to in connection with the "segregated integration" whereby all Negro students here live on third floor Steele dormitory.

Student Body President Sonny Evans told the commitee, "No one challenges the right of fraternities and sororities to choose members, but the question here is whether or not a chapter who wants to take in a member of a minority group should be allowed to do so."

Concerning the growing University, Student Government representatives discussed briefly: more encompassing judicial and honor branches of the government, improved physical plants in dormitories and increased recreational facilities, including an expresed need for a new student union building.

The group told the Visiting Committee that more encompassing judicial and honor branches are needed to make sure that graduate student and students living in outlying areas are represented on these councils.

On improved physical plant in dormitories, the students representatives said that the plants are necessary in providing better living conditions and better counseling facilities.

The incerased need for more recreational facilities on campus was stressed to the committee because students are kept on campus weekends by the semester system and because freshmen aren't allowed to have cars.

The group said there's a "crucial" need for a new student union to bring UNC into focus with WC and State College as far as student unions are concerned. It was pointed out that Graham Memorial is only one wing of a proposed three-wing building.

Evans said yesterday that specific programs for problems discussed with the Visiting Committee are being developed.

Students meeting with the committee yesterday included: Evans, Sonny Hallford, Don Furtado, Bob Carter and Dot Pressly.

Council's Decision Wise, Athletes' Names Cleared

The decision rendered by the Student Council clearing Footballers Dave Reed, Leo Russavage and Bernie Donnatelli of supporsed Campus Code violations is most gratifying and admirable.

We feel that the Student Council, in reviewing the athlete's suspension case, has acted wisely and expeditiously.

After the announcement was made official that football Coach Jim Tatum had suspended the three athletes, an ugly rumor began circulating that the three were involved in a "drunken brawl." One New York newspaper contacted, by phone, one suspended player to inquire about details of the "the supposed brawl."

There was, obviously, no evidence to support such a blatant and defamatory accusation. Thus it was at this point, our feeling that the athletes should have an opportunity to clear their names through an official trial by a non-partisan judicial authority—the Student Council.

The Student Council, under the leadership of capable Mac Patton, immediately and conscientiously began delving into the case. And the athletes were tried Thursday night.

Chairman Patton, at this point, reported to us that the athletes were happy that an opportunity had arisen for personal exoneration, and that he would make public the final edict rendered by the Student Council.

We are most happy that the athlete's have had their names and reputations cleared, and that erroneous smudges on their character have been removed. We feel also, that the Student Council has established a valuable precedent:

That students suspended from positions of prominence on the University campus — whether they're on athletic teams or officials in student government or any other prominent position—are entitled to just and fair trial to dispell ugly rumors which invariably result, and that such just and fair trial shoud be conducted by a non-partisan authority—the Student Council.

As Chairman Patton said in his report:

"When a student's name is so involved that questions might be raised causing unfounded adverse opinion, then the council is bound by its duty to the student body to clarify all aspects of the case."

Patton's report was unflinching and comprehensive. Perhaps, at places, it was even a bit extra-curricular in its parenthetical remarks.

The Daily Tar Heel and its editorial assertions that there was the possibility—the mere possibility—that Coach Jim Tatum may have acted unfairly and arbitrarily, and if he did take such action, players were entitled to trial by a non-partisan authority to clear their names, was hashed out in the report.

Actually, The Daily Tar Heel was not on trial. And The Daily Tar Heel's right to conjecture editorial opinions was not on trial. Chairman Patton was a bit extra-curricular in asserting that any accusation concerning Tatum's overriding of honor was completely "unfounded."

Neither Chairman Patton nor The Daily Tar Heel editor definitely know that Coach Jim Tatum is completely honorable, nor can either of the two parties say definitely and concretely that Coach Tatum is dishonorable.

We can both merely conjecture our opinions on the subject. Chairman Patton should have refrained rom attempting to completely vindicate Coach Tatum. And he should have refrained from any attempt to villify The Daily Tar Heel, through parenethtical remarks.

The Student Council's function in the entire situation was to ascertain whether or not the three athletes has violated the Campus Code, and if such action had occurred, the council was bound to prosecute the three violators—which it no doubt would have done.

Conversely, the council ascertained that the athletes had not violated the Campus Code. Thus their names have cleared, and we feel very gratified and glad that such exoneration has occurred.

In short, the athletes have been given a fair trial by a rapidly working and efficient Student Council; and their names hve been cleared of any rumored violations of the Campus Code.

For such action, we are gratified and delighted.

We heartily congratulate the Student Council, and the athletes, for allowing public clarification of the suspension case.

The action was wise—and making public the judicial proceedings, which we would never have printed without the consent of Reed, Russavage and Donnatelli, was also wise.

Russian Bellyache

The Soviet Union—both internally and extremely externally—has been considerably in the limelight recently, to say the least.

The Soviet internal bellyache has resulted in a de-Zhukovization, and may also result in considerable regurgitations of violence and antipathy to Communist party Chief Nikita Khruschev's obvious attempt to establish himself as the all-omnipotent one.

The extremely external—propaganda—outbursts have come as a result of Russian technological advancement, particularly the launching of Sputnik I, and now Sputnik II full of shaggy muttniks, as they heve been christened.

The Soviet bellyache may eradicate a part of the moment which has resulted from the external machinations.

Inside or out, Godless Communism should look palatable only to those who are making palatable Russian food, as in Chiana, and Russian armaments, as in the Middle East.

But then, Russia's got guts.

The large internal de-Zhugovization bellyache proves this.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Segregation I: Miscegenation And Equality

Segregation:

In the Declaration of Independence Thomas Jefferson wrote, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights . . ."

This is not an empirical statement about mankind disregarding physical differences, and physical and intellectual capabilities. It is not even a purely philosophical statement about the nature of man.

It is a legalistic statement about all men in a democracy. It says in neon letters that in any democracy all citizens are equal under the law. Any other viewpoint of citizenship would lead to an aristocracy of one sort or another, and would make for a type of second class citizenship.

America purports to be a democracy. If it is such, then the law is forced to view all men as being equal before its eyes, and the government is forced to protect the rights of each and every individual under its jurisdiction.

The most flagrant violation of these fundamental principles in America is segregation.

Until July 28, 1868, there was no cause to view the colored people as citizens, and indeed in the Constitution there was some reason for considering these people chattel, however undemocratic this idea seems in a democracy.

But in 1868, the people of the United States passed the Fourteenth Amendment, which, coupled with the Thirteenth gives the basis for the citizenship of the colored people in this democracy. It gives them the right to share in all the rights of the first ten amendments to the Constitution, and makes them sharers in all the processes of the Constitution and its amendments.

Until the colored person is proved to be innately biologically and intellectually inferior to the white person, this view should stand. Now, however, the great mass of evidence, although surely not all, points to the equality of the colored person with the white, and only when true laboratory conditions are set up, will the people of the world know the truth. Until then the democratic ideal of innocent until proved guilty should hold.

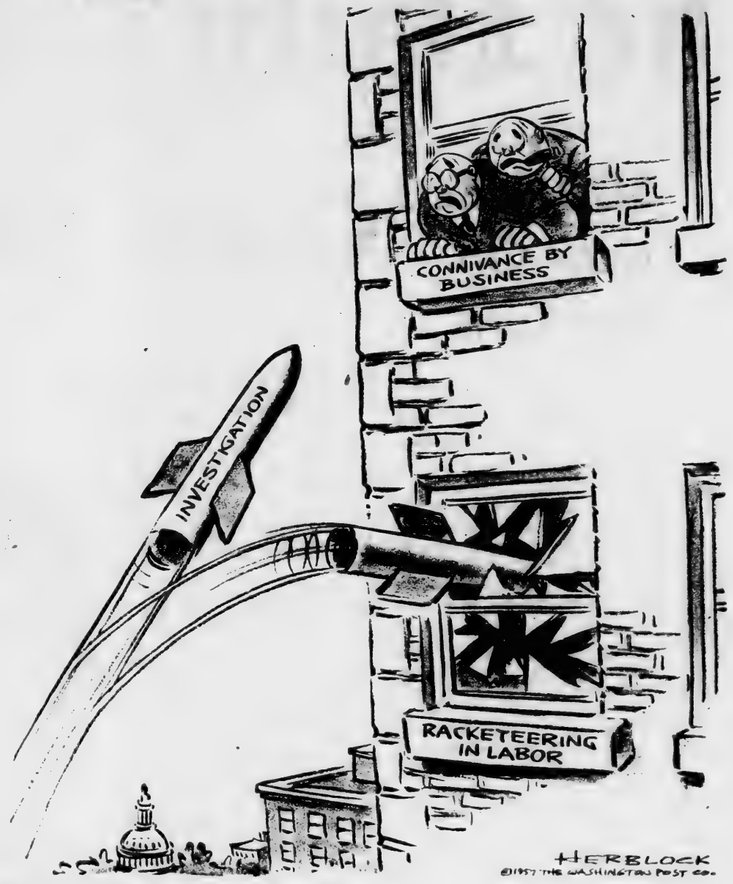
It is sometimes maintained that evidence for the innate inequality of the colored people is that they had not a highly developed culture of their own in the same period that the white's had built up an intricate culture system.

In this there lies two fallacies. First, the Negroid race has had a certain culture of their own which has been in part assimilated into western culture.

Secondly, whatever culture the colored peoples did develop was done in adverse circumstances geographically. At the same time that "white" civilization was developing somewhat rapidly in an area of temperate climate and easy communication, the colored peoples had to fight through the maze of the jungles in a tropic zone, in which land was impossible to cultivate, and communication was a vast improbability.

To have gotten the degree of sophistication that enabled them to more or less assimilate western culture in a little over three hundred years is indeed an accomplishment that the western culture must take notice. To add to this culture is even a greater achievement.

It has been maintained as a basis for the separation of races by many devout Christians and many ministers who teach this gospel, that the Bible gives grounds for the separation of races. Yet, as Norman Thomas said a week ago, it was the white, not the colored, people that brought the groups together. It was done by the same group of people who now profess that the races must be kept separate in the society that they integrated the colored peoples into.



It was also noted by Mr. Thomas that the same people that are entrusted with the raising of white children are denied the rights and responsibilities of citizens.

Mr. Thomas also saw the fear of miscegenation, intermarriage, so prevalent in the south. But he also saw that 70 per cent of the colored population claims at least one white ancestor. Hence, it seems that miscegenation has been going on without sanction of law, and it gives rise to an old saw in the south about attaining manhood—"You aren't a man until you've had a colored woman." People who claim this ethical view cannot hold to the view opposed to miscegenation without being complete hypocrites.

It seems then that all the opposition to integration based on the innate inequalities of different humans, are against the current evidence, readings into the Bible, or hypocrisy. It should be clear from this that the denial of equal rights has almost no basis in fact.

If America is to claim democracy, if America holds its Constitution as law, and if America wants to present itself in an unequivocal light, it must recognize the colored person's right to

THE HILLTOP:

Symposium Progress & Intellectual Leaders

Nancy Hill

The Carolina Symposium, since the election of Sonny Hallford as chairman, has made rapid progress in formulating plans for the 1958 Symposium. Hallford was this fall elected head of the group upon the resignation of Frank Crowther, who was chosen as chairman last spring.

Hallford stated the latter part of this week that an announcement will be made the first of the week of the overall topic and subtopics for the 1958 lectures and discussions.

Dates of the 1958 Symposium are tentatively set for the week of March 15-22, which will coincide with the annual faculty-sponsored Weil Lecturer, according to committee chairman Dean James Godfrey, will be W. D. Brogran. His topic, "Concepts of Citizenship in Britain, France and the United States," will be significant to the Symposium's discussion topics.

The 1958 Symposium will be the tenth such event held on the Carolina campus. Six Institutes of Human Affairs were held here prior to World War II, under the sponsorship of students and faculty. The Carolina Symposium on Public Affairs, which grew out of the pre-war Institute, will be held for the fourth time this spring.

A brochure on the symposium states that "through these discussions the University in part will be fulfilling its role of intellectual leadership in our times by directing the critical attention of students and citizens of the state to the important problems of the day."

This spring's program "will be designed to bring together . . . for the tenth time in the history of the University outstanding minds speaking in open forum on critical problems of our times."

On the financial side of Symposium business, treasurer Al Goldsmith states that the organization now has assets of $2403.33, including funds left over from the 1956 symposium, and a $2,000 grant from the Student Legislature.

Funds amassed so far will amount to less than half of the prospective Symposium budget. Goldsmith estimates the final budget will be based on $5,500 to $6,000. Donations from fraternity and sorority houses, dorms and organizations, solicited in a forthcoming financial drive, will make up the present deficiency.

This is a picture of symposium committee accomplishments thus far.

Sonny Hallford, commenting on the fact that the symposium had published little so far in the way of progress reports, stated Friday, "Due to our scope of work, a great deal of our work must be done on the individual committee level."

Hallford feels that the symposium is, and will probably remain, understaffed, and called for interested faculty and students to volunteer their help at any time and for any phase at organization or planning.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

West Is West & Taxes Are Taxes

Whit Whitfield

We hesitated to mention Melvin West last week, out of respect for the obviously dead.

He finally made his destination, but not under his own power. He was picked up by the U.S. Coast Guard 160 miles off the coast of Bermuda, after an 11 day fiasco that cost the government at least $300,000. This is what is called an abbreviated two-week vacation with pay, at the expense of a wealthy uncle.

What were his reasons? Being a family man, did he want to get away from his wife and kids? Taxes? Car payments? Maybe he is just a frustrated exhibitionist.

After his arrival in Hamilton, Bermuda, West had this to say "I could sail around the world in a washtub. . .by the grace of God and common sense." And he probably could. As a matter of fact one is leaving on the 4th of November. We only wish him Godspeed. Of the rest of the nations of the world will help him finance the trip, then Uncle Sam may get out cheaper this time.

Never let it be said that the Administration does not play a fair game.

Only last week the assassins in the trees were rolling up points for the administration. Being good sports, and getting tired of winning constantly, they have worked out a new system whereby the student may score. It works something like this:

The administration has arranged to have placed in the walks near the trees which are being cut, signs reading, "MEN WORKING IN TREES." If a student sees a sign and circumvents the danger, he gets 10 points. If he should see a sign and still get hit, the administration gets 10 points. If he should not see the sign and get hit the student loses five points and gets booted from the team. If he should throw back at the tree, he is penalized for unsportsmanlike conduct. In the event that a sign is not present, and a student gets hit, the adminstration is declared the loser by forfeit, and is further forbidden to participate in postseason contests.

Partisanship & Trash Cans

EDITOR:

Thursday night a bill was presented to the Student Legislature to place adequate trash receptacles, necessary for a clean campus, in each of the quadrangles. After the bill was introduced various University Party "representatives" tried to make the bill look ridulous by trite speeches consisting of silly cliches rather than valid criticisms.

Just before the vote on the bill was taken, Ed Levy (UP), seated at the front of the legislature sarcastically opened an ivy-league lapel to reveal a fraternity pin, and the prejudiced UP and its mouth pieces stood unanimously against a definite measure toward the improvement of the appearance of a part of the front yard of the University.

Why? Because of childish bias and partisanship by ivy-league conformists from fraternity row who are not interested in the campus or University as a whole but only their own little cloudy-interests. I say that this ridiculous display of partisanship on this and other bills concerning the welfare of the students and campus as a whole is for children.

Is this the way you would have yourself represented in the Legislature?

BOB BROWNING

On Liberalism

EDITOR:

I have sat back and read your attempts to put forth your great liberal views in a typical leftward swing that is a trademark of immaturity, but I can take no mare of it.

Do you realize that a good 99% of the people of Georgia back their governor in his stand against the edict of the sociological society sitting in the Supreme Court Chamber in Washington. Also did you know that there are still people around who believe that a state official should look out for and stand for his patrons beliefs.

I am also one of those terrible, immoral, ignorant, Un-Christian people who believes in the doctrine of equal but separate facilities for the Negro people. And you know something, I am not at all ashamed of it. Evidently you don't understand the feelings of the people of the Deep South, and furthermore you don't even care to try to. Your editorials read like the official voice of the NAACP or maybe Uncle Tom's Cabin, with a definite anti-Southern slant.

Going back to Georgia again, did you ever try to understand why those poor backward segregationists, as you would say, feel the way they do. Just ninety some years ago one ruthless and inconsiderate yankee general by the name of Sherman, fighting in the name of keeping our union together, burned, plundered, raped, and pillagned the state of Georgia.

It paralleled Hitler's invasion of Poland with absolutely no regard for the civilian population. No sooner than Sherman's troops left, the carpetbaggers moved in and plundered a bit more. All ex-Confederate soldiers are denied their rights as citizens, and an illiterate Negro is made governor of the once proud state, dictated to by the Northern scalawags.

This crippling period of Reconstruction was dragged out for many needless years. There are many old people in the state of Georgia who still remember it, and those people and their sons and daughters are not going to be coerced by the legislating 9 old men on their throne in D.C., into surrendering their way of life again.

At least think about these things when you go into a diatribe against the people of the South, who to me are the greatest anywhere.

Talent Show Tryouts Set

So, you've got talent, hidden or otherwise. Did you know that every year GMAB and the Y co-sponsor a tremendous campus-wide talent show called the "Carolina Calvacade of Talent"?

This year the "Carolina Calvacade of Talent" will be on Tuesday night, Nov. 26, in Memorial Hall.

The committee in charge of the tadlent show wich is headed by Daryl Farrington, Graham Claytor and G. C. Pridgen, is looking for interesting individual and group talent such as solo and group singing, dancing, song and dance acts, comedy, instrumental playing and other talent.

The tryouts for the people who were in the show last year and into would like to go to be again will be in the Rendevouz Room Tuesday night, Nov. 12. So far two members of last year's show have signed up: Pee Wee Batten, who will sing, and Oliver Bloomer, a student ventriloquist. A students who have been in the show before have been asked to sign up in Eleanor Brawley's office in Graham Memorial.

Tryouts for all talent new to the show are to be on Nov. 18 in Memorial Hall from 4-6 p. m. and from 7-10 p. m., contrary to earlier reports which had another time listed.

New talent has been asked to sign up in the main office of the Y building and to put what time they want tryout by their names.

English Tests Being Given

English proficiency tests are now being given sophomores, according to an announcement by Cecil Johnson, dean of the General College.

All sophomores are required to take this test unless they made 65 or above the English placement tests given to freshmen when they first entered the University.

The tests started yesterday and will be given Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week and Monday and Tuesday next week. The tests are held at 7 p. m. in 106 Hanes Hall.

Notices have been sent to sophomores indicating the day when they will take the tests. If a sophomore fail to take the test on the day requested, then another time will be arranged for him at a fee of $2.

Dean Johnson said the purpose of the English proficiency test is to measure students' proficiency in reading and composition. Sophomores who do not pass the test will be required to take remedial work until a reasonable competence is attained.

Dean Johnson said sophomores must complete the test before preregistering or registering for the next semester.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Mary Alys Voorhees, Margaret Evans, Sarah Nicholson, Susan Donald, Mary Nuckolls, Jo Anne Wise, Elizabeth McCord, and Virginia Carswell.

Mssrs. Wadie Mikhail, Kenneth Brimmer, Peter Modrow, Edwin Graham, John Gisbon, Thomas Hoilman, Joe Dillard, William, Merlaum, Paul Watlers, James Miller, Ralph Mason, Orin Manning, Russell Bostic, James Thompson, Charles Ross, Charles Rennhardt, James Summey, Arthur Anderson, George Schroeder, George Hodges, Robert Peebles, Yehia Bessuki, Beverly Orr, Metro Jedorchuck, Emir Decantis, Sidney Seymour, Bruce Berryhill, Cellars Crisp, Rupert Eaves, Julius Timberlake.

Connie Whitaker Resigns Office As Vice Chairman Of Symposium

Carolina Symposium Chairman Sonny Hallford announced yesterday from his office in Graham Memorial that Connie Whitaker, vice chairman of the Symposium, has been forced to resign due to reasons of health.

Chairman Hallford issued the following statement concerning the resignation: "I am indeed sorry to hear that Miss Whitaker has resigned. However, I would like to point out that we will not lose her services entirely, for she will remain as a member of the program committee."

Miss Witaker sent in a letter of resignation to the Executive Committee of the Symposium on Tuesday. The letter said in part: "The desire to carry out my obligations to the Symposium in what I consider to be in accord with my capabilities has caused an old and sporadic illness to re-occur.

"My interest in the forward movement of the Symposium and my wish to see its continued succes makes it necessary for me to present my resignation as vice chairman.

"I have delayed presenting my resignation in order to provide continuity within the Symposium group. But at this time I feel it would be unfair to the incoming vice chairman to delay his orientation to his duties any longer.

"My concern with and for the Symposium has in no way abated and it is my hope that I may still be of some service to the group."

Chairman Hallford has announced a meeting of the General Symposium for Wednesday afternoon at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker 1 & 2. At this meeting the vacnncy created by Miss Witaker's resignation will be filled.

Also, committe heads will be announced and the Program Committe will make a report of its progress. The chairman asked that all members of the General Symposium be present at this very important meeting.

Students On Bridge

Only three couples playing in Monday night's duplicate bridge reached the small in diamonds, which is somewhat surprising in view of the combined strength of the North-South hands.

The bidding:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1S	DBL.	PASS	3D
PASS	4NT	PASS	5H
PASS	6D	(ALL PASS)

West opened the bidding with one spade. North, though he has only 10 points high card count, has excellent distributional advantage, and properly prefers the strength-showing take-out double, intending to show hearts first if partner makes the undesired two--club bid, and to follow up with a bid in diamonds if he ever gets a second chance to bid.

An aggressive East might have thrown in an interference bid of two-spades over North's take-out double, btu nothing really can be said against the more conservative decision by East to pass.

South has a big hand - 15 points in high cards and 5 points as responder (as responder this evaluation is permissible) - and so he makes the game-forcing bid of three-diamonds, anticipating a slam if North has either minor.

North now deevaluates his hand, and in view of his tremendous fit for diamonds, makes an effort for slam by the Blackwood sequence. Had partner shown only one ace, North would simply South's 5-diamond response. As it is, South's show of only two aces makes North preclude any possibility of a grand slam, and North parks the contract at 6-diamonds.

In view of his stronger-than-shown holdings, and his as yet unshown void in hearts, South is tempted to bid seven, but he passed up his opportunity since the wisely fears duplication in hearts. (North's take-out double virtually promises support for the unbid major.)

And against the king of spades opening lead, six diamonds is all that can be made. But it can be made by several linse of play.

One line of play will make provided spades are no worse than a 6-2 split while clubs must be 4-3 or clubs must be 5-2 and spades 5-3. This line of play involves ruffing out South's losers with North's diamonds, tossing one spade or one club (depending on which split you most expect to occur) under the ace of hearts, while using the ace and king of clubs for communication while ruffing out spades, ruffing small in hearts for communication while ruffing out clubs - remembering always to ruff high (with the king or ten of trumps) for your last spade and clubs ruffs.

Another probably inferior line of play that succeeds with the particular holdings in todays hand is to content yourself with only two spade ruffs and one club ruff and to ruff three hearts in the South hand and pick up the vital twelfth trick the established long heart. This play will succeed if the clubs are no worse than 5-2, the spades no worse than 6-2 while the hearts must be either 4-4 or the king of hearts must fall in the hand with shorter length in hearts. The only justification for this line of play is that the opening bid by West places him with 4 or more spades (which infers the possibility of shorter heart holdings), and probably the king of hearts. There is also the outside possibility that in the event that East holds the king of hearts, he may be tempted to cover the lower heart lead. Your writer was declarer and took this line of play, but has since been convinced that the other line requires less favorable holdings to succeed.

The Vols Blocked And Won

It has been said that a blocking team is a winning team. Certainly there was no better verification of this adage than Tennessee's performance against Carolina in Kenan Stadium Saturday.

The Volunteers simply blocked the Tar Heels with such viciousness and finality that Jim Tatum's club could never quite get into the ball game. It was a one team show from start to finish as the Vols completely dominated everything.

The fans who saw the fiasco must be wondering how anybody could label Tennessee a "disappointment" this season. Truly, the Vols could have given Oklahoma or Texas A&M a tough battle Saturday. Coach Bowden Wyatt called it the best game of the season for his club, and we believe it.

Gordon Should Get All-American Recognition

Having seen the Vols only once this season, it would be foolish to say that anybody is an All-American. But if tailback Bobby Gordon's performance against the Tar Heels was an example of his play all season, (and statistics show that it was) then he certainly deserves All-American recognition.

Of course, Gordon couldn't have done it without some brilliant blocking. Fullback Tommy Brunson was the man who paved the way for Gordon to bust loose for long gains time and again against a hapless Tar Heel defense.

The work of second string fullback Carl Smith and Gordon's understudy Carol Young also deserves much credit. It was Smith who broke loose for 54 yards and the Vols final score in the fourth quarter. But the Tennessee line cannot be overrated. It was the big factor in the rout of the Tar Heels.

Who Says Single Wing Is Obselete?

Thus the Tar Heels now hold a 4-3 record with games with South Carolina, Duke and Virginia remaining. The Tatummen are still very likely to finish with a winning record and that is more than many predicted at the outset of the season.

After the game Saturday, Tatum was at a lost for words to explain just what happened. But he wasn't the only one. Nobody expected the Vols to have such an easy time — a feather in the cap of the single wing advocates.

There are many who say the singe wing is obsolete — To them we say: Yeh, so is Sputnik.

Tar Heel Casualty List Is Small

Despite the tremendous blocking effort on the part of the Volunteers, the Carolina casualty list is small. Only three men are taking things easy for the first few days of practice this week and one of them missed Saturday's action.

Halfbacks Don Coker and Emil DeCantis were victims of the hard-charging Vols and center Ron Koes is still out due to an ankle injury suffered at Wake Forest the week before the Tennessee tilt.

Coker is nursing a sprained ankle and DeCantis is suffering a mild concussion. Tar Heel officials hope that all three will be ready to go against South Carolina this weekend. Guard Jack Lineberger was shaken up but is reportedly okay.

Another Banner Track Squad For Ranson

Looks like track Coach Dale Ranson has come up with another banner group of runners this season. The Carolina cross-country team is undefeated in three outings, and is favored to successfully defend it's ACC cross-country championship here later this month.

Of course, cross-country is just a "stay in practice period" until the spring rolls around and the trackmen really shift into high gear. That's when the oldest of all sports really becomes colorful.

Top man among the runners is junior Wayne Bishop. The former Daily Tar Heel sports editor has been the top man in all three outings this fall and could easily make Carolina fans forget Jim Beatty. Bishop had to sit out last season due to a leg injury after a great freshman year in 1955.

Greensboro junior Dave Scurlock is another potential Tar Heel great. He and Bishop give the Tar Heels a strong one-two punch. Then there's captain Ev Whatly and sophomore Cowles Liipfert, both fine performers in their own right. Liipfert, incidentally, was the top freshman runner last year and was the state high school mile champ in 1955. Behind these four are several capable runners who will make the Tar Heels a strong favorite to capture conference honors again this season.

IN ACC

Christy, Carlton In Tight Scoring Battle

GREENSBORO, N. C., Nov. 4—(AP) Dicky Christy, North Carolina State's game busting runner, is giving Duke's Wray Carlton a run for his money in the Atlantic Coast Conference individual scoring race.

Carlton continues to hold the lead this week with 51 points despite the face he hasn't scored a touchdown own since the Rice game Oct. 12.

But Christy, who keeps going over his opponents' goal line every week, is second with 48 points.

Carlton has managed to keep the leadership on his extra point kicking. Duke was held scoreless by Georgia Tech last Saturday but the two previous weeks Carlton booted two extra points each week. He has seven touchdowns and nine extra points to his credit while Christy has scored eight touchdowns.

Third place belongs to Virginia fullback Jim Bakhtiar with 43 points on six touchdowns and seven extra points. King of South Carolina is fourth with 30 points on five touchdowns.

Dick Hunter of N. C. State is fifth with 28 points and Alex Hawkins of South Carolina and Nelson Yarbrough of Virginia tied for sixth with 24 points each.

Volley Ball Clinic Begins

The intrammurals department has announced that a volley ball officials clinic will be held tomorrow and Thursday at 3 p. m. in Woollen Gym, room 301 A.

The department urges anyone interested in volley ball officiating to please attend these meetings.

HIGH SCHOOL PLANS MADE

Second 3-Team Track Meet Set For Friday

By ED ROWLAND

The UNC cross-country team will have its hand full Friday in a triangular meet here at 4 p. m.

Coach Dale Ranson said yesterday that the meet should provide "the best individual running of the year so far."

He said Billy Latham and sophomore Winfrey Gore lead a strong South Carolina team. Latham finished fourth in the ACC meet last fall and was the highest finishing junior. Gore is even better at cross-country, a scout for the Tar Heels says.

Wake Forest will push for top honors with Bob Medlin, who finished eighth in the conference meet last year. Medlin holds both Wake Forest and State course records.

The freshman cross-country squad will attempt to make up for a loss to Myers Park High School in a dual meet with the Wake Forest frosh Friday afternoon.

NO EXCUSES

Ranson offered no excuses for the frosh loss Saturday ther than to say that the flu hit harder than he had thought. But he added that Myers Park has a fine high school team. "They have a win over State, which walloppend us, and all the other high school teams they have faced," he said.

Both the varsity and freshman runners will be in top shape for the Friday meets, and they went through a spirited practice yesterday afternoon.

HIGH SCHOOL MEET

In addition to preparing for the meets Friday, Coach Ranson is making plans to host high school cross-countrymen in a state-wide meet Nov. 16.

He said that although the NCHSAA under Chairman Hap Perry is handling final arrangements, any Carolina student knowing of a promising runners should make sure the boy gets his entry blank in one time.

"I hope every one of the 658 high schools in the state sends at least one boy here," he siad.

Game With SC Will Appear On Regional TV

GREENSBORO, N. C., Nov. 4 (AP) —Football fans will be able to watch the North Carolna-South Carolina game at Chapel Hill Saturday on their television sets.

Atlantic Coast Conference Com-Missioner James Weaver announced here today that the game will be televised regionally on the 20-station ACC network reaching from Baltimore to Miami.

The game will be the third regional telecast under the current National Collegiate Athletic Assn. program.

Super Sub!

It's been said that the atomic submarine "Nautilus" stays submerged so long that it only surfaces to let the crew re-enlist.

Perhaps for this reason, the Navy has taken valuable space aboard the "Nautilus" for the only soft-drink vending machine in the entire submarine fleet.

Naturally (or you wouldn't hear about it from us) it's a Coca-Cola machine. And not unexpectedly, re-enlistments are quite respectable.

Rugged lot, those submariners. Great drink, Coke!

Soccer Team Will Try It Again; At Davidson Today

By JIM PURKS

Some soccer players probably won't believe it until they get on the Davidson field and hear the starting whistle.

For it appears that the long-idle varsity soccer team, after having four straight scheduled soccer games called off, will finally play a game—its first since October 8.

Coach Marvin Allen said yesterday afternoon that he had not heard from the Davidson coach and that it is safe to assume that today's rescheduled game with Davidson will be played in Davidson at 3 p. m.

The Tar Heels were scheduled to meet the Wildcats on October 25, but the game had to be postponed because flu had hit the Davidson campus and all athletic contests were called off.

As a result, of cancellations and postponements, the team has only played two games this season, winning 3-0 over Roanoke College and dropping a close 4-3 decision to Lynchburg College.

The Tar Heels will be at full strength for the Davidson game. On the forward line, fleet-footed center forward Mike Thompson will lead the team, playing with insides Ted Smith and Tom Rand. Rick Grausman will be at the left wing spot while Coleman Barks, fully recovered from a serve ankle sprain, will be at right wing.

On defense, Captain Bill Blair and Hugh Goodman will be at the halfback slots, while Ted Youhanna, Bob Borden and Bill Klein will be the fullbacks. Backing the defense up will be goalie Jim Rattay.

DUkathon Race Is Set For November 16th

The fourth annual DUkathon race will be held on Saturday, Nov. 16.

The DUkathon is a yearly affair and consists of a foot-race from the Chapel Hill post office to the post office in Durham. The distance covered is 13.6 miles.

There will be a campus wide election for the DUkathon queen on Nov. 15. Entries for the queen must be submitted to Jim Menzel at the Delta Upsilon house by Nov. 8.

Anyone interested in participating in the race has been asked to attend a meeting at the DU house tonight at 8 p.m. If you are unable to attend the meeting, make arrangements to contact the DU's.

Nov. 21 Set For UN Trip

UNC will again go to the U. N. this year when the Y has its annual United Nations seminar trip to New York City.

The seminar will last from Nov 21-23, and students will leave UNC in cars to go on the trip. The approximate cost for the trip, room and meals is $30. Any interested student who wants to take his car on the trip has been urged to do so will be paid for most of the gas expenses.

Purpose of the seminar, according to Jean Pierce Boissavit, publicity chairman for the trip, is threefold: to get more information about the mechancis and procedure of the U. N., to visit the U. N. delegations see the U. N. in action and to discuss first-hand information about current international affairs.

The committee for the trip, headed by Ed Crow, plans to have prominant speakers talk to the seminar group, to have a tour around New York City on one of the afternoons and to have an orientation, program Monday before the seminar for the people going on the trip.

SET NOVEMBER 14

Carnival Plans Being Made

Preparations are being made for the eleventh annual Co-recreation Sports Carnival set for 6:45 p. m., November 14, in Woollen Gym.

Women's Athletic Association and Intramural Department representatives are combining their efforts for the event.

Entries for participation in the carnival should be submitted to the Intramural or the WAA office by 5 p. m. Thursday.

The carnival program will offer numerous sports activities, carnival games and novel relays. Each team will consist of six men and six women. Participants will be paired by drawing from a hat by the Intramural Department staff.

Trophies will be awarded to the individual winners. Plaques will go to the men's and women's groups compiling the most points.

Last year about 225 students participated in the carnival. The two athletic groups expect a larger turnout for this year's event.

World In Brief

RICHMOND, Va., Nov. 5. (AP)—Democrat J. Lindsay Almond Jr. today won election as governor of Virginia under the Byrd organization banner of massive resistance to racial integration in the public schools.

N. C. Flu Deaths

RALEIGH, Nov. 5. (AP)—The death of two persons in Chatham County of complications resulting from Asian flu was reported by the State Board of Health today. They were the first two deaths to be attributed to the current flu epidemic which continued to rage in the state unabated.

Dr. Fred Foard, head of the health board's Division of Epidemiology, reported that a completion of estimates made by county health officers gave a total of 145,732 cases of "influenza like" disease in the state last week.

Fifth Amendment

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5. (AP)—A labor consultant and a teamsters union official invoked the Fifth Amendment more than 100 times today and refused to tell Senate rackets probers whether they made under-the-table deals to ease the labor troubles of Michigan businessmen.

The consultant, George Kamenow of Farmington, Mich., wouldn't say whether he lavished $61,000 on union bosses in 1954 and 1955 and charged it to firms that hired his services. Reading from a slip of paper, the sweating witness invoked the Fifth Amendment 76 times.

Frank Kierdorf, business agent of teamster Local 332 in Flint, Mich., rolled up more than 40 Fifth Amendment pleas against possible self-incrimination in refusing to talk about his relations with Kamenow.

U. S. Satellite

NEW YORK, Nov. 5. (AP)—The Mutual Broadcasting System said today it had been reliably informed that the United States would launch its first satellite next week.

The network, in a coast-to-coast radio broadcast, said its Philadelphia news bureau had been informed of the launching by a "leading scientist," described as an expert on insects.

Moonwatch

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5. (AP)—More than 100 American moonwatch teams were alerted today to man their telescopes for a predawn appearance of Sputnik II tomorrow.

The 1,120-pound Soviet satellite, carrying along a little dog called Laika on its orbit of the earth, may be visible during three swift passes overhead beginning at 5 a.m. EST.

The signal to begin optical tracking was sent out from the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory at Cambridge, Mass. At the same time the observatory predicted that Sputnik I, launched into space by the Russians Oct. 4, will make a fiery plunge to earth Dec. 11.

Tougher Laws

WASHINGTON, Nov. 2 (AP)—Sen. McClellan (D-Ark) said today the Senate rackets investigation has shown a need for tougher laws to punish union busting tactics by employers and their agents.

McClellan heads the special Senate Committee now deep in an investigation of alleged anti-union deals between Nathan W. Shefferman of Chicago and a variety of employers.

The senator told newsmen the testimony has shown up anti-union practices that "certainly are to be

Show Begins November 15

The Ladies League for Democratic Action, an Okinawan version of a political pressure group, is part of the current production of the Carolina Playmakers' "Teahouse of the August Moon."

This current three-performance run will begin in Memorial Hall, Friday, November 15. Five girls from four different states head the cast.

Miss Barbara Battle, of Miami, Fla., is the staunch president of the Ladies League, whose efforts towards the democratic ideal center upon lipstick, perfume and bobby pins.

The last time Miss Battle was seen on the Playmakers stage, she appeared in another oriental role, that of the old Japanese woman of "Stranger in the Land",

The other members of the Ladies League are Edith Hinrichs, of New York, N .Y.; Ann Harvey, Sheffield, Ala. Hope Spargar, Scarsdale, N. Y.; and Frances Bell, Danville, Va.

"Teahouse of the August Moon" will play November 15-17 in Memorial Hall. Tickets are available from the Business Office of the Carolina Playmakers, 314 Abernethy Hall, and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Miss Herndon Is Yack Judge

Miss North Carolina of 1958, Miss Elaine Herndon, will be one of three to judge the 1958 Yackety Yack beauty contest to be held in Memorial Hall at 7:30 p. m. on Thursday, Nov. 21.

Each contestant will be introduced to the audience and the judges by master of ceremonies, Ty Boyd, of radio station WHCL. Music will be provided by the Bill Byers Quartet.

Lt. Harvey Humphery, Supply Corps, United States Navy; and Lawrence Wofford, chief photographer for the Raleigh News and Observer, will help Miss Herndon in the judging. Wofford was on the panel of Judges for the Mis North Carolina Contest in 1955, and Humphrey has also judged similar events.

Because of the lack of entrants the final deadline has been extended to Wesdnesday, Nov. 13. Entry blanks may be secured in the Yack office in the basement of Graham Memorial.

Contestants must be present for a rehearsal Wednesday Nov. 20, at 7 p. m. Every coed is eligible except those who were on the 1957 Yackety Yack Court.

UP Talks Campaign Plans

Symposium To Receive Donations

Campaign coordination and finances were main topics of business at last night's meeting of the University Party.

A total of $65 was voted to be donated to the Carolina Symposium and to the Chapel Hill Empty Stocking Fund.

UP members voted to contribute $50 to the Symposium and $15 to the Empty Stocking Fund.

Speaking on behalf of contribution to the Symposium Al Goldsmith explained that the proposed Symposium budget for this year's program ranged between $5,000-$6,000. Goldsmith said that approximately $2,400 had been raised so far.

Jerry Jones, UP vice-chairman and fall campaign coordinator, spoke to the group on general plans for the Nov. 12 election.

He said that campaign headquarters would be announced in the Daily Tar Heel within the next few days. Jones stated that the headquarters would be located in Graham Memorial and urged candidates to make use of the room. In speaking to the candidates Jones said he could not "stress too much getting out and meeting the people."

Candidates were reminded to turn in their expense accounts by 6 p.m. Monday to the Student Government offices.

UP Chairman Harry Braxton asked for suggestions from the party members for a party platform for the coming election. Braxton said he passed out paper for suggestions and received a "bunch of 'bull.' They were just goofing off."

Braxton announced that the UP executive committee will draw up the party platform.

Under committee reports, Al Goldsmith spoke on legislative action. He said he felt the UP had "used their 29-21 majority well."

Speaking of past legislative action Goldsmith said that money had been appropriated to the Symposium, the Tarnation debt had been cleared up, and the controversial trash can issue had been defeated.

On Nov. 12 the polls will open from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. As reported in Monday night's required candidates meeting, candidates will be responsible for seeing that none of their literature is within 50 feet of the polls when the polls are open.

AUTHORITY SAYS 'YES'—

Could Objects Be 'Interplanetary'?

WASHINGTON, Nov. 5 (AP) — A brilliant mystery object was reported sighted today in southern skies by a Coast Guard cutter, even as Air Force specialists investigated a flurry of earlier, similar reports.

The nation's leading investigator of aerial phenomena immediately said that "it looks as though they (the objects) are interplanetary."

The Coast Guard Cutter Sebago, cruising in the Gulf of Mexico about 200 miles south of Louisiana, radioed that an object resembling "a brilliant planet with a high rate of speed" was seen for about three second at 5:21 a. m. (CST).

Coast Guard Headquarters in New Orleans said the message did not report exactly who on board the cutter had seen the object.

The Sebago's message said the object was tracked on the vessel's radar screen for 27 minutes and that, during that period, the object flitted on and off the screen several times.

Sightings of strange objects have been reported from widely scattered sections of the United States since Sunday, most of them near secret military installations in the Southwest.

The Air Force said the radar network of the Air Defense Command is keeping watch—so far with no results—and that specially qualified investigators have been assigned to look into the reports.

For several years the Air Force has checked all reports of unidentified flying objects. Investigators work under the Air Defense Command at Colorado Spring, Colo., and report to the Air Technical Intelligence Center.

Judging from past findings, the chances are 50-1 the Air Force will offer a humdrum explanation for the current sightings.

During the first half of this year, the Air Force said, only 1.9 per cent of the 250 reported sightings of flying saucers and other fantastic areial objects have wound up in the "unknown" category.

And the Air Force said firmly—though not all flying saucer buffs may agree—that it doesn't believe even the 1.9 per cent residue is made up of the things you read about in science fiction magazines.

Balloons, aircraft and such astronomical sights as meteorites and bright stars accounted at least to the Air Force's official satisfaction for almost four-fifths of the sightings.

The director of a private organization set up to investigate flying saucers and such said he couldn't evaluate at this point the current rash of reported sightings.

But retired Marine Maj. Donald E. Keyhoe, director of the National Investigations Committee on Aerial Phenomena, added that the reported objects may be something from another planet.

Dukathon Race Set Saturday

The Fourth Annual DUkathon, a foot race from the post office in Chapel Hill to the post office in Durham, sponsored by Delta Upsilon Fraternity, will be held on Saturday, Nov. 16 at 1:30 p. m. The crowning of a DUkathon Queen will again be an added attraction.

Any student with an "A" medical rating is eligible to enter the Dukathon.

Those interested in entering the race have been asked to call 9-1301 or send a post card to Jim Menzel, Dukathon Committee Chairman, Delta Upsilon House.

Each men's dorm and fraternity has been asked to send a representative to a meeting at the D. U. House on Nov. 12 at 8 p. m. At this time, details of the Dukathon will be explained.

Each girl's dorm and sorority has been asked to sponsor a candidate for Dukathon Queen.

All candidates for queen are urged to send a small snapshot for the election posters to Jim Menzel by Nov. 8.

The campus wide election for the Dukathon Quen will be held on Nov. 14. The crowning will take place on Nov. 16 just before the race begins.

'26 Units Will Cost $2 Million

By ANN FRYE

UNC administration officials yesterday announced plans for a major, $2 million housing project for married students at the University.

Still incomplete plans call for construction of 26 two-story buildings—on a site just east of Victory Village—which will include 208 one and two-bedroom apartments.

UNC Business Manager J. A. Branch said each apartment will consist of a living room, kitchen, bathroom and one or two bedrooms.

Branch said the problem in connection with these apartments is to construct as many apartments as possible and make each roomy enough for comfortable living.

A report from the Housing office yesterday said about 200 married couples are on the waiting list for apartments.

In the construction of the new apartments, Branch said the University must comply with specifications as to square footing from the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency (HHFA).

The University will sell revenue bonds to the HHFA to finance construction.

The University will rent, maintain and operate the apartments when they're completed.

The site for the proposed new apartment buildings was approved this fall by both the faculty Buildings and Grounds Committee and the University Trustees Buildings Committee.

The revenue bonds will be paid over a 40-year period.

Branch would not speculate on when construction might get underway. Rent for the apartments has not been determined.

Branch said grading work is almost completed on the parking lot near Kenan Stadium, and curb and gutter work is now underway. He said gravel will be put on the lot as soon as the present work is far enough along.

Ackland Museum, on Columbia Street opposite the First Baptist Church, is 88 per cent near completion, according to the UNC business manager.

The Museum will be headquarters for the Art Department with facilities for studios and exhibition rooms.

Branch said that construction of the threee men's dormitories near Kenan Stadium and the addition to Spencer women's dorm is coming along on schedule.

The dorms and Spencer addition are expected to be finished by September 1958. The dorms are 38 per cent near completion, and the Spencer addition is 45 per cent completed.

Attend Meeting

Five representatives of the UNC School of Education will be in Asheville Tuesday and Wednesday attending the annual meeting of the North Carolina Principals Association.

The five are Guy B. Phillips and Carl Brown, professors of education; John Chase, assistant professor; Richard C. Wilson, graduate student; and William H. Wagoner, associate secretary of the N. C. School Boards Association.

PROFESSORS TO MEET

Prof. Fritz Machlup of Johns Hopkins University will address the UNC chapter of the American Association of University Professors today at 7:30 p.m. in the faculty lounge of the Morehead Building.

Carolinans Report 'Strange Flying Objects'

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

"That great inverted bowl" that Omar Khayyam called the sky, has been filled to overflowing with strange objects, according to reports from areas that include not only the Western emptiness but also the Carolinas.

News that the U. S. Air Force plans to investigate reports of brilliant, hovering lights seen near government installations in New Mexico and other Western areas added credibility to sightings of similar objects in the Carolinas.

The objects were seen in the two-state area at various times, from last Wednesday night to early yesterday.

One of the early Carolinas reports included the coincidence of a stalling automobile. Such occurrences were mentioned prominently in stories from Texas.

Mrs. Barbara Jean Stokes of Lumberton said she was driving with her husband and another couple last Thursday evening when all four saw an object about 200 feet long in the sky. She related that the object "raised straight up, then flamed," and that their automobile stalled.

Two fishermen near McColl, S. C., said they saw a dark object about the size of an automobile hovering over the pond last Wednesday night. Bowden Tyler and Buddy Jacobs told Tyler's brother-in-law, Gene Granger of McColl, that the thing was about 70 feet off the ground and had an engine that sounded like a diesel.

What Frank Fenwick of Greenville, S. C., reportedly saw resembled a rocket and trailed black smoke and flame. He declared that he spotted it yesterday as it travelled southward and disappeared beyond the horizon.

Even more colorful a description is given by Mr. and Mrs. Harlston Adams of near Charleston, who reported they saw something about 4 a.m. yesterday. Mrs Adams, who said her husband woke her to stare at the strange object, declared it looked like "an overstuffed worm with two long feelers sticking from its head; or like a huge fotball with antennae."

She said it had a bright reddish color and moved slowly. There was no evidence of flaming, she added.

Bill Hemby of near Weddington said his dog's barking waked him at about 4 a.m. Monday. Looking outside, he said, he saw a red object "like an airplane on fire, but bigger." Running outside the house he observed the thing, at a relatively low altitude, travel across the western sky.

A. W. Blackburn of Winston-Salem, employe of a Charlotte construction company, said he was driving along U.S. 29 near Concord about 6:30 a.m. Monday. To his left he suddenly noticed an object "about one foot across just above the horizon, that glowed more brilliantly than the sun." He added that it sank out of sight and left a trail of light like a flare.

"I've seen planes drop flares, the Northern lights, and the battle of Okinawa," Blackburn said. "But that thing knocks me for more of a loop than anything I've ever seen."

No one had a ready explanation for the sightings in the Carolinas. But one caller at the Columbia, S. C., Record identified himself as a former Texan and said there was no mystery about the lights seen out there.

"They're seen all over Texas but only at night," drawled the caller. "I've seen 'em up to 250 feet long.

"That, partner, was a Texas firefly."

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Annie Cofield, Mary Alvs Voorhees, Margaret Evans, Robbie Martin, Sara Van Weyk, Sarah Nicholson, Susan Donald, Elizabeth McCord, Virginia Carswell, Betty Doughtery, Sue Donisthorpe, and Mrs. Joan Wise.

"If liberty and equality, as is thought by some, are chiefly to be found in democracy, they will be best attained when all persons alke share in the government to the utmost."—Aristotle

Student government's campus-wide election is slated for next Tuesday, Nov. 12, and prospects for an extremely lively campaign and balloting look much better than they ordinarily do.

Both the University and Student Parties have worked conscientiously throughout nominating sessions to present a capable and worth-while slate of candidates.

Now the issue as to whether or not student government functions with a capable slate of officials throughout the present academic year lies squarely in the hands of the student body—the electorate.

In past elections, discouraging numbers—or lack of them—have resulted in figures approaching 38 per cent of the student body, or even less, casting ballots. Such a dismal turnout should not seriously imperil the selection of student government officialdom this fall.

An overworked adage has it that a chain is no stronger than its weakest link. And student government is definitely no stronger than the electorate which turns out for fall and spring elections.

A priceless American tradition is at stake.

And, on the local level, the right of student autonomy or student self-government is definitely at stake. Foes of student government—those who contend that it would be much more efficient and expeditious for the administration to handle student affairs since the student population is transitory and unstable — definitely have grounds upon which they may lay-er support if students turn out in diminutive numbers at the ballot box.

Effective self-government entails responsibility and participation at the ballot box.

The enthusiasm generated by the campus political parties throughout nominating sessions should permeate the student body and prod it to vote in large numbers next Tuesday.

Ballot or bullet?

Student self-government entails student responsibility.

Permanent Auto Limitation And Students Integrity...

In the spring of 1956, student government asserted admirable responsibility in its proposal to prohibit freshman cars on campus and limit sophomore cars only to those who maintained a "C" average.

At that time, University trustees were extremely upset about the congested traffic situation on campus and threatened to take action unless student government demonstrated some responsibility.

Student body President Bob Young and his presidentially appointed Traffic Advisory Commission championed the cause and acted rapidly in promulgating a proposal to alleviate traffic congestion. The commission's plan outlined two basic points:

(1) That a automobile registation fee of $2.50 would be levied, and that proceeds from this fee would be ultimately used to build additional parking facilities.

(2) That freshmen would be denied auto maintenance privileges and that sophomores without "C" averages would also be prohibited from keeping cars on campus.

But it was also specifically stipulated that such prohibition was to be only temporary. And that auto maintenance privileges would be reinstated as soon as additional parking facilities could be constructed.

It now appears that temporary has come to mean permanent.

Student government and student body President Sonny Evans should immediately champion the cause for reinstatemnt of auto privileges for freshmen and all sophomores.

A promise is a promise, and immediate action should be taken to construct more facilities so that all students may have equal privileges and immunities.

Student government is only as good as its word and the responsibility it demonstrates.

Temporary restrictions on cars should not man permanent.

S. Hawkins & M. Mouse Day?

Saturday, Nov. 23, 1957 is the date for the running of that "mos' inhooman" race. It's Sadie Hawkins Day.

It'll be the 21st annual running, and it seems to us that some energetic campus group could sponsor such an event here. The campus is apparently lethargic and apathetic as far as fun is concerned. Such a lively event might break the monotony of academic toil.

While the promotion of Sadie Hawkins Day is obviously commercial, it still might provide an interval of fun for the student body.

The event, of course, came from the talented pen of Cartoonist Al Capp. Capp reported that the event became annual in Dogpatch when its first mayor, Hekzebiah Hawkins, contrived a way to marry off his daughter Sadie, "the homliest girl in all them hills." Hekzebiah decreed that a foot race be run between all eligible manhood and all Dogpatch's available feminine pulchritude. The result was Sadie Hawkins Day.

In this age when people are so harassed and materialistically spinning, an interval of living — Sadie Hawkins Day — might break the lethargic monotony.

Why not, somebody??

Who says it's Mickey Mouse to live a little??

New Plot To Blast Away Capitalism

Harry Kirschner

It was just a few nights ago when I had put the tea to boil in my samovar and settled down with the evening edition of PRAVDA INTERNATIONALE that my friend Ivan Skavinsky Skavaar, burst into my room with the news that the FBI was sending agents to the campus.

Ivan was quite excited. So much so in fact that he danced around the room to the point where a pocketfull of potato masher grenades cascaded to the floor. Fortunately, only two of them exploded.

He was wearing a full red flag for a cape. The hammer and sickle hung neatly down in the front fore-corner.. On his head was a shoulder-broad red hat. We had worked out this attire for ourselves as being the most loyal, and at the same time the least ostentatious things we could wear.

I like my dear comrade, Ivan because we share many common interests. Both of us are sociology-economics majors. Beyond that, we hold a common world view. What I especially like about him is the ready enthusiasm he showed for one of my operational ideas.

I had hit upon a master plan for causing dissension among the faculty and the student body. For the faculty it was easy. All we did was pass around artificially gold plated fountain pen to all the professors on campus with inscriptions on the pens reading, "In appreciation of your most valuable service." Naturally, the pens were readily accepted. When the cap is removed from any one of these pens as lethal dose of mustard gas shoots out, hitting the holder full in the face.

In so far as the student body was concerned the problem was somewhat more difficult. At the moment of Ivan's entrance my room was full of text books bought at captitalist prices at the Book-"x". Since the FBI was coming, Ivan and I had to make haste. We set to cutting out a square from the middle of each page of each book. This gave to the interior of each book a hollow square running from the inside of one cover to the inside of the other, but it was imperceptible from the outside.

We finished hollowing out all of the books that night. Then we filled them with high explosives. The next day we sold them back to the Book-ex at half price. The books are set to go off on Feb. 3, 1958, just in time to catch next semester's hopefuls.

Because the FBI is known to be perceptive, Ivan and I decided we might possibly be conspicuous in our red capes, so we had them dyed with blue and white to form stripes alternating in the three colors. The hammer and sickle symbols were printed in gold and we could not hide them with dye. We altered them instead. Now they appear in the capes' fore-corners as gold dollar signs. In our disguises we proceeded to avoid capture by blending in with the crowd at the Rare Book Room of the library.

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Plea For Lighter Curriculum..

EDITOR:

It was a big weekend, gay parties ad lots of bermudas, and incidently Sputnik the second. In the midst of all these gala activities perhaps we should recap something vital to all of us—freedom and Democracy in view of the many sobering Russian threats.

This past weekend while the University's prestige group was carrying on the necessary social functions, including contests on beverage consumption, competition among bermuda styles, and two a.m. stupors, the Russian "peasant" scientists counteracted our social whirl by launching their second research satellite, which is about six times heavier and almost twice as high as their first one, and with "Curly" at the controls. What we want to know is "What are these students going to do with their capitalist business administration degrees when they are under communist control, when there iis no capitalist business to administrate? How are the sociology students going to use their knowledge operating collective farm machinery?" Maybe our socialized complacency has us all convinced that the goal of Communism will be altered from world domination to peaceful co-existence. The point is, we do have a problem, and it effects all of us in all fields. The student might say "Of course the Government has a problem!" But with a little reflection, if by "The government" we mean the Washington politicians, then get ready for the salt mines! Let's be realistic and put the responsibility for the protection of freedom and Democracy where it actually is—on each student and each faculty member,' in each classroom ,at each library study desk, and on the shoulders of each y-court coke-sipper at this university. In other words, it is not the responsibility of people in general, of politicians in Washington, of "Universities in general," or of Adlai Stevensons, but it is your responsibility! Why is it your responsibility? Because you are the one who wants to keep yourself alive and well more than anybody else.

What can we as students and faculty do to protect ourselves?

The problem in general is that we need scientists: chemists, mathematicians, physicists, engineers, physiologists. We need to realize that primarily science students are going to effectively protect our way of life in today's mechanical world, that is, only science students "with their thick, horn-rimmed glasses" are going to save the necks of the "gin-toasters," the hell-raisers, the long-haired student philosophers who play with theory and run from fact. The science student is the future protectorate of this country, this way of life, our ideals. This is not to say that every student at this university should drop everything and become a science major. This does not imply that the science student is a special class, an awesome thing. Then what does it mean? Everyone doesn't want to be a scientist and everybody isn't expected to be one, but there are some important things we as students can do for our science protection.

One thing we can do is to alleviate the workload requirements, which seem to be unfair, for the science student. Don't scoff! Let's take a look at the facts! Why do we not find a proportional representation of science students in clubs and the many various extra-curricula activities and so-called important things around campus? Is it because these students don't feel that these things are important, do they feel socially inept, are they too far "removed" from the rest of us, or it is because they don't have enough spare time to participate and at the same time keep up an average or better scholastic record? We think the latter reason is the best explanation of the ones offered. Usually the science student has a workload requirement which prohibits him from being able to get even a decent night's sleep. If he doesn't study all the time, his grades drop and he faces the possibility of scholastic suspension. Every semester some badly-needed science students are suspended or forced to quit, or to change to a lesser institution of learning because of the unfairness of the present workload requirements. What do we mean "Unfairness?" Well, most of us know that a course in higher mathematics, for example, requires about 2 or 3 times the effort as does a course in sociology or business administration.

It may be said that fifteen hours per semester for the science major with science courses is roughly equivalent in workload to thirty hours per semester for other majors. How many archeology majors, how many education of art majors could maintain their present scholastic average if they were required to perform thirty hours of work each semester? How many parties could they attend, how much could they participate in student affairs with a schedule like that?

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Study Habits And Habitats

Gail Godwin

One thing Carolina doesn't lack, and that's places to study. This past week, I made a survey of the study habits and habitats of UNC students by visiting them myself and seeing just how conducive they were to the all-embracing weekday activity.

Starting with the most popular weekday workroom, there is the Reserve Reading Room to your right as you enter the Wilson Library.

Here, amid the friendly shuffle of papers, scraping of chairs, suppressed titters from coed powder puffs who can't concentrate, and the tap, tap, tapping of someone with a nervous foot, one feels completely at home—that is, of course, if one is from a very large, noisy family.

This room is the grazing room, where you just nibble knowledge and nod to friends for three or four delightful hours. Digestion is not possible.

Wandering up the stairs and into a darker, more hushed atmosphere, you enter the Reference Room lined with long study tables at which people are crammed like galley slaves and spotted with soft lamps that give a rosy glow to the already hot room. If you can stand the humidity, if you are not subject to claustrophobia and if you have 20-20 vision and wish you could get it down to 20-200, then this is your room.

Progressing with the serious student who is dissatisfied with these imperfect rooms, you try the periodical room. The first requirement is to squash your cigarette outside, since cigarettes are regarded as incendiary to magazines.

Here you find an abundance of clean-topped round and square tables where clean, round and square young students are concentrating away.

Powderpuffs and handshakers are usually pierced with cool stares if they come to titter and to shake hands. This is a "clean, well-lighted place."

Those who read to rythm and study to syncopation had better breeze over to the G. M. Lounge. Here you can sink into red leather upholstery and get lost in soft music — and books. That is, of course, until some joker puts on some Dixieland jazz. Then . . . ra . . . ta . . . ta . . . you just can't . . . la . . . da . . . da . . . concentrate.

If you disagree with John Donne and want to be an island, there are variety of basements, deserted classrooms and labs, and a few tree houses scattered around campus. Then there are always the little girls' and the little boys' powder rooms in the library and in the GM building.

A few optimists take a hot shower and put on their pajamas and climb into a nice warm bed all ready to get some real studying done. No place like the dormitory, they assert. Ten minutes later they are snoring away, books slung to the floor.

I even came across one enterprising young student who had set up quarters under an arboretum bush and was quietly studying his biology notes with a flashlight.

As a result of my survey, I found that 33⅓ percent of the students migrate to the grazing room; 13 percent of them plod to the galley room; 2¼ percent select the clean, well-lighted place, 9.005 percent are islands, 5½ percent go to bed, 1 percent take their flashlights to the bushes, and 10 percent synchronize their brains to the strains of "My Fair Lady" and "Dixieland Jazz." I don't know what happened to the other 26 percent. It is said that they have their own private little "Study Satellites" and can just take off into the atmosphere, which is very conducive to studying.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

A Running Wild

Whit Whitfield

While we were watching the massacre in Kenan Stadium last Saturday, we had the good fortune to sit in front of a half-dozen or so self-styled football strategists. From our vantage point on the 10 yard line, (we always get good seats—influence in the athletic office.)play was difficult to watch.

This didn't phase our commentators, for they chattered incessantly about every play. Every maneuver on the field was checked and double checked. Personally, they were a big help, for we could have hardly understood the game otherwise. One even went so far as to say that he could dive over the line as well as the Tennessee tailback.

He spoke so convincingly that I seriously doubt that anyone would dare believe otherwise. Some of us sitting nearby thought that it might be a good idea for him to try. Seriously, you haven't lived until you get commentaries such as we did Saturday in addition to a fine football game. We left at halftime.

Someone in the old country must have discovered a fountain of youth.

Mrs. Evelyn Fleming, a 73-year-old widow, is being sued in London for husband stealing. The plaintiff is the 54-year-old Marchioness of Winchester. The cause of all the trouble—Lord Winchester, aged 95. Mrs. Fleming is accused of using "hate, venom, and jealousy" in her attempts to woo the aging Marquis away from his wife.

In this country, people this old are usually confined to beds or wheelchairs, but in merry old England they are fighting tooth and nail. Whatever it is they have discovered should be shared with the rest of the free world. If we can't beat the Rusians then maybe we can outlive them. We suggest that Eisenhower check Macmillan about this new development and exchange some atomic secrets for the information. We can't keep anything under security wraps anyway with all these Russians snooping. Long live the Queen.

One rather befuddled student government leader recently requested a permanent reservation for the Woodhouse Conference Room in Graham Memorial for "every Tuesday, Oct. 29." The office staff is still working on the request. Some committees don't meet every week it seems.

Covering The Campus

SYMPOSIUM

The Carolina Symposium will meet this afternoon at 4 o'clock in Roland Parker Lounges 1 and 2.

Sonny Hallford, chairman, has urged all members to be present.

WESTMINISTER FELLOWSHIP

Two Westminister Fellowship study groups will meet today.

The study group on "Prayer" will meet in the YMCA library at 5 p.m. The group studying "Science and Religion" will meet in the Presbyterian Hut at 9 p.m.

PLAYMAKERS

Harry E. Davis, associate director of the Carolina Playmakers, has announced that tryouts for "What Every Woman Knows," third production of the drama group, have been postponed until Nov. 18. The tryouts were originally scheduled for Nov. 5.

CHARLOTTE CAROLINA CLUB

The Charlotte Carolina Club will meet Thursday at 7:15 p.m. in the Library Assembly Room to plan for the Christmas Dance. Anyone interested has been asked to attend.

IDC

The Interdormitory Council pictures will be taken at 7 p.m. today in New East.

All members have been asked to wear coats and ties.

MARDI GRAS COMMITTEE

The Mardi Gras Committee will meet Thursday at 4 p.m. in Roland Parker Lounge 1.

All committee members and anyone else who is interested have been asked to attend.

FACULTY CLUB

A Faculty Club luncheon will be held at the Carolina Inn at 1 p.m. on Nov. 12.

Drs. Wayne A. Bowers and Gerald R. McCarthy will speak on the Geophysical Year.

FOREIGN FILM SERIES

Thursday at 7:30 p.m. in Carroll Hall, the Foreign Film Series will present "Under Paris Skies," a French film directed by Jules Duvivier.

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS

The American Association of University Professors will meet today at 7:30 p.m. in the Faculty Lounge of Morehead Planetarium.

Professor Fritz Machlup of John Hopkins University will speak on "Academic Freedom and Academic Salaries."

UNC-DUKE PHYSICS COLLOQUIM

The UNC-Duke Physics Colloquim will meet today at 8 p.m. in 206 Phillips Hall.

Dr. George E. Pake of Stanford University will speak on "Multilevel Spin Systems."

STRAY GREEKS

The Stray Greek organization will hold a picnic honoring all sorority pledges Thursday at 5:30 p.m. in Cobb Dormitory basement.

Each sorority pledge class will present skits at the picnic and a prize will be given for the best skit.

The picnic for pledges is an annual event.

Labor Probe

WASHINGTON, Nov. 1—(AP)—Merlyn Pitzele acknowledged today he collected $15,000 as a teamsters union adviser while serving on the New York state mediation board and as labor editor of the magazine Business Week.

He made the disclosure before the Senate rackets committee, telling the senators he went to work for teamsters president Dave Beck in 1953 because he thought Beck was going to clean up the union.

Pitzele was President Eisenhower's labor adviser in the 1952 campaign. He also advised Thomas E. Dewey when the former New York governor sought the presidency in 1944 and 1948.

WITH SAD ENDING NOVEMBER TALE

Kids, whether good or bad you be, surround this here paternal knee, and listen while I tell about a time — I missremember the year, but it was in November, that curious things befell.

About that time I knew a dame—or chap, it all works out the same — all dewy-eyed and pearly, who, in her morning paper read an advertisment. "Do", it said, "Your Christmas shopping early."

Now this dear little bit of fluff was scarcely old or wise enough to spot this worn cliche, so offering thanks for honest tips she rubied up her virgin lips and started on her way.

She searched for presents near and far — had luncheon in the Dairy Bar — and like a glowing tracer, she spread unmitigated joy. One fuzzy-chinned delivery boy attempted to embrace her.

At last the sun was getting low and tootsie child knew she must go back to her dormitory. No sooner had the shiny door concealed that trim posterior — you won't believe this story — than on Olympus Zeus laid holt upon his sizzling thunder bolt, and with a dreadful cry, "In centuries I can't remember a Christmas shopper in November!", he let the darn thing fly.

THE MORAL — Must you go away? — is: Early Christmas shoppers may become celestial fuel. And yet, we'd say, the chance of pain is small compared with what you'd gain. We'll take a chance if you will.

Sobel Warns Hopefuls

Election Board Chairman Art Sobel has announced that all candidates not at the compulsory candidates, meeting Monday night and whose absences were not excused, are to contact him before 6 p. m. Wednesday.

Any candidate who neglects to do this will be disqualified. All candidates not present at the meeting and not excused must pay a $1 fine.

Any student unable to vote in Tuesday's election and desiring to vote by absentee ballot must have a valid reason. The following reasons will be considered acceptable: internment in the infirmary; absence from Chapel Hill; any other reason approved by the Election Board.

A written requet for an absentee ballot must be made to the chairman, Art Sobel, by 5 p. m. Friday.

The ballot must be returned to the Election Board before the polls close at 6 p. m. Tuesday. Students in the infirmary will be able to vote on regular authorized ballots. This will be arranged by the Election Board.

Students On Bridge

This deal illustrates the fact that a finesse is not always a good thing. In this case, South must avoid finessing for an outstanding king of trumps if he is to make his four heart contract.

East-West vulnerable; West deals.

The bidding:

WEST	NORTH	EAST	SOUTH
1D	Dbl	1S	3H
Pass	3NT	Pass	4H
Pass	Pass	Pass

Opening lead: King of diamonds.

North-South reach their game contract in hearts even though the opponents opened the bidding. West chooses the natural opening lead of the king of diamonds, and he takes a careful look at the cards which are played on the first trick. East plays the six of diamonds, South the four.

West can now conclude that East has played lowest diamond, since there are no outstanding diamonds lower than the six. The inference West draws from this is that East started with either one diamond or three diamonds, but not two. For if East had started with two diamonds his proper play would have been the high one first and then the low one.

West is now in a quandry. If his partner started with a singleton diamond, then the proper play would be the ace of diamonds followed by a third diamond, which East would ruff. The king of trumps would then serve as the setting trick.

On the other hand, if East started with three diamonds, this would mean South started with only one. In such a case laying down the ace of diamonds would be a bad play since South would trump it and the queen on the board would be good for a discard.

West considers this latter possibility to be more likely, since South is known to have a long heart suit and so could easily be short in diamonds. Hence, out of ignorance, West decides against leading the ace of diamonds. He must shift to one of the black suits, and he chooses to play a spade rather than lead away from his queen of clubs.

Declarer takes the trick on the board and breathes a sigh of relief that West did not continue with diamonds. However, he is still not out of the woods; far from it.

The ordinary play for declarer in this type of situation would be to lead a low heart from the board and finesse the queen. However, this is one of those not-too-common cases where the finesse is an improper play. For, if the finesse loses (which is probable in view of West's opening bid) and if East had at least two hearts to start, then West will have a second chance to defeat the contract by leading the ace of diamonds followed by a low diamond. (East can have at most two diamonds since West bid the suit.)

Hence declarer should lead a low heart from the board and play the ace, refusing the finesse. He then re-enters the board via the king of clubs and leads another low trump. West wins with the king of hearts, and both opponents are now exhausted of trumps. West can now lead out diamonds, but it is too late for his partner to get a ruff.

If West doesn't lead out the ace of diamonds himself, South can eventually set up the queen on the board by leading a low diamond from his hand. Thus South loses only two diamonds and a heart and makes his contract.

Note that South's line of play will succeed in making the contract even though East holds the king of trumps, although South might have to forego an overtrick. South will still lose only two diamonds plus the king of trumps.

Business School Gives Profit To Fund Drive

A check in excess of $400 is bolstering the 1957 Chapel Hill Community Chest fund, thanks to the investments class of the UNC School of Business Administration. The money comes from profits made through investments of the class.

In 1952 Charlie H. Babcock of Reynolds and Co. in Winston-Salem set up a $10,000 trust for use in a UNC investments class in order that students could learn about the practical side of American business by investing real money.

The class has made a profit and the income from their investments have topped the $6,000 mark. The class has been conservative, preferring "solid securities" rather than highly speculative stocks. In the past the class has bought U. S. Government bonds and the largest present holding is American Telephone and Telegraph.

Dr. Joe S. Floyd teaches the investments class at UNC which makes a thorough study of the businesses chosen for investments. Economics charts, statistics, and graphs are carefully scrutinized along with dividend records and other factors.

Under the terms of the trust, the the students plan the investments. They can be advised against making transactions, but they can not be forced into making decisions which they do not want to make.

Half of the profit made by the class goes back into the original fund. The other half is contributed to the Chapel Hill Community Chest.

Meet Planned By Art League

University Art League, new student art organization now being formed on the campus, will hold it charter meeting in the Caldwell Hall basement sculpture studio, tonight at 7 o'clock.

The name of the organization was chosen from among those submitted during a contest held last week. The winner, Miss Mary Louise Davis, will receive a $5 credit certificate from the Intimate Bookshop.

Any student is welcome and urged to join. By signing up as a member on Wednesday he can become a charter member. All prospective members are urged to attend the Wednesday night meeting, during which activities for the year will be discussed.

Bridge Match Lists Winners

First place East-West bridge winners, John Gwynn and Bill Fype, were one of five student couples who were winners in Monday night's bridge tournament at Graham Memorial.

Capturing second place were Fran Gilchrist and Gill Uzzle. Fourth place went to habitual winners Bill Caison and Dana Dixon.

In the North-South direction, Jean and John Earnhardt won second place. Dan Duke and Dick Potthoff captured third place.

Eleven student couples participated in the nine-table Mitchell movement duplicate bridge tournament.

Nixon's Neighbors

ATLANTA, Nov. 1—(AP)—The founder of the American Resettlement Foundation Inc. said today he understands Vice President Richard Nixon lives in a Washington neighborhood firmly restricted against Negroes and Jews.

Thus, added, State Rep. A. A. Fowler of Douglasville, Ga., the private subscription foundation doubtless would be unable to buy a home there for the resettlement of a "worthy and qualified" Negro family.

Another member of the foundation had suggested that it has an option on a $75,000 home in Nixon's neighborhood. Fowler said this is not true.

Tatum's Main Concern—Physical Condition

It seems that the Carolina football team is in much worse physical condition than was thought earlier in the week. In fact, the main concern of Coach Jim Tatum this week seems to be the physical fitness of his club as it prepares for South Carolina.

Tatum told sportswriters at his weekly press conference yesterday that he is worried about several positions, especially center and halfback.

The center problem, created by the injury of Ron Koes and Jim Davis, has forced Tatum to switch end Jim Jones to the pivot spot. Jones has not played a game at center since 1955 but knows the position and, Tatum hopes, will give the Tar Heels a lift at that vital spot. The other Tar Heel centers, Bill Hardison and Dick Need are both inexperienced.

At present, three Carolina halfbacks are on the injured list, and two will probably see only limited action, if any, against the Gamecocks.

Emil DeCantis is still in the infirmary with a concussion suffered against Tennessee, Don Coker is nursing a sprained ankle and Jim Schuler has not fully recovered from a culmination of injuries and re-injuries over the last three weeks. Schuler, however, is expected to be ready Saturday, at least for some action.

For the past three days, Tatum has ben working Jack Cummings at quarterback, Daley Goff, Larry Fredrick and Wade Smith at the halfback slots, and Giles Gaca at fullback.

Guard is another weak spot for the Tar Heels. Jack Lineberger is in tractions, suffering what is thought to be a pinched nerve in the neck and will probably miss Saturday's game. Tatum has shifted tackle Ralph Steele to Lineberger's post and has moved second string guard Don Stallings over to tackle. Ed Furjanic has been running at the other guard post.

Hawkins And Dixon Are Big Guns

South Carolina also has several infirmaties which will probably leave them below par Saturday.

Assistant Coach Fred Tullai gave a scouting report on the Gamecocks yesterday and stated that six of them had missed the Maryland game last week due to flu.' 'However," he added, "they should be better this week."

Of course, the loss of quarterback Bobby Bunch for the season is the biggest blow suffered by South Carolina this season. But, according to Tullai, sophomore signal-callers Stan Spears and W. L. Strickland are doing a good job for Warren Giese's club.

The big guns for the Gamecocks, though, are halfbacks Alex Hawkins and King Dixon. There is perhaps no finer backfield duo in the country and Tullai is high in his praise of these two boys, Dixon especially.

"Dixon is always a threat," Fred said. "He only weighs 165 pounds but he has a lot of heart. He gets hit hard but always comes back for more."

Don Johnson is the Gamecock's number one fullback and Tullai describes him as "a boy who can carry that ball right through you."

Option Pass Main Offensive Weapon

Tullai is of the opinion that the South Carolina line is as good as any the Tar Heels have or will face this season. He calls it a "terrific blocking unit." and singles out the play of tackle John Kompara and guard Tommy Addison as instrumental in the shaping of the front wall, which averages about 215.

The Gamecock's main offensive weapon is the option pass. South Carolina is primarily a running team, but Hawkins and Dixon are capable passers. The quarterbacks actually do little of the aerial work. Tatum was asked about this and stated that he knew of no other team which made less use of its quarterback's except Oklahoma.

Depth might give the Tar Heels the edge Saturday, despite the aforementioned injuries. Tullai indicated that the Gamecocks were a little less than average in depth, having an inexperienced second team.

Erickson Predicts Smaller Crowd

Sports shorts gathered from here and there.

Speaking of the Tennessee game, Jim Tatum has this to say. "I've never seen such blocking in my life. They started jumping over us so we started tackling high—then they started running under us."

Athletic Director Chuck Erickson figures the crowd at the South Carolina game will be less than the 34,000 attendance last Saturday. Regional television (ranging from Baltimore to Miami) will keep many fans in their living rooms.

Herman Hickman, famed football coach at Yale and now author of 'Hickman's Hunches' in 'Sports Illustrated' picked Tennessee over Carolina last week. It was the first time that Hickman had been successful in predicting the outcome of a Carolina game this sason.

Word from Woollen Gym has it that Tommy Kearns popped in 24 points in a 15-minute scrimmage session last week. Sounds encouraging! The cagers usually practice from 4-6 in the afternoon.

State College Sports Publicist, Bill Hensley has named the Wolfpack's great running combo of Dick Hunter and Dick Christy, "the Wolfpack's King Richards." Friend Bill also tells this one: "A buddy of ours is going back to the hospital for observation. He wants to get another look at the nurse."

An interesting sidelite from the Duke-Navy game this weekend is that, in the last four games, three have ended in ties. Duke, incidentally, trails in the all-time series, 9-3-4.

Tatum Says Suspension Not Changed By Council

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., Nov. 5 (AP)—Coach Jim Tatum said today that the status of the three Carolina football players he dropped from the squad Oct. 25 has not been changed by the action of the student council in finding the trio innocent of a campus code violation.

Dave Reed, co-captain and quarterback, and linemen Leo Russavage and Bernice Donatelli were dropped the day before North Carolina's game at Wake Forest. Tatum said they were guilty of breaking training regulatons. He did not elaborate.

The student council, in a unanimous finding announced yesterday said the three and had not violated the campus code.

Tatum pointed out that this had no connection with his rules for the football team and the men's football status was unchanged.

Both Goals Scored By Thompsom

The Tar Heel soccer team lead by the talented, scoring toe of center forward Mike Thompson defeated the booter squad of Davidson College 2-0 at Davidson yesterday.

Thompson made both goals for the Carolina squad which stayed in Davidson territory for most of the afternoon. The first goal came with three minutes left before the half, and the second was made after four minutes had gone by in the fourth period.

Seventy-five percent of all the points scored by the Tar Heels this year have been by Thompson, who has six to his credit. A little math shows that the entire Carolina squad has scored eight times this season.

Other outstanding Tar Heels were Bob Borden and Dave Corkey. Borden did a tremendous job on defence while right fullback Corkey, returning to the squad after being sick for three weeks, played a fine offensive game.

The game was the first the Tar Heels have been able to play since October 8 when they lost to Lynchburg College 4-3. Four straight scheduled contests were called of because a great number of Tar Heel and opposing booters had been affected by the flu.

Although they were very happy with the outcome of the contest the fact that they finally were able to have a contest caused much julibation in the Tar Heel Camp. As one of the team's members said," At last we got to play".

The Tar Heels will have only a short rest before they meet with their greatest rivals Maryland. The Terps who are always tough on a soccer field will be entertained by the Tar Heels next Friday afternoon on Fetzer Field.

Athletic Council Will Consider Bill Tonight

The Carolina Athletic Council will hold its regular monthly meeting tonight and one of the main items on the agenda will be a proposal by Student Body President, Sonny Evans, that students be represented on the Coaches Committee.

This committee interviews prospective coaches and recommends contract changes to the Athletic Council for their approval.

Evans made this proposal at the last meeting, saying, "they are the students coaches hired in our name, but yet we are not represented on the committee which chooses them."

UNDER NEW COACH

Carolina Swimmers Have Winning Tradition To Uphold This Year

Carolina swimmers are preparing for their 20th season which will find the undefeated ACC champions under a new coach, Pat Earey. Earey is the third varsity swimming coach in the 20 years history of Carolina swimming.

Carolina's first swimming coach, Dr. Dick Jamerson, came to the University in 1938. His and the university's first team in 1939 won two and lost five.

From then until he gave up the varsity coaching reigns at the end of the 1954 season, the Tar Heels compiled a record of 110 victories and only 10 loses.

Conference championships were won 13 times by Jamerson teams and six times the Tar Heels were undefeated. From 1939 through 1954, the Tar Heels were undefeated in conference meets before losing to N. C. State in 1955.

All-American recognition was won by many swimmers during this period; national championships and numerous collegiate and American records were likewise held by individual stars of this era.

1949 CHAMPIONSHIP

Coach Jamerson brought recognition to Carolina swimming by bringing the 1949 NCAA swimming championships to Chapel Hill, the first time this meet was ever held in the south, by his services on the NCAA swimming rules commitee from 198 to 1954, and as president of the College Swimming Coaches Association in 1951.

At the close of the 1954 season Jamerson, because of his duties in the department of physical education relinquished the varsity post.

Dr. Ralph Casey, his long time assistant, took over and during Casey's three years reign the Tar Heels compiled a fine 30-3-1 record with the 1957 team being undefeated and placing 5th in the NCAA championships.

Many of Casey's swimmers won national acclaim for their fine performances, namely Charlie Krepp, Bill Roth, Walt Rose, Phil Drake, Tony Schiffman, Tal Mahaffey and Mac McInnis.

BROTHER COMBO

Casey teamed up with his brother Willis, of N. C .State, and the two co-coached the combined teams of Carolina and State to the national indoor AUU title in 1956, upsetting an eight year reign by Yale.

In addition he served as president of the ACC coaches association, on the national AUU swimming rules committee and was chosen in 1955 by the AUU to conduct education clinics on swimming in the Far East.

Dr. Casey resigned this past summer to take a position on the faculty at Southern Illinois University.

Pat Earey, for the past five years a highly successful coach at Greensboro High School, thus became the third coach of Carolina Swimming. Earey's Greensboro teams have dominated prep school swimming in the southeast for the past three years, with several of his boys going on to be successful in college swimming.

STRONG RETURNEES

Earey has the majority of last year's undefeated team back as a nucleus for his first team.

The '57 freshman team was weaker than usual, but with the fine tradition of winning and under the expert guidance of Earey, Carolina supporters can look forward to another top-notch year.

REPUBLICANISM

The modern kind takes a blow in the belly says the editor on page two.

VOL. LXV NO. 42 | Complete UP Wire Service | CHAPEL HILL, NORTH CAROLINA, THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1957 | Offices in Graham Memorial | SIX PAGES THIS ISSUE

ELGART VOCALIST—Shown above is Don Forbes, vocalist featured with Les Elgart and his internationally-known orchestra which will play here for Germans Friday. A concert will begin at 3:30 p.m., with the Fall Germans Dance slated for 8 p.m.

Petitions Backer Says 1,000 Names Obtained

Wally Kuralt yesterday said he already has 'over a thousand signatures" to a petition calling for a recall election for editor of the Daily Tar Heel. One thousand and fifty signatures are needed to initiate the recall election.

In addition to the 100 or so petitions originally distributed, 100 more have since been printed and distributed, Kuralt said. He did not say who was responsible for these additional petitions.

Concerning a compulsory candidates' meeting held Monday night—which all candidates for the Nov. 12 election were required to attend—Kuralt said he did not know if anyone had attended with the intention of running for the Daily Tar Heel editorship.

So far no one has announced his candidacy for this office. This appeared to preclude the possibility that the recall election would be held during the regular fall elections since the deadline for candidates in this election was November 1.

The General Election Law states that "all nominations for office shall be presented . . .to the Election's Board not later than 9 class days prior to the established date for elections."

When asked if the petition had been presented to Student Body President Sonny Evans, Kuralt declared: "We're waiting until we get enough for sure."

Kuralt denied knowing just who plans to run and added that he was trying to stay clear of it.

"I'm not choosing any candidates and I'm not backing any candidates," he added.

Kuralt said he was sure enough names would be gathered to demand a recall election.

"We've had a lot of good cooperation from a lot of folks in getting these petitions signed," Kuralt stated.

This is the second recall petition at UNC in the last two years, both allegedly resulting from anti-Tatum editorials by DTH editors. The last petition resulted in a recall election against co-editers Ed Yoder and Louis Kraar. Yoder and Kraar were re-elected to the editorship.

'Free Flicks' Schedule Released For Semester

A schedule of Friday night "free flicks" has been released by Mike Strong, chairman of the CMAB Free film Committee.

"Flicks" have been scheduled every Friday night for this semester. They will be shown in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 10 p.m.

"It is hoped," Strong said, "that free flicks will be shown on Saturday nights as they were during September and October. The Free Film Committee is working on still operating within its budget securing Saturday films, while for the year."

The present confirmed schedule of Friday night "free flicks" is listed below.

Jan. 10—"Grapes of Wrath" with Henry Fonda.

Jan. 17—"The Searchers" (color) with John Wayne, Jeffrey Hunter and Ward Bond.

Jan. 31—"Rebel Without Cause" (color) with James Doan, Natie Wood and Sal Mineo.

Solons Will Meet Tonight

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

The session will be the last before the fall election .

A resolution "encouraging closer cooperation among colleges of the Atlantic Coast Conference in regard to visiting student seating arrangements at all athletic events," will be discussed by the Ways and Means Committee.

The bill was introduced last week by Dick Sessoms (UP).

Student Body President Sonny Evans has not yet formed a list of the members of the students to be on the board of investigate The Daily Tar Heel.

He said he would have " the committee settled in a few days."

Tuesday Is Ballot Day On Campus

Campus-wide elections will be held next Tuesday to fill key judicial, legislative and class posts on the UNC campus.

Art Sobel, election board chairman, said all day balloting will fill positions on the Men's and Women's Honor Council, Student Legislature, Student Council, and freshman, sophomore and junior class offices.

He urged that all students "take an active part in the elections." pointing out that winners in the ballot will "represent you for the coming year."

Sobel said ballot boxes will be placed in all dorms with the exceptions of Kenan and Connor. Kenan residents may vote at Mclver, and those in Connor, at Winston.

Town women may vote at Gerrard ng placed: Town Men's 1, Carolina nn; Town Men's 2, Scuttlebutt; Town Men's 3, Graham Memorial; nd Town Men's 4, Victory Village.

Town women may at Gerrard lall, the elections board chairman said.

Any student with a qualified excuse—including confinement to the nfirmary, absence from Chapel Hill, or other reasons approved by the elections board—may apply for an absentee ballott, Sobel said.

Applications for these ballots must e made to Sobel by 5 p. m. tomorrow and must be returned to the lections board by 6 p. m. on election day.

Sputniks May Harm Citizens

The furor over satellites in the sky may blind Americans to "the simple and basic tasks" of developing citizens, a Tar Heel educator declared here tonight.

Guy B. Phillips of Chapel Hill, a member of the State Board of Education, gave his warning in a speech prepared for delivery at the banquet session of the North Carolina School Principals Assn.

"We might lose the satellite race and not be ruined, but if we lose the race for a trained and educated citizenship, we will be lost," Phillips asserted.

He also reminded the school principals that "the south is in the throes of prejudice and fear which threaten the very existence of the region and of individual states." He made it plain he referred tothe issue of segregation in public schools when he added that "education is in the center of this issue. It is not easy task to stand by and wonder what tomorow will bring forth."

Phillips is a professor and former dean of the school of education at the University of Noth Carolina. Until recently, he served as executive secretary of the North Carolina School Boards Assn.

two-day gatherin of the sgchool

The banguet session concluded a principals association.

Although North Carolina is involved in the southern crisis, Phillips declared that the state "stands at the threshold of a new economic opportunity which can be capitalized upon through wise deadership and an educated and qualified citizenship."

Oppenheimer Gets Symposium Job Vaccine Clinic In Gerrard Today

DR. J. C. SITTERSON

Sitterson Cites Historians' Lag

"Preoccupation of Southern historians with the period of sectional conflict is a major deficiency in the writing of Southern history," stated Dr. J. Carlyle Sitterson, professor of history at UNC in a Wednesday address at Rice Institute.

Despite the impressive achievements of southern historians in the last half century and the great progress toward a full and objective history of the South, Dr. Sitterson said, "the approaching centennial of the Civil War had already diverted the energies of southern historians to that gerat conflict to the serious neglect of other significant and unexplored areas of the region's history."

Among these topics needing study, Dr. Sitterson mentioned the growth of Southern industry, the history of the Negro since Reconstruction, political party history in the 20th century, and the role of Southern congressional leadership in the 20th and late 19th centuries.

Also appearing on the panel discussion of the "Present Status of Southern History" were Professors Avery Craven of the University of Chicago, William Hesseltine of the University of Wisconsin, and Wendell Stephenson of the University of Oregon.

Final Plea Is Made By Physician

Threat of an Asian flu epidemic here was emphasized again today as plans were completed for a two-hour vaccine distribution clinic at Gerrard Hall.

University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth said the clinic will be held between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. today. Vaccine will be availabe at no cost to all UNC students.

Dr. Hedgpath emphasized that all vaccine not used in today's clinic, and a similar one slated tomorrow, will be "disposed of," presumably for use elsewhere in the state.

Medical authorities have urged all students here to take the Asian flu shots, with an eye to preventing a major outbreak of the disease in the Chape Hill community.

"Just because a person may have a mild cold is no reason why he shouldn't take advantage of the vaccine," Dr. Hedgpath said.

He said only those persons sick with a fever, or others allergic to eggs or chicken, should refuse to take the shots.

Clinics today and tomorrow were announced Tuesday after laboratory tests confirmed the presence of the Asian flu virus in earlier cases of influenza here.

At that time, Dr. Hedgpath said the tests showed that "some of the illnesses recently experienced on our campus were due to the Asian strain of influenza virus."

Officials formerly had planned to conduct only two clinics, both held last week, but disclosed plans for those today and tomorrow after receipt of the laboratory reports.

By Tuesday, only 1,300 students had been innoculated with the Asian flu vaccine, but the infirmary had on hand an additional 4,500 doses for use in the new clinics.

JERRY OPPENHEIMER

Frat Dorms Have Co-Mural

The dormitories will cooperate with the fraternities in some intramural athletics during the winter Tom Walters, Inter-Dormitory Council President, announced last night.

The plan, originated by Inter-Fraternity Council President Bill Redding, provides for teams of the same composition.

The details of the plan will be worked out by the intramural department of the university.

"It is a very fine idea on the part of Bill Redding, and we have had excellent cooperation from Coach Walter Rabb and his staff," commented Walters.

The IDC unanimously passed Bob Carter's motion to spend $131.50 of its activity fund in order to house one foreign student.

Usually the Student Legislature makes a special provision for this program in the IDC budget, but through an oversight it was left out last year.

Walters said that the dorms may if granted prior approval from the IDC, have open house in the social room for girls from 12-6 on Saturday afternoon.

Rudy Edwards, IDC social chairman, announced that this coming Saturday afternoon the IDC in cooperation with Graham Memorial will have a combo after the football game in Cobb Dorm Basement.

The IDC sold 50 blazers to make a profit of $100. The next blazer sale will be in the spring.

In an effort to stop unauthorized buying for the dorms, Mike Hayes announced that dorm officials have been given authorization cards which the merchants are suppose to ask to se before anything can be charged to a dorm.

Body Takes Other Important Action

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Carolina Symposium, under the direction of Chairman Sonny Hallford, met yesterday afternoon to hear reports from committees, appoint a new vice-chairman, Jerry Oppenheimer, and to announce chairmen for standing committees.

A report was heard from Al Goldsmith, chairman of the finance committee, who stated: "We have raised close to $2,500 at this point. I would like to thank the Interfraternity Council for a grant of $25 and the University Party for a donation of $50. Our anticipated budget is about $6,000."

Jimmy Wallace of the faculty, reporting for the program committee said: "I come to you with a great sense of urgency, for I can think of nothing at the present time that can exceed the excitement that I have concerning the 1958 Symposium.

"The Symposium of 1941 opened my eyes as a freshman and this year's should open up many eyes too. This year we will not discuss how to control the world, but rather how to survive.

"The first part of the program will be an investigation into the present technical and political situations. Secondly, we will look at our chances to recoup the losses we have incurred.

"We will try to map out a short range program to rectify our situation and a long range program. We will look chiefly into the American educational system in this part of the program.

"The third part of our program will be concerned with the spiritual and moral survival of the world. We will try to find an answer to the question: do we have to become like Russia to survive against her?"

At this time Chairman Hallford rose to express regret over the resignation of Connie Whitaker as vice-chairman. He then introduced Bill Geer, who spoke momentarily about the reason for the Executive Committee's recommending Jerry Oppenheimer for the vice-chairmanship.

He stated: "Upon Connie's resignation we felt that in the interest of time that we had to make a recommendation. I am very happy that Jerry has expressed willingness to undertake this responsibility and I hope that he will be able to realign the program committee which he will head immediately."

Oppenheimer was elected by acclamation and spoke briefly to the group stating: "There is very little to add to what has already been said here this afternoon. I would like to thank you all very much for the confidence that you have displayed in me.

"The undertakings of this job are tremendous and if it had not been for the efforts of many people, particularly Connie Whitaker, before my election, I would never have undertaken this job.

"We all owe a large vote of thanks to Connie for her continued interest in the Symposium. I hope to have some concrete reports to give you in a matter of weeks concerning speakers for the spring program."

Chairman Hallford made the following selections for committee chairman; social and hospitality committee, Lucie Crossland and David Biren; classroom and departmental seminar committee, John Raper.

Also: program commitee, Jerry Oppenheimer; organization and administration committee, David Parker; handbook committee, David Sloane; and finance committee, Al Goldsmith.

Also: Physical arrangements committee, Charles Pittman and Pat Adams; and exhibits committee, Evelyn Moore.

Also: office committee, Mary Jane Fisher; and publicity committee Charlie Huntington general chairman with Dick Robinson handling leaflets and poster and Davis Young in charge of newspaper publicity.

Chairman Hallford issued the following statement to the DTH after the meeting concerning the resignation of Miss Whitaker and the selection of Oppenheimer to replace her.

"I am indeed happy with the choice of Jerry as the new vice-chairman of the Symposium.

"At the same time I express regret that Connie Whitaker has ever that we are indeed fortunate been forced to resign. I feel how to have Jerry step in at this time considering the circumstances. His main responsibility will be as chairman of the program committee.

"I look forward to the work ahead of us and feel confident that we will be able to continue moving ahead in determining our program for the Spring of '58 under Jerry's leadership."

WERE OBJECTS REAL?

'No Evidence' Exists, Says NORAD Official

COLORDO SPRINGS, Colo. Nov. 6 (AP)—The North America Air Defense Command reported today it received 46 reports of unidentifed objects from throughout the nation last night but only three, including one from Kearny Neb., "deserved futher study."

Capt. Andy Beasley, NORAD public information officer, said two Air Force invesigators were sent to Kearney after a Californian, R. O. Schmidt, told of sighting a cigar-shaped object on a Nebraska prairie and chatting with four men and two women in it.

Beasley said the command had not yet decided whether to asign inspectors to the two other reported sightings. He did not say where these reports came from.

Whenever such a story is carried by mapor news networks, Beasley added, "We get a rash of reports" on unidentified objects.

"It takes only one report to set off such rash," he said.

NORAD Said Monday it had sent an investigator to Reese Air Force Base, Lubbock, Tex., to probe reports that a "brilliant colored, eggshaped object" had stalled automobiles in West Texas and New Mexico. This investigator was due to return to command headquarters today.

"The accumulated date from our investigations are forwarded through the Air Technical Intelligence Center at Wright-Patterson AFB at Dayton, Ohio, to the Pertagon, and this information is digested and brought up in statistical form from there,' Beasley said.

Want To Pledge Phi Beta Kappa

The hallowed reputation of the honorary Phi Beta Kappa is in jeopardy.

Somebody has misconstrude the whole purpose and function of Phi Bete.

It seems that a letter was sent this week addressed to the "rushing chairman of Phi Beta Kappa."

This letter was recommending consideration of a certain boy for membership in Phi Bete.

Society Rejects Resolution To Remove Tatum

By DON SHAW

A resolution calling for the removal of Tarheel Coach Jim Tatum was rejected at a meeting of the Philanthropic Society Tuesday. The measure was defeated by a vote of 4-11.

The resolution, introduced by Rep. Don Jacobs of the Ways and Means Committee, urged the firing of Tatum "in the interests of peace and harmony and for the preservation of the high academic standards of the University of North Carolina."

Jacobs said that few men have brought more controversy to the campus of UNC than Tatum. He is important, he said, is the way you play the game.

Speaking in opposition to the measure. Rep. David Mathews said. "Mr. Tatum was hired for one purpose—to build a winning team." The removal of other UNC coaches was blamed on their failure to do this.

The statement was made by Steve Moss, an alumnus of the Dialectic Society, that "all great men are controversial" and if we want a winning team, we want Tatum.

The opponents of the bill generally maintained that Tatum would be able to build up the Tarheel team within a year. They could see no point that the Daily Tarl Heel may have fanned this controversy.

Americans were accused of being more interested in watching a Saturday football game than launching a "Sputnik" of its own.

Rep. Clarence Simpson furthered these statements by implying that the football scholarships provided by the university could very well rank UNC football as professionalism.

In answer to Tatum's question in the Nov. 2 issue of The Saturday Evening Post, " who can be proud of a losing Team?", Rep. Ronnie Pruett said, "we're proud of our team-win or lose." The thing that reason for removing him because he UNC team had not immediately jumped to the top of national ratings.

The proponents of the bill were outspoken in their support of the measure. One speaker said, "I'm in favor of throwing him out in the woods." Others felt that Tatum" harmful to the student body of the University" and "a discredit to this institution."

"Can a crude tyrant gain the respect of his players?" was asked by another. The meeting was held on the top floor of New East building.

World In Brief

California Governor

WASHINGTON, Nov. 6. (UP)—Edmund G. (Pat) Brown, California's Democratic attorney general, expressed confidence today he'll be elected governor next year. He said the issues will include Russia's Sputnik and what he termed a "deal" among Republican candidates.

Whoever wins could be a big man in 1960 presidential politics, so the pre-election maneuvering is getting more than usual attention.

Brown held a news conference here to follow up one yesterday at which Gov. Goodwin J. Knight announced he was giving up his bid for re-election and would run instead for the Republican senatorial nomination.

Knight's action left the GOP gubernatorial nomination open to Sen. William F. Knowland. Brown is the only Democrat who has announced for governor.

Red Attack

MOSCOW, Nov. 6. (UP)—Nikita Khrushchev and Mao Tze-Tung, the two top men in world communism, made a double-barreled attack today on the United States, gibing at its lag on launching Sputniks and accusing it of plotting trouble all over the world.

Khrushchev, the Soviet party boss, and Mao, the master of Red China, spoke from the same platform before 17,000 delegates here from 60 nations to mark the 40th anniversary of the Bolshevik Revolution.

Meeting Is Set For Town Girls

Members of the Town Girls Association will meet tonight to hear reports on various campus organization.

The meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in the parlor of McIver Dormitory.

Guest speakers at the meeting wil be: Belle Corey from the YWCA, Frances Reynolds of the Women's Athletic Association, Mary Leggett Browning of the Daily Tar Heel, Betsy McKinnon of the Independent Women's Association and Julia Ann Crater of the Women's Residence Council.

Republican Failures And Little Caesars . . .

Democratic gains are sweeping the nation and the forces of Eisenhower's Modern Republicanism are suffering severe set-backs.

Associated Press releases tell the story:

New York, Nov. 5—"Democratic Mayor Robert F. Wagner won re-election tonight by a smashing margin over Republican Robert K. Christenberry, who ran with President Eisenhower's backing. With three-quarters of the vote counted, Wagner led by about 700-000 votes."

Newark, N. J., Nov. 5—"Democratic Gov. Robert Meyner of New Jersey was re-elected to a second term tonight. Meyner led Republican state Sen. Malcolm S. Forbes by 155,000 votes with slightly more than half the ballots counted. Only a year ago, President Eisenhower carried New Jersey by 760,000 votes."

Richmond, Va., Nov. 5, "Democrat J. Lindsay Almond Jr. today won election as governor of Virginia under the Byrd organization banner of massive resistance to racial integration in the public schools."

It is indeed admirable that the electorate—all over the nation—is realizing that Eisenhower's adviser-to-golf-course brand of administration is wholly inadequate to handle the entangling problems which are arising internally, in the Middle East and as a result of Soviet advances in the technological realm.

There is only one good thing to be said for the Eisenhower administration: It is not fostering the growth of "Caesarism" in American, as Amoury de Riencourt termed the growth of presidential supremacy in U. S. News and World Report — at least it is not fostering the growth of homogeneous Caesarism.

But the Eisenhower administration is definitely fostering growth of heterogeneous Caesarism, or departmental and individual palace guard Caesarism.

That is to say, individuals—Eisenhower's advisers—are developing into Little Autonomous Caesars. And President Eisenhower lacks the vitality to assert strong presidential leadership in a hectic time when leadership is so drastically needed.

The United States should assert forceful leadership in the Middle East crisis. We have taken a blow in the democratic guts in the technological cold war. We must cover with diplomatic leadership.

Turkey must be backed in the Turkish - Syrian - Arab disputes which threaten a Middle East conflagration. Soviet-backed Arab nationalism must not be allowed to creep over Turkey with Godless communistic, parasitic effects.

The United States and United Sates foreign policy must be more forceful now than ever before.

And President Eisenhower is obviously not the forceful leader which Americanism needs.

The voters are discovering this weakness.

And the Democrats are making noticeable progress.

Additional Housing Is Wholly Inadequate

Married student housing in Chapel Hill has long been a knotty and unsolved problem.

Thus we are delighted to hear that University administrative officials have announced plans for an additional 208 units of married housing.

But, at the same time, North Carolina State College is slated to get some 500 units of additional married housing. And the University here has some 1,500 more student enrollment than that at State.

Married student housing here is wholly inadequate—both in over all facilities and type of facilities. some of the present units are disgraceful fire hazards. And there are over 200 families currently on the housing waiting list.

While we are extremely happy to note that some alleviating arrangements are being made—through Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency bonds, self-liquidating bonds—it appaling to note a reaffirmation for our thought that State College always gets the breaks when facility increases come about.

We definitely do not feel that 200 additional units of married housing is sufficient to handle the inundating tide of married student enrollment. The number of married studentsis increasing vigorously in proportion to the number of unmarried students.

We are gratified that additional housing is being provided. But we do not feel the addition is sufficient.

'X' Denotes Un-Modern

Modern living in Chapel Hill suffers a set-back each and every time students or visitors find it necessary to cast their eyes at unsightly, obsolete and inadequate "temporary" classroom buildings on the campus.

Unsightly "X" buildings—half-rotten wooden structures built to accomodate the tide of students who flooded the campus after World War II—were labeled "temporary" extensions of facilities.

But, as Dr. Hugh T. Lefler always says, temporary has surely come to mean permanent.

Modern Living continues to suffer. And State College continues to receive an abundance of classroom buildings and dormitories. We envy State. We don't blame State officials.

We blame a partisan General Assembly, and ask that Modern Living in Chapel Hill be restored by construction of buildings to replace the unsightly "X" buildings.

"X" marks the spot of "un-Modern Living."

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Segregation II: Education And Office-Holding

Curtis Gans

Segregation II:

It is evident that the colored people's drive for equality takes more forms than just a drive for equality under the law. They want equality of opportunity, both educationally and economically. They also want social equality.

It is the last factor that the majority of the people of the south and indeed many people of the north are so afraid of. But, if this is the basic fear in those who oppose integration, then these fears are ungrounded in fact.

It remains a simple fact of history that the group that is in the majority never loses its social superiority no matter what rights, legal and otherwise, it grants to the minority groups.

Catholics are still looked askance at, and Jews have not the same rights as Protestants in many sections of the country. Lodgings are sometimes prohibited members of these religious groups, and some residential areas have explicit rules restricting the building of houses to only the Protestant groups.

At the same time the Jews and Catholics will surround themselves with their like, as in New York and Florida, and further heighten the social tension, although trying to form a buttres against social pressure.

It is the prerogative of any group or individual to choose its friends and maintain its prejudices provided that it does not infringe on the rights of other individuals or groups. Thus, it may be only until general good will prevails and mutual understanding is common, that the colored person or any other minority group can attain social equality. It might be considered an ideal to be sought, but it is evident that it cannot be legislated without infringing on the rights of the majority group.

Yet, if this type of social integration is as improbable as districts like New York's Harlem seem to suggest, then there should be no qualms on the part of the southerner or the northern anti-integrationist to giving the colored people equal rights and opportunity. Yet, there are, and some of it is based on the stigma of Reconstruction, and some is based on the fear of the colored people taking the power in the south.

There is one thing certain. Reconstruction wrought such havoc that only now is there any hope for colored equality. The harmful effects of Sherman, the imposition of exploiting carpetbaggers, and the pushing of the colored people into office in which they had little or no experience and in which they had little or no authority thanks to the carpetbagging influence, has set back the drive for a true democracy in America eighty years.

The Reconstruction Era is long gone, and it is time for the citizens of the south to "bind up their wounds" and stop the senseless bearing of grudges. It is time for them to take a critcial look at a democratic system, and realize that the second-class citizenship they are forcing the colored person into smells of aristocracy. It is time to reaffirm the equality of all citizens under law.

The second objection stands, in a democracy, on even more tenuous grounds. For if the colored person is a citizen with equal political rights as the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments of the Constitution entitles them to, they should and must test their capabilities with that of others at the polls. If the colored population is in a majority and the main body of them vote, then the colored person nominated should probably win if he is thought capable by the rest of the colored people and by the few whites that are not blinded by the color line.

Any circumvention of the freedom to vote and the freedom to test capabilities in the battlefield of political campaign is a denial of some of the fundamental precepts of democracy. It is the denial of the freedom of speech for the individual and the right to vote for the group. No amount of property qualifications, poll taxes, and literacy tests can excuse this.

It is these legal edifices of rationalization of the denial of rights that must be stripped from the laws of the states. It is these laws that the Civil Rights Bill of the last session of Congress was aimed.

Freedom of the ballot box is but one of the inequalities that exist between citizens. Perhaps equality of opportunity in all fields of human endeavor is equally important. However, the whole idea of equality of opportunity is grounded in education, for if the colored person is to be a capable citizen, qualified for his job, and an able administrator, if so elected or appointed, a sound educational background is necessary.

Education is perhaps the foundation on which the basis for separation stands. It must be equalized, so that all citizens, not just a few can take an equal part in American life.

Reader To Reader, Retort On Southland

DEAR MR. TURNIPSEED:

I have sat back and read your attempts to put forth your wonderful, moral, intelligent and Christian views. I can hardly agree with your view on Mr. Bass' immaturity as I feel he has shown a great deal of maturarity in that he has had the courage to voice his beliefs. I strongly believe that it is an editor's prerogative to do so. I have not, as yet, read any of his editorials which I thought were incompetent or full of untruths; yet I find in your letter a great deal of immaturity and a great many statements which I doubt you could support if you were asked to. If you can find the 99 per cent of the people of Georgia who back their governor in his stand against the ruling of the Supreme Court, then I will humbly apologize you.

If you had come right out and said that you did not believe in integration because you simply did not want to associate with the Negro in any way, at least you would be on solid ground as no one can force you to associate with anyone you do not wish to. If you think the Sherman's "March on Georgia" was a deplorable event, you are still on solid ground. If you think that the Reconstruction period was a blot in American history, you are also right. And, even if you wish to say that Lee was the greatest general in the Civil War, I still will say you are right. But what are you saying? It appears to me that you are saying that the reason the Negro is not allowed to integrate is because of the North's treatment of the South from the Civil War through the Reconstruction period. Come now, if you are expressing the views of the Deep South, let us get our facts straight. Do you mean the the "greatest" people anywhere" are refusing to let the Negroes into their schools in the year of 1957 because of what the North did a hundred years ago? Even the most immature person knows that the Negro had nothing to do directly with the March on Georgia and was not directly responsible for his being eleteced to the governorship of Georgia. It appears to me that you have done a great injustice to the people of Georgia and also the people of the South. I do not agree with segregation, but I can hardly believe that men are denying rights of other because of what the North did so long ago.

If you wish to speak for the people of the South, why not fight your battle in the year of 1957 and not back in the days of the Civil War? Why whip a statistic out of the air and label Georgia to it? At least the nine "old" men in Washington are looking to the future whereas the "old" people in the state of Georgia are still hanging on to bygone days. Those days are gone, Mr. Turnipseed—FOREVER.

Informed Dogs & Romantic Moons

Gary Nichols

Well, it looks like the "Man in the Moon" is obsolete now.

I've been reading that the Soviet sequel to Muttnik will be a rocket carrying apes into space.

It looks like we're going to have all kinds of animals floating around above us.

Think of the new boost this will give to the love game and lovers. Not only can they have "our song" but "our moon." (You know, the one carrying Sam, the ape or Curly, the dog).

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

I also read that some students at Edinburgh University got together and nominated a fellow by the name of James Miller to run for honorary rector, titular head of the university.

He is reported to have accepted the nomination in his office—a park bench.

It seems Miller is a hobo.

I wonder why the students here don't put a little more variety into their games.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Have you noticed the way the campus dogs are shying away from Phillips?

I spotted a man in a white coat trying to coax a dog in there the other day. News travels fast though.

I've always claimed we had some of the most informed dogs in the state on our campus.

Journalism School And Suppression?

EDITOR:

The editor of the Daily Tar Heel, in expressing a liberal point of view on national and local matters, is not speaking FOR HIMSELF ALONE.

I agree with him, I welcome his words— and I firmly believe that many others do so.

Dean Luxon's turn-about is interesting. If the student body can recall an editor every month or two, who would want the job? The paper would die, or revert to the Department of Journalism, where it would become one more echo of faculty opinion.

This is the student opinion I recognize in the Daily Tar Heel. To write as Kuralt does, as if Editor Bass is talking on one side of the question only, is ABSURD. Read Turnipseed Nov. 5. That kind of backward-looking is entitled to its space, but it is pitiful as compared with the vigorous stand taken by The Daily Tar Heel on the questions of the day, as well as on campus matters.

MARY L. HACKBERRY

On Frat Pins:

EDITOR:

Instead of replying to ridiculous statements in Bob Browning's letter to the editor which appeared in The Daily Tar Heel on Nov. 5, 1957, I shall take the advice of David Hume and "keep clear of literary squabbles."

However, if Mr. Browning would like to engage in open debate on my stand that the placing of trash cans in the quadrangles will not "improve the appearance of our front yard," or the fact that I am not the University Party floorleader in the legislature and send signals to no one, or the merits and demerits of Ivy League clothing, or any other such lofty topics, I will be more than happy to be an active participant.

Mr. Browning, if the wearing of my fraternity pin causes so much commotion, what happens when the president of the student body wears his?

Also about my fraternity pin, it is the exact same as the introducer of the "trash can" resolution is aspiring to wear.

EDWIN LEVY JR.

On Dorm Spirit:

EDITOR:

For duty over and beyond the call of duty our hats are off to Lewis Dormitory. It seemed all heads were turned in its direction Saturday during the homecoming festivities. The attention was centered around a fascinating display created on the outside wall. And created it was—there must have been great effort put forth to come up with such an effective and much-talked-about display.

Carolina needs more of this interest, this effort—

ED PROESCHER

On Taste:

EDITOR:

In my opinion, both factions that have expressed views on the issue over a recall vote for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel have missed the point that both bothers the greater mass of the students. I believe that, rather than incompetence, the editor has displayed poor taste.

With one notable exception known to all, previous editors have, on occasion, expressed views converse to "popular opinion" without incurring measurable wrath, much less active consideration of a recall vote. Something else is wrong with Bass's editorials.

I believe that Editor Bass first began losing the respect of his readers with the wording of several editorials. They sounded like excerpts from a dictionary. The final stroke was his commercial and childish tone in recent editorials, and his unwarranted snide remarks of poor taste suffixed to several uncomplimentary letters to the editor.

To me, these things show inexcusable bad taste and are insults to the mentality of his readers.

UNC Honorary Society Admits 30 New Cadets

Thirty outstanding Air Force ROTC basic cadets at UNC have been pledged by the Alease Saunders Squadron of the Sabre Air Command.

Cadet Maj. Joel Vickers of Durham, squadron commander, announced selection of new members for the honorary military society, which was set up at UNC in the spring of 1955.

The SAC pledges include Franklin L Adams Jr., Rowland; Robert P. Aldreidge Jr. and John F. Wily, Durham; Odus D. Ambrose, Washington; Michael W. Bell, Belcross; Richard B. Bergren, Kinston; Reid H. Brawley and Thomas C. Guerrant III, Charlotte.

Millard L. Bryant, Leaksville; Michael L. Byers, Cornelius; Joseph C. Cordlie Jr. and Charles L. Wrye, Greensboro; Donald B. Fogleman, Burlington; Billy G. Kent, Cary; James R. McNeill, Sanford; Paul T. Marshburn Jr., Wilmington.

David A. Parker, Lexington; Howard E. Pope, Lillington; Eddie K. Roberts, Wendell; Lewis D Sanders, Willow Springs; Robert R. Scott, Pinetops; Luther L. Walker, Rockingham; and Edwin L. Worsley, Rocky Mount.

Others named were Bennett G. Denemark, Sumter, S. C.; Bruce A. Brand, Delray Beach, Fla.; Thomas M. Forbes, River Edge, N. J.; John R. Hester, Dade City, Fla.; John M. Hyde II, Ann Arbor, Mich.; Robert B. Silliman, Auburndale, Mass.; and Harry A. Usher, Northport, N. Y.

The squadron's information services officer, Cadet First Lt. Richard G. Rhye of Morven, is directing the pledge program for the 30 cadets.

UNC Students To Teach Here

A total of 13 student teachers from UNC will begin their teaching duties in the Chapel Hill City Schools Monday, Nov. 18, it has been announced by Arnold Perry, Dean of the UNC School of Education.

There are 78 student teachers from UNC located in schools throughout the state. Of this total 31 are teaching in elementary schools. There are 16 teachers of English, 17 teachers of social studies and 8 teachers of math. Four students teachers are instructors of boys' physical education and two are instructors of music.

At the Chapel Hill Elementary school are Margaret Beam, Violet Ponder, Betty Knox, Charlotte Ledford, Patsy Miller and Peggy Mitchell. The following student teachers are at Chapel Hill High school: Mrs. Mary H. Blount, James Kincaid, Elizabeth, Thompson, Nola Hatten, Mrs. Eleanor Briley, Mrs. Sarah Abernethy and Russell Nolan Perry.

Insurance Is Clarified Here

Claims procedure for student insurance policies seems to be causing some confusion, according to Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs.

Jefferies, has called attention to the fact that notification of injury or sickness must be reported to Chamblee Insurance Agency within a month after the accident or end of the sickness.

Jefferies said that some students have failed to get benefits from their policies because they waited longer than the month deadline in filing claims.

In case of sickness or accident, Jefferies said students should report to the University Infirmary or office of the Dean of Student Affairs, or, if away from the campus, students should secure treatment and then obtain claim instructions from the University Infirmary or office of the Dean of Student Affairs.

Jefferies said that enrollments in the two accident and health insurance policies for UNC students are still being accepted. Any interested student is asked to come by the office of the Dean of Student Affairs.

Students On Bridge

A squeeze does not often occur at the bridge table, but when it does, it is great fun to execute.

Today's hand (Board No. 22, Monday night's game) is not a true squeeze until South can sneak by East's king of hearts and pick up the queen. But since that is precisely what happened, let's see how nine cards in the majors ultimately "broke" the East hand.

No trump squeeze for seven.

The bidding: E- W Vul.

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
PASS	PASS	1D	1S
2H	PASS	3C	PASS
3NT	(ALL PASS)

But first, a comment on the bidding. Its terrible, and both North and South contributed to their failure to bid slam in no trump. South erred when he bid two-hearts: his better bid is two-no trump. This shows a maximum or near- maximum passed hand and promises a stopper in spades, the unit in which East overcalled.

North erred by pasing 3NT. With three aces and the beautiful six card diamond suit, North should have immediately placed the contract at six no trump. Probably, however, South's johnny-come-late show of the spade stopper made North rightly fear the spade suit, and he settled for the surer no trump game.

The play is the interesting thing, though. West obediently opened the jack of spades, South taking the trick with the queen. South tested diamonds, knew that the suit could be picked up when both adversaries followed to the play of the ace. It was then that South stole the queen of hearts. He led low from dummy and East, having heard South's two-heart bid, felt he could safely wait a round or two before taking his king. So East played low and South won with his queen. It was now that South got the glint of seven in his eye.

South ran off the remaining five diamonds and his two high clubs. South threw off three hearts from his hand, and was ready for trick eleven holding blanked nine of spades and the ace and nine of hearts in the dummy and holding ace eight of spades and blank eight of hearts in his own hand.

But look what happens to poor East as he has to find five discards. East must bare down at trick eleven either to king seven of spades and the blanked king of hearts or to the king and jack of hearts and the blanked king of spades. Either way East's hand is ruined. By careful counting, South will know which way East stripes down to, and South will simply pick up two tricks in whichever suit East bares down to one in, and the thirteenth trick in the other suit.

It was said originally that East has one card too many in the major suits. This is literally true. Pull one card out of either major suit, give it to West, and give East one of West's diamonds or clubs in exchange, and the squeeze fails. Try it and see.

What encouraged South to believe the squeeze might be there. Inference - all over the place. When South slipped by with the queen of hearts, he felt relatively sure he was home. Here's why:

East's vulnerable overcall in spades shows at least five in the suit. But with South holding the ace and queen of the suit, and West opening the jack, South feels certain that East must hold six or seven to make so risky a bid. (Give East every outstanding honor card and he won't hold but ten in high point count.

But it is the quen of hearts that gives away the East hand. East becomes marked with the king of the suit. And to be marked with the king also marks him for at least three hearts; for the king will be bare and can be picked up if East has only two. Therefore, East becomes marked with six spades and three hearts headed by the king, and South is relatively sure his squeeze will succeed.

Miss Marsh Has Lead In 'Judith'

By CURTIS GANS

Carolyn Marsh, graduate student in English, will play the female lead, Judith, in the Jean Giradoux play of the same name to be presented in the Main Lounge of Graham Memorial December 8-9. The presentation will be the initial Petite Dramatique production of the year.

The story revolves around a prophecy that Judith can save the people of Israel from defeat and destruction at the hands of barbarians led by Holofernes, by giving herself to him.

The play, derived from the story of Judith is the Apocrypha, tells the story of a proud, wealthy girl who, in relenting against her uncle's wishes and giving herself to Holofernes, discovers what is perhaps her real self. This self's conflict with society is one of the themes exploited in the play.

Harry Moore, art major, will play the role of Holofernes, the barbarian king to whom Judith comes and who understands Judith enough to give her a full understanding of herself.

Leon Rooke, author of "The Thief and the Hunchback" and star of last year's Petite Dramatique production "Caligula," will play the part of the Grand Rabbi who persuades Judith to fulfill her mission.

The character of John, who is Judith's fiance and who tries to persuade Judith not to give herself to Holofernes, will be played by Anthony Wolfe, former drama critic of the Daily Tar Heel.

Nancy Greene, graduate English student and a graduate of the Dramatic Arts Dept., will direct the play. The producer of the play will be Seamon Gottlieb, chairman of the GMAB Petite Dramatiques committee.

Ben Clymer, Cauchon in the Playmaker's production of "The Lark," will play Judith's uncle Joseph, who is strongly opposed to her going to Holofernes.

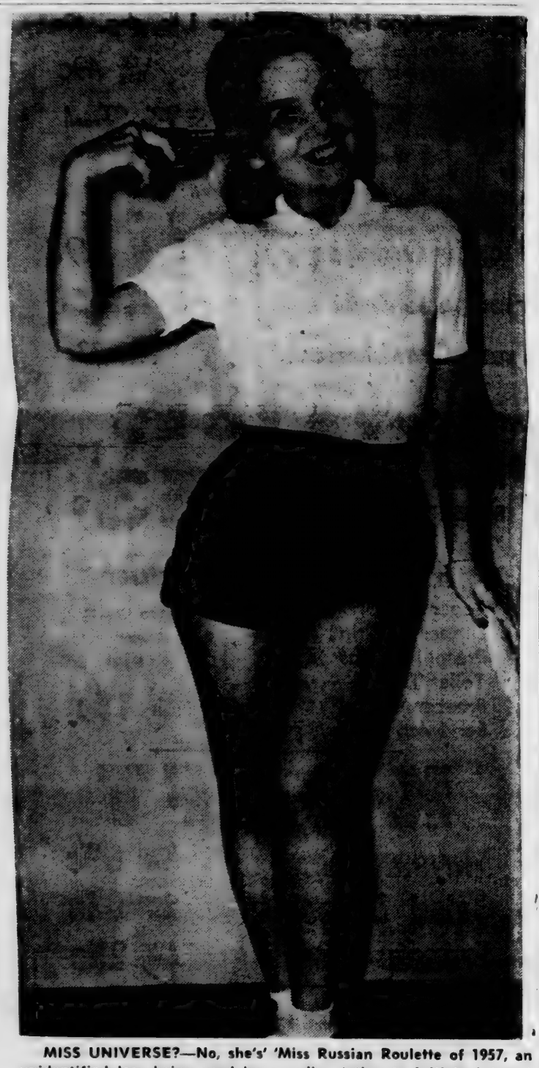
The part of the prostitute Susanna, who wants to protect Judith's virginity, will be portrayed by Ann Bachman, who did considerable dramatic work at St. Mary's Junior College in Raleigh.

Betty Rhodes who was in the Playmaker production of "The Lark," will play the part of Sarah, the procuress.

The part of Egon, who takes the place of Holofernes initially in order to taunt Judith, will be played by Jim Tyndall, a music major and part of the Playmaker production of "Brigadoon" last year.

Harold Williamson who played in the Playmkaer productions of "Cat in Gloves" and "Stranger in the Land" will portray the drunken guard who becomes, later, the voice of God.

Others in the cast include: Bob Huffman as the servant, Larry Anderson as the Cantor, Bill Anderson and Lew Hardee as Uri and Atta, servants to Holofernes, and Curtis Gans as the prophet.



Handling the lighting for the play will be Rand Bailey. The property manager of the production will be Glenna Meginnis and Curtis Gans wil be stage manager.

Asiatic Data To Be Shown

The University library will exhibit material on the various Asiatic countries and states during the month of November, it was announced yesterday by Mrs. Myra Lauterer of the library staff.

This exhibition will be presented in connection with a UNESCO-sponsored 'Asia Month" during which more than 1,000 people from Asia and the United States will attend a San Francisco conference dealing with cooperation between Asia and this country.

Most of the pictures come from the library's Jacocks Collection of prints, it was announced.

N. C. Race Trouble

DENTON, Nov. 6. (AP)—Rumors that Negroes might try to enroll in white schools here apparently spurred white teenagers to toss firecackers, rocks and names at a Negro man.

Denton Police Chief T. R. Gallimore said today he is still investigating the race incident that shocked this normally peaceful little town last Sunday afternoon.

Location Changed For Kennedy Talk

Robert F. Kennedy's speech November 12 will be held at 8:15 p.m. in Hill Hall instead of the Institute of Government as previously announced.

The change in location for the speech was made so that more people might have an opportunity to hear Kennedy.

Kennedy is chief counsel for the Senate Rackets Committee, which is investigating improper activities in the labor and management field.

Kennedy's address will be the second of the Heck Lectures Series presented by the Law Student Association this year.

Decorations Said Improved

According to Mark Cherry, German Club president, decorations for this year's German Club dance will be more elaborate than in former years.

Decorations will be of ivy and palm trees with subdued lighting.

The concert will begin at 3:30 p.m. tomorow in Memorial Hill, and the dance will be from 9 p.m. until midnight in Woollen gymnasium. Music will be provided by Les Elgart and his 16-piece dance band, considered the number one college dance band in the U.S.

The Washboard Bard, negro combo from Sea Island, Ga., will give a short performance at the dance during intermission.

The German Club representatives, officials, and their dates will be presented in a figure at 10 p.m

German Club President Cherry stated, "I'd like to make a formal plea for attendance at the dance especially among the freshmen. I think Elgart will provide excellent dance music."

He added that he hopes UNC girls will urge their dates to escort them to the dance.

Rev. Zabriskie Will Deliver Sermons Here

The Rev. Philip T. Zabriskie, Director of College Work, National Council of the Episcopal Church, will bring "The Mission of the Church to the Campus" from Sunday, Nov. 10 through Tuesday, Nov. 12.

He will preach a series of four sermons at the Chapel of the Cross as this fall's Preaching Mission of the Episcopal student Congregation.

Rev. Zabriskie, a Princeton graduate, was a Rhodes scholar at Balliol College, Oxford, England, where he studied philosophy for one year and economics for one year, and was on the football and tennis teams.

He returned to the United States and entered the Virginia Theological Seminary, where his father was a former dean. He was ordained in 1955.

Prior to his work with the Division of College Work, Rev. Zabriskie was assistant rector of Grace Church, Amherst, Mass., and assistant chaplain at Amherst College.

Rev. Zabriskie was in 1947 a delegate representing the National Council's Division of College Work at the Second World Conference of Christian Youth, held in Oslo, Norway, and he represented the National Youth Commission at the young people's section of the First Assembly of the World Council of Churches at Amsterdam in 1947. He was chairman of the Triennial Youth Convention held in San Francisco in September, 1949.

Rev. Zabriskie will preach Sunday, Nov. 10, at 11 a.m. and that evening at 7:30. Monday, Nov. 11, and Tuesday, Nov. 12, he will preach two evening sermons, both at 7:30.

The Chapel of the Cross is next to the Morehead Planetarium.

Muttnik Pooch OK

LONDON, Nov. 6. (AP)—Soviet scientists reported tonight that Laika the space dog is still alive and in satisfactory condition after 54 trips around the earth in Sputnik II.

A Moscow radio broadcast said both Russia's earth satellites are under constant watch by scientific stations. It added:

"According to data supplied by telemetrical stations the condition of the animal is satisfactory."

Cameras Would See Trip To Moon

WASHINGTON Nov. 6 (AP)—If the Russians shoot the moon this week, you can expect to see pictures of the historic event in the newspapers within a few hours.

Unless, or course, the rocket goofs and lands on the dark side of the moon. Scientists say that could happen.

Nobody in the west knows whether the Soviets are attempting an immediate rocket hit on the moon. But they've been saying they can do it, and tomorow's 40th anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution would be an appropriate time.

So sky-watchers around the world were keeping their telescopic eyes fixed on the moon tonight—just in case.

At the Naval observatory ere, for instance, astronomers are keeping the earth's original satellite under close scrutiny. And cameras are attached to their telescopes, ready to photograph anything that may happen.

This is not too unusual. The Navy sky-searchers have been paying special attention to the moon for months as part of a project in connection with the International Geophysical Year. But they'll be turning out in unusually large numbers for the next few nights.

"We're not just looking to see if a red star suddenly looms on the moon," says Cmdr. W. M. Robinson.

South's Existence Said Threatened

ASHEVILLE, Nov. 6 — A leading North Carolina educator told the state's principals meeting here Wednesday night that "The South is in the throes of prejudice and fear which threaten the very existence of the region and of individual states.

"Education is in the center of this issue," continued Guy B. Phillips of Chapel Hill. "It is no easy task to stand by and wonder what tomorrow will bring forth."

Phillips, a member of the State Board of Education, is a professor and former dean of the School of Education at UNC. He was until recently executive secretary of the North Carolina School Boards Assn.

He addressed the banquet session of the N. C. School Principals Association, winding up a two-day gathering.

Phillips challenged the individuals to greater understanding of their tasks in the modern day and a more courageous and creative leadership for public education.

Stressing that the level of leadership determines the quality performance of personnel, he told the principals that they are 'in key positions, as they work daily with 35,000 teachers who are in charge of more than 1,000,000 school children."

Although involved in the Southern crisis, Phillips said, "North Carolina stands at the threshold of a new economic opportunity which can be capitalized upon through wise leadership and an educated and qualified citizenship."

Phillips warned that Americans "may be so concerned about trying to see the new satellites encircling the world that they become blind to the simple and basic task of everyday development of citizens.

"We might lose the satellite race and not be ruined, but if we lose the race for a trained and educated citizenship we will be lost,' he said.

Phillips challenged the principals to a new emphasis on sound and effective experimentation. "The discovery of new ideas in education is common, but their dissemination is exceedingly slow. Could it be fear of change, and unwillingness to experiment that forms roadblocks on the way to better educational practice, or is it mere human inertia?"

In concluding the speaker said that in setting this stage for the new day there is little time for changing the scenery. "Such change must be made quickly while the play goes on. Rapidity of action is essential and will continue to increase as the jet-propelled era expands. This calls for vision, imagination and courage but it does not call for foolhardiness and short-sighted action.

Educators were challenged by Phillips to accept the theme of experimentation and study and to cease to use the phrase "it can't be done." "The many new problems of administration, of teaching, and of community leadership which face the principal each new day must be met with a positive attitude rather than a negative attitude," he said. "The cost for this leadership will be heavy and the casualities may be high but the rewards will be great."

Manhunt Continues For Slayer Of Patrolmen

SANFORD, N. C., Nov. 6 AP—A young, dark-complexioned motorist known only as a two-time cop killer was sought today in an intensifying manhunt by determined officers of there or more states.

The slayer, flagged by State Highway Patrol Pfc. Wister Lee Reece for speeding on U.S. 220 last night, got out of his late model automobile, walked over to meet Reece and shot him dead.

About an hour laer and 50 miles away, Patrol Pfc R. T. Brown, trying to halt the killer's car on U.S. 1 near here, received a bullet in the abdomen. He died about 1½hours later on an operating room table in the hospital here.

The only witness to the slaying of the 39-year-old Reece was a frightened Negro man who told police he hitched a ride with the killer in Asheboro.

The hitchhiker, 30-year-old Robert Perry Jr., of Norman, said the patrol car started following the speeding car at about 8 p.m. last night. Perry told officers he advised the man to slow down. The driver came to a slow stop, Perry related, got out of the car and took "a long gun" from the glove compartment.

"I started begging, please don't do that; I was so scared I don't know exactly what happened," Perry told officers at Rockingham, where he was held as a material witness. Perry, who said he has been a Baptist lay minister, added that he jumped from the car as the shot was fired, leaving behind his Bible, hat and gloves.

Perry told police he tried to call for help on the patrol car radio but didn't know how to work it. His shouts to a near by house brought help.

The wintness said the killer was about 24 or 25 years old, dark-complexioned, of medium build, and wore a brown suit and tie. Perry said the driver told him he was from Brooklyn, N. Y., en route to Florida. "He looked Spanish and talked with an Italian accent," Perry added.

Brown, a patrolman sice 1950, had radioed he was stopping the car. After a few minutes he sent a message that he had been shot, and another patrolman, R. L. Gates raced to the scene.

Gates said he saw the slayer's car pass him as he drove toward Brown. There the patrolman found the wounded man lying partly inside his patrol car. Brown died in the hospital about 10:30 p.m.

The manhunt, which was staged by officers in hundreds of patrol cars and at road blocks in all major intersections, resulted in a number of arrests.

Delaware state police quesioned and released two men who established that they left North Carolina last night en route to New York.

At Bamberg, S. C., officers held for questioning a dard-comptexioned hitchhiker, picked up about noon on U. S. 301, who said he was "just headed south looking for sunshine. They said he put up no resistance and was dnarmed.

Sheriff J. B. Zeigler identified the man as Clinton WeDitt Dixon, about 35, of Washington, D. C. Zeigler said Dixon told officers he was going to Whistler, Ala., where his father lives.

The sheriff said Dixon was picked up because his appearance was similar to the description of the wanted man and he had a Pennsylvania address on his clothes.

Zeigler said North Carolina officers planned to come to Bamberg to interview Dixon.

The Georgia Highway Patrol said it recevied a repotr that a man, his wife and two children were taken into custody in Towns County, Ga., but nothing was established by preliminary questioning.

The Cherry Point Marine Base sent a helicopter to help in the search, and the State Wildlife Commission furnished one plane and several private citizens offered use of their planes.

Col. J. R. Smith, Highway Patrol commander, said the killer was driving south on U.S. 220 when the first shooting occurred, but that he apparently turned onto U.S. 1 at Sanford and headed north.

The patrol broadcast an appeal to two unidentified couples it said reportedly stopped their cars to give help to the wounded Brown. The patrol said the couples, who probably continued north, might have stopped at a South Hill, Va. restaurant. Officers said Brown might have been able to talk to the couples and perhaps gave information.

Reece was stationed in the Kernersville area before he was maried, a father of three daughters. He and his family lived near Rockingham. He was a 10-year patrol veteran.

Brown, a native of Statesville, also was married and a father. He had been stationed in this area for five years.

Funeral services for Reece were scheduled tomorrow afternoon at the First Presbyterian Church in Hamlet.

The 39-year-old trooper will be buried in Eatside Cemetery at Rockingham.

Annual 'Beat Dook' Parade Is Scheduled Here November 22

The eighth annual "Beat Dook" parade has been scheduled for Friday, Nov. 22, at 3 p.m.

Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity is again sponsoring the parade.

Dormitories, fraternities and sororities have been urged to enter floats in the parade. Any dorm, fraternity or sorority that enters a float is eligible to enter a contestant in the Float Parade Queen contest.

The selection of the queen and six members of her court will be held Tuesday night, Nov. 19, at the PiKA house.

All entries in the parade must be turned in by 6 p.m. Nov. 13 to Dick Robinson, parade chairman. Forms for the entries have been sent out to dorms, fraternities and sororities.

The "Beat Dook" parade will form on the Raleigh Rd. front of Woollen Gymnasium at 3 p.m.

FREE FLICK

"King Solomon's' Mines" will be presented as this week's Friday night "free flick" in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 10 p.m., according to Mike Strong, chairman of the Free Films Committee of GMAB.

This picture, filmed in technicolor, stars Deborah Kerr, Stewart Granger and Richard Carlson in the story of a woman who penetrates darkest Africa in search of her lost husband with adventurers in search of thetreasure of King Solomon's Mines.

Segregationists Lose Little Rock City Vote

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 6 — (AP)-The Army today announced it would remove half of the federal troops and national guardsmen enforcing school integration here.

The announcement came a few hours after Little Rock voters had narrowly rejected a pro-segregation city government.

"There was no indication that the voting influenced the Army's decision to make its second troop reduction but it was announced just a few hours after a moderate group known as the good government committee candidates won control of the city government.

The Army said its decision to pull out about 275 of its 500 regulars and refederalize about 900 of 1,800 National Guardsmen will be carried out forthwith because of "the steady improvement in community stability noted currently in Little Rock".

An Army spokesman said he expected that the regular troop reduction would be effected before the end of this week.

Gov. Orval Faubus, who maintains Little Rock will remain "an occupied city as long as one federal soldier remains," commented:

"They ought to go ahead and remove the rest of them. I think they would have long before now if they had had a graceful way to do it."

Integration at Central High School, which exploded with violence that reverberated internationally, is now in its seventh week.

In recent weeks no incidents of import have occurred and the nine Negro students enrolled now go to and from school unguarded. Troops on duty at the high school have been cut to a fraction of the September peak.

NOVELTY PASSES FROM SCENE

Sports Cars Have Become Part Of American Way Of Life

Not so very man years ago there was a time when, if two Volkswagens met on the highway, the occasion would be marked by an exchange of impertinent sounding beeps. This situation has, like the five cent cigar, passed from the scene.

Only the most exotic of foreign cars (like a Gran Tourismo Ferrari) is today likely to cause a turning of heads. In a word, the sports car has become very much a part of the American scene.

Since we Americans are given to forming assoications, socities, clubs and other convival tribes, it shouldn't really surprise anyone too much that the rise of the sports car has been closely followed by mushrooming sports car clubs.

These range all the way from the big Sports Car Club of America affiliates who sponsor races and hillclimbs to the relatively modest inlependent clubs.

The bulk of the membership of any of these clubs comes from people who enjoy driving and of course own (or in some cases would like to own) a sports car. They cannot really be described in terms of background since the members are likely to range in age all the way from college students to retired businessmen.

Since the people who can afford to drive a car at Eikhart Lake or the Virginia International Raceway are in a definite minority, the form of competition favored by sports car clubs are Rallies and Gymkhanas.

A Rally (some of the clubs insist on Rallye) sounds like simplicity itself; you are given a set of road directions to follow and in most cases an average speed (always below the legal speed limit). The car that comes closest to that average speed wins the event.

Follow road which crosses Lower Bartons Creek via the 5th bridge from its headwaters.

Take road which crosses Lower and Upper Bartons creek and the Neuse River in that order.

At this point it should, in all fairness, be mentioned that only about six cars of the twenty that started finished this Rally (which covered about 150 miles).

While you could successfully manage a Rally in an American car, this is not true of a Gymkhana. These events which are usually held in parking lot, roughly resemble a truck Rodeo.

A very tight course is laid out with traffic cones. Some sectons you go through forwards, others you back through; straights are nonexistant.

The cars go through one at a time and the winner is, of course, the one with the best time. Sometimes, things are made more interesting by requiring the driver of balance a glass of water on the hood of the car. This is not for Cadillacs.

Locally, the sports car movement is represented by the Piedmont Sports Car Club. This organization, which covers the Raleigh, Durham, and Chapel Hill area, is an independent club, not affiliated with the S.C.C.A.

You may have seen the emblem (a steering wheel in a red triangle) on some of the members' cars. Sports car drivers, members or not, and spectators are always welcomed at the clubs events.

If you still wonder what a Gymkhana is all about you might drop in at Fowlers parking lot in Chapel Hill on Sunday, Nov. 17 at 2 p. m.

know the nicest compliment you can pay your date?

Send her orchids? Praise her hairdo or gown? Not quite. The answer is to "dress up" in a "Mr. Formal" Tuxedo. She'll be proud as a duchess, you'll be handsome, relaxed, with a memorable evening ahead. Lightweight midnite blue worsted, with satin shawl lapels.

CAROLINA CARAVAN

Only 3 Games Left On Tar Heel Slate

By JAKE WADE

The football season is running out . . . It's South Carolina here Saturday, then a week off for the Tar Heels, then Duke at Durham, the finale with Virginia here on Nov. 30 . . . Other UNC football activity includes two games with the frosh, against Virginia here Friday, and the big benefit game with Duke on Thanksgiving in Kenan Stadium.

The Tar Heels, who were jolted last week by Tennessee's quick and clever Vols and losers to N. C. State and Maryland, can look back on three glorious wins over favored Navy, Clemson and Miami, and have their guns pointed on the forthcoming numbers . . . Tickets are still available to all future games, but they are running low for Duke-Carolina at Durham.

PAYNE CONSISTENT—The most consistent Carolina player this season has been Captain Buddy Payne, the senior from Norfolk, Va., who has has been handicapped by injuries in past campaigns . . Tar Heel coaches each week give him a high grade on his performance . . . His remarkable pass catching has been especially outstanding, and his effort and attitude are all that any coach could desire.

Fred Swearingen and Jim Jones have taken over Curt Hathaway's role as Tar Heel utility man . . . Jones, the senior from Greensboro, who was in All - ACC guard last season when his opportunism on grabbing loose balls was a highlight of the year, started out this year as an end and has been playing fine football . . . Now he has gone back to his old high school position, center . . . Swearingen, a highly versatile junior operative from Petersburg, Va., opened the campaign at center, was transferred to guard and now may be returned to the pivot spot . . . Sickness and injuries of Ronnie Koes caused the switches this week.

ODDS AND ENDS—You haven't seen a lot of Carolina end Takey Crist, but the big junior from Jacksonville, N. C., is one of the hardest working players on the squad . . His big moment was catching a 53-yard pass in the conquest of Clemson . . A promising Tar Heel player not seen in varsity competition this year is quarterback Jerry Amos from Charlotte . . . Early incapacitated by an injury but now intact, Jerry now likely will not make his varsity debut until next year . . . He's very much in evidence at practice session . . . Same goes for quarterback Nelson Lowe from North Wilkesboro . . . Both Amos and Lowe are sophomores.

GOING STRONG—Navy's only defeat this season was by Carolina and Clemson, also turned back by the Tar Heels, has lost only one other game, to N. S. State

Full Sports Calendar Here This Weekend

By ED ROWLAND

For sports-loving Tar Heels who can tear themselves away from the Germans this weekend, the athletic slate is full in Chapel Hill.

In addition to the varsity football game Saturday afternoon, the frosh gridders tackle the Virginia freshmen in Kenan Stadium at 2 p.m.

Coach Bud Carson said yesterday he thought the Virginia boys played a "good game" in losing to the State Wolflets last week, 20-6, and they will play well against the Tar Babies.

The Tar Babies enter the game with a 2-1 record, a 33-19 loss to State being the lone blemish. Carson said only two boys, both out with injuries, will definitely miss the Friday game.

CROSS-COUNTRY TOO

Competing with the football game for attention Friday will be a triangular varsity cross-country meet between Carolina, Wake Forest and South Carolina. Coach Dale Ranson said earlier this week that he expected some of the best running of the season to come out of this meet.

And for the first time in several weeks Ranson expects his runners to be at full strength.

The freshman cross-countrymen will flex their leg muscles Friday afternoon when they run the Wake Forest Deaclets. The Tar Babies will be trying to get back on the winning trail after losing to Myers Park High Saturday.

Rounding out the weekend sports slate will be the varsity soccer meet at 3 p.m. Friday when the booters play host to Maryland.

Freshman Cage Team Set With 17 Players

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Except for the possible addition of several freshman football players to the squad, the members of this years freshman basketball team have been selected.

Coach Buck Freeman is hoping that several Tar Baby footballers will try out for the team after their gridiron schedule terminates on December 2. Scholastic difficulties could keep some of the players away from the court.

Although Freeman had originally planned to keep only twelve players on the team, he was unable to decide who to cut; for this reason the present squad lists seventeen members. The seventeen cagers represent four states, Florida, New Jersey, New York and North Carolina.

ALL CAN'T SUIT

Freeman disclosed that all the squad members will not suit up for every game. When the team is on the road, only twelve players will be in uniform. Fifteen members of the team will dress for all the home games.

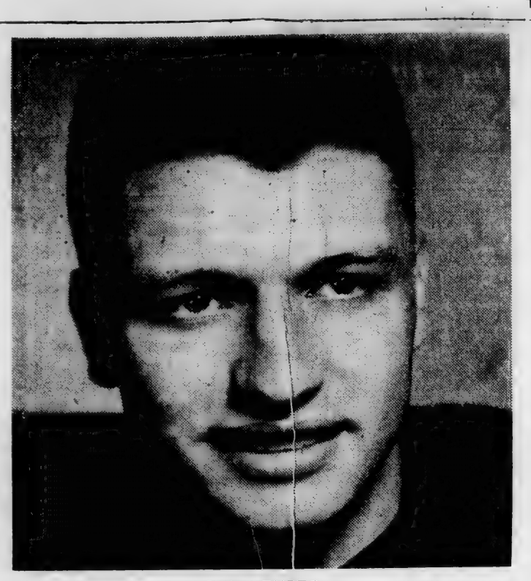
Four boys are currently sidelined with various types of minor ailments. Ed Graham is sick in the infirmary and Charles Baker is recovering from the flu. Howard Holderness and Lou Brown are taking light workouts while shiking off-sprains.

The schedule of games is still not complete. There is a possibility that two more contests will be added to the schedule. If the arrangements can be made, the team will play Bullis Prep at home and South Carolina or Clemson at Greenville, North Carolina. Eight of the nineteen games listed will be played at home.

Physician Says Lineberger Not Hurt Seriously

Dr. Hedgepath, head university physician, squelched rumors yesterday afternoon about the seriousness of the injury suffered by Carolina football player Jack Lineberger.

Dr. Hedgepath said that Lineberger had injured his neck. He discounted any rumors that Lineberger suffered an injury to his spinal column and said no permanent disability is expected to result.



"He is recovering satisfactorily," Dr. Hedgepath said. He would not speculate how long Lineberger would be in the hospital.

Lineberger received the injury in the Tennessee game. He recovered enough to practice Monday, but was re-injured and forced to go to the hospital.

Varsity Cagers Hold Big Scrimmage Tonite

The nation's number one basketball team will hold its first big intra-squad scrimmage tonight at eight o'clock in Woollen Gym.

The contest will be between the first and second teams. The teams were not decided upon until late yesterday afternoon. Students have been invited to attend the game.

DON KEMPER
. . . He made the Switch . . .

Kemper Was A Guard: Now He's A Good End

By WAYNE THOMPSON

Carolina end Don Kemper was the man of the hour last Saturday, but the hour was three quarters and 35 Tennessee points too late.

The 6-1, 205-pound junior from Hatboro, Pa. caught his first, second, and third passes of the season in succession against the powerful Volunteers and great catches they were. They totaled 32 yards, but at the game's end were just a Carolina statistic.

The remarkable thing about Kemper's play is that this year is his first experience at playing a flank position. An All-Atlantic Coast Conference second team guard last season, Kemper was switched to end in spring practice.

Kemper has always been a tough competitor with defensive ability and desire. His forte this season as a second unit end has been his defensive play. However, on Saturday, he looked like the No. 2 target for aerial conscious Jack Cummings.

In the early fall practices, Kemper had trouble holding on to the football. He just couldn't get used to snaring the oval while running down field. He worked at it though and it paid off in gold yards last week.

Kemper's triple receptions put him on a long list of Tar Heel pass receptors of which Buddy Payne is king with eight. Halfback Ron Marquette has snagged five, halfbacks Daley Goff and Emil DeCantis have caught three, and ends Al Goldstein and Mac Turlington and halfbacks Don Coker and Jim Schuler have caught two each.

Jack Cummings, the sophomore quarterback who, on occasions, plays like a poised trouper, has completed 17 of 33 this year for 245 yards and a touchdown. With people like Kemper emerging on the scene with a pair of glue-fingered hands and a never-say-die spirit, his aerial job should be that much easier.

A defensive standout for two years, he's ready to carry his share of the offensive load . . .That's been Don Kemper's goal all season.

Sputnik Signals

ALAMOGORDO, N. M., Nov. 6. (AP)—The Alamogordo Daily News said today it had learned from officials at the Air Force missile development center here that the signals from Sputnik II are being monitored, interpreted and analyzed by Air Force scientists.

The newspaper reported the signals are not in code, as such, but that it would take a person with a scientific background to interpret them.

It was indicated the information being transmitted by the Soviet satellite is very basic in nature, compared to the kinds of research which the Air Force has conducted in regard to upper air data.

NOVEMBER TALE WITH SAD ENDING

Kids, whether good or bad you be, surround this hero paternal knee, and listen while I tell about a time — I missremember the year, but it was in November, that curious things befell.

About that time I knew a dame or chap, it all works out the same all dewy-eyed and pearly, who, in her morning paper read an advertisment. "Do", it said, "Your Christmas shopping early."

Now this dear little bit of fluff was scarcely old or wise enough to spot this worn cliche, so offering thanks for honest tips she rubied up her virgin lips and started on her way.

She searched for presents near and far — had luncheon in the Dairy Bar — and like a glowing tracer, she spread unmitigated joy. One fuzzy-chinned delivery boy attempted to embrace her.

At last the sun was getting low and tootsie child knew she must go back to her dormitory. No sooner had the shiny door concealed that trim posterior — you won't believe this story — than on Olympus Zeus laid holt upon his sizzling thunder bolt, and with a dreadful cry, "In centuries I can't remember a Christmas shopper in November!", he let the darn thing fly.

THE MORAL — Must you go away? — is: Early Christmas shoppers may become celestial fuel. And yet, we'd say, the chance of pain is small compared with what you'd gain. We'll take a chance if you will.

Tar Heels-Gamecocks To Battle For Lost Prestige In Kenan On Saturday

Kings will be wild when the regal band of South Carolina Gamecocks invade Kenan Stadium Saturday. That is to say the Gamecock backfield will be loaded with kings, namely King Dixon and Heydood King, not to mention the Gamecock running and kicking king, Alex Hawkins.

It will be Carolina's job to usurp the South Carolina backfield throne and avenge last year's 14-0 defeat at the hands of Warren Giese's charges. And for Tar Heel coach Jim Tatum, it will be a second chance to even the score with his old Maryland Assistant.

The Tar Heels are starting from scratch this week, making a distinct efforts to forget the disheartening 35-0 defeat at the hands of Tennessee.

Several key players are on the injured list and 216-pound center Ronnie Koes, who missed the Vol clash last week with a sinus infection and knee injury will be absent again this Saturday. This has forced Tatum to move veteran Jim Jones from an end position to center. The amiable 43-year old Tar Heel boss has also considered moving guard Fred Swearingen back to his old ball snapping slot.

Jones, who was named to the All Atlantic Coast Conference team last year as a guard, was moved to end this season, but hasn't cashed in on his defensive abilities as yet.

South Carolina, which has won three of six games this year, upseting powerful Texas for its big victory, has a hard hitting club which likes to capitalize on the big break. In Dixon and Hawkins, the Gamecocks have a pair of explosive broken field runners, capable of sprinting the distance from any part of the field.

In the Furman game, Dixon opened up an awesome offensive of nine touchdowns, with an 89-yard TD run on the opening kickoff and fullback Heywood King, a pile driving runner, scored two touchdowns including an 86-yard kickoff sprint.

Dixon has had runs of 98, 96 and 89-yards this season and leads the Gamecocks in touchdowns. Hawkins is the team's leading placement kicker and is second in TD's on the season.

The Tar Heels hope to stop these two but, moreover, hope to generate some new offensive power of their own throuh the passing of Jack Commings and the running victory, his a hard hitting club Jim Schuler and Giles Gaca.

Two meetings are slated by the intramural department tonight. At seven, officials of the co-rec. carnival will meet in room 301 Woollen and at eight, intramural managers and WAA representatives will meet to discuss pairings, etc. for the co-rec. carnival. This meeting will be held in room 308.

Bones Figures McGuiremen To Be Best Again

Winston-Salem, Nov. 6 — (AP) Wake Forest basketball coach Horace (Bones) McKinley thinks the Carolin team wil be no.1 in the Atlantic Coast Conference again this year.

Coach McKinley rated Carolina, Maryland, Duke and N. C. State in that order for this season.

The Wake Forest team is strong at the forward positions this year, he said. It will play a running game this year with plenty of action.

Coach McKinley said this year's schedule is "too good," and offered no guess on the outcome of the season for his team.

He said only five per cent of a team's success is due to coaching.

Meager Turnout Reported At Clinic

Only 135 Get Asian Flu Shots

A mere turnout of 135 students — far below university expectations—was reported at yesterday's "on campus" flu vaccine clinic at Gerrard Hall.

The disappointing response to the cost-free vaccine prompted University Physician E. M. Hedgpeth to remind that vaccine not used here will be "disposed of."

He gave a final plea for student response to a second clinic slated at Gerrard Hall today between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m.

The meager turnout yesterday brought to some 1,700 the number of UNC students who have received shots for protection against Asian flu since the vaccine has been available here.

But that number was substantially below expectations of infirmary and administrative officials. They hoped to distribute the total vaccine supply in the closing clinics.

Just what the lack of student response would mean here was not known, but officials feared it left the campus vulnerable to a major outbreak of flu if the Asian virus sweeps through the community.

It was with the idea of preventing any such epidemic that infirmary officials offered their facilities at Gerrard Hall, conveniently located on campus.

Dr. Hedgpeth, commenting on the clinic Thursday, said he is "more concerned about what might happen in December or March than what happened a few weeks ago."

He was referring to a siege of respiratory infections which swept across the university campus, affecting almost one-seventh of the student body. Some of the cases were identified as the Asian strain.

Eisenhower Names Killian; Plans No Extra Spending

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7—(AP)—President Eisenhower announced tonight a revamping of the nation's scientific defense setup with Dr. James R. Killian of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in command.

Eisenhower made the anouncement in a television-radio broadcast intended to reassure Americans about this country's defense strength in the light of recent Soviet advances.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7—(AP)—President Eisenhower went out of his way in his TV-Radio address tonight to prase American scientists and congressional Democrats.

Eisenhower made a few departures from his prepared text. In one of them he said scientists and engineers "have been generous, patriotic and prompt" in responding to the government's demands upon them.

Some administration critics, including former President Truman, have said unwise security programs have kept many scientists from accepting public service.

Eisenhower elaborated on his prepared address again when he said Democratic leaders of Congress have accepted his invitation to confer about 1958 legislation "with alacrity and good will."

The President has invited both Democratic and Republican congressional leaders to meet with him next month on the entire legislative program for the coming year.

With the President as he spoke to the nation tonight on "Science in National Security" were his son Maj. John S. Esenhower, and the Presdent's television advisor, Robert Montgomery.

Mentioning U.S. technological advances, Eisenhower said:

(1) "We have fired three rockets to heights between 2,000 and 4,000 miles, and have received back much valuable information about outer space."

Here the president was discussing the Air Force's "project Far Side." That experiment, conducted from Eniwetok Atoll in the cen-

Better Seats For Events Now Sought

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Student Legislature in its last session of the 23rd Assembly unanimously passed a resolution "encouraging closer cooperation" among Atlantic Coast Conference schools in regards to seats for visiting schools.

The resolution will be sent to ACC schools "to let the athletic directors know we are aware of the situation," said Dick Sessoms, University Party, introducer of the bill.

Sessoms said the bill was to emphasize especially football and basketball seasons. He pointed out that Carolina students had been put in the poorer seats.

He named Virginia, Duke, Maryland and Wake Forest as schools which had given UNC students bad places.

He said that on the west coast of the United States both the host students and the visiting students were given group seats around the fifty yard line.

Sonny Evans' appointments to the committee to study the policy of other college newspapers were passed almost unanimously; other appointments passed unanimously.

"I should like to make it clear that the purpose of this committee is in no way aimed at the present editor of The Daily Tar Heel," said Student Body President Sonny Evans in a letter containing the appointments.

Pat Adams will be chairman of the investigation committee. Other members are Ann Frye, Curtis Gans, Anthony Wolf and Jeannie Margaret Meador.

Bruce Beveridge will be chairman of the Bad Check Committee, a committee to help the Merchants Association in the notification of those individuals who have issued bad checks, according to appointment approvals.

Other members of the committee are Pat Hamer and David Veasy.

Frank Lowe, Mike Fleisher, Ruth Neisler and Anne Stallings were appointed to the Campus Traffic Committee.

Wilson Partin and Craven Brewer were appointed to the Elections Board.

As Speaker Don Furtado was at the State Student Legislature, Al Goldsmith (UP) presided at this session.

Nine members of the Student Party were absent, and five University Party members missed the meeting.

Duke Delegate Wins SSL Post

By ETHAN TOLMAN

RALEIGH — Dick Phillips of Duke University narrowly edged by Jim Holmes of UNC in a mid-afternoon election here Thursday for Speaker of the House of the State Student Legislature.

Phillips' election to the key position came on the opening day of the three-day event which brings together representatives of most colleges and universities in the state.

The asembly — the only of its kind in the nation—convened in the capitol building here to discuss and vote on problems facing the state and the nation.

It brought together men and women, Negro and white, many of whom will take part in state affairs of the future. The assembly is run by students who are representative of the state legislature.

The unique legislative body has no faculty or government control and has existed since the war as an entirely independent organization.

Representatives were welcomed to the asembly Thursday by guest speaker Robert Giles, administrative assistant to the Governor. Giles is a former UNC student who also attended the SSL sessions.

Following his address, Dr. Alphonso Elder, president of North Carolina College, spoke to the assembly about values which could spring from the three-day event.

Business was expected to continue into the late hours Thursday, with a full calendar of events slated for Friday and Saturday.

Founder's Day Dinner Held By Business Frat

The Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, local chapter of this National Business Administration Fraternity, celebated Founder's Day Wednesday Night with a steak dinner at Watt's Restaurant.

Herman Rhinehardt, vice-president of Wachovia Bank and Trust Company Branch in Durham, and one of the founders of and a trustee of the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi, spoke to 80 brothers, pledges, and guests.

The topic of Mr. Rhinehardt's speech was, "Opportunities for Young College Men in the Banking World." He stated that prior to World War II there were few opportunities for College graduates, the salaries were low, and advancement was slow.

"But, since World War II, the banks realized they were in competition with industry and large business," Rhinehardt said, "and began to recruit college graduates, offering them better opportunities."

He added that this was accomplished by increasing the starting salaries, speeding up promotions, and leaving most of the detailed work to women clerks so that today opportunities in the banking world match those of other businesses and industry.

Rhinhardt said some of the fields open to college graduates include: lending operations, consumer credit, mortgage lending, investment banking, trust departments, and personnel management.

Some of the personal characteristics banks want in young men include: honesty and integrity, average intelligence, good judgment, imagination, desire, willingness to work, and the ability to get along with people, he added.

Rhinehardt criticized personally the general attitude of many young college graduates from a banking point of view by saying that many of them (1) demonstrated a lack of interest, (2) expected too much, (3) were impatient with the basic training programs, and (4) were unwilling to continue studying.

Guests from the Business School were Miss Gladys Cox, Miss Sue Stehr, Dean H. Q. Langenderfer, Dr. C. S. George, Dr. J. E. Dykstra, and Mr. Dick Levin. Mr. Nelson Denett, a Delta Sig alumus was also present.

Al Alphin served as Master of Ceremonies for this function which was arranged by Don Nance, professional Chairman, and Al Jordan, Social Chairman. Jim Burroughs is President of the Alpha Lambda Chapter of Delta Sigma Pi.

Dance Tonight Strictly 'Dry'

Students and guests who are planning to attend the German concert and dance were reminded yesterday that both of these functions come under the jurisdiction of the University Dance Committee and are subject to it's rules and regulations.

Larry Harris, President of the Dance Committee, said: "Doormen will not let anyone into either the dance or the concert who is intoxicated."

Harris related three important rules of the Dance Committee which apply at the concert and dance:

1. Anyone showing signs of drinking or other misconduct shall be dealt with at the discretion of the University Dance Committee.
2. Anyone giving wrong indentification when confronted by dance committeemen or doormen will automatically be suspended from attending all dances indefinitely.
3. Anyone bringing intoxicating beverages on the dance floor or concert auditorium will automatically be suspended from attending all dances indefinitely.

Harris said: "The purpose of having the Dance Committee and the rules which must be followed, is to ensure the proper atmosphere for all to enjoy the concerts and dances. Both the German Club and the Dance Committee will appreciate your cooperation to make this Germans weekend a good one."

ENGLISH CLUB SPEAKER

Richard W. Goldsmith, an instructor of English at State College, will be the guest speaker at the regular meting of UNC English Club to be held Friday at 7:30 p. m. in Bingham Hall. His topic will be "Browning and Religious Controversy."

History Dept. Adds To Staff

Addition of three men to the History Department faculty at UNC has been announced by Dr. Fletcher M. Green, chairman.

Serving as instructors in history are Dr. Robin D. S. Higham and Dr. Richard Burgess Barlow, while Otto. H. Olsen has been added as lecturer in social science.

Higham, a native of English, holds the A. B. degree from Harard College, the M. A. from Claremont Graduate School, and the Ph. D. from Harvard University.

Formerly on the University of Massachusetts faculty, he has special interest in the fields of American and English history.

English and European history are Barlow's special fields. A native of Massachusetts, he holds the B. D. degree from Andover, and the A. B., A. M. and Ph. D. from the University of Pennsylvania. He studied two years at Cambridge University.

Olsen, a Pennsylvanian by birth, was trained at Columbia University and the Johns Hopkins Unversity. His special field of interest is recent United States history.

Polls To Open 9 a.m. Tuesday

Poll will open Tuesday at 9 a. m. for the fall election of legislators, honor council members and freshman, sophomore and junior class officers.

Closing time for the polls has been set for 6 p. m.

Boxes will be placed in every dorm except Kenan and Connor. Members of Kenan will vote in McIver dorm; Connor in Winston.

Town polling places will be attended by persons chosen by the Elections Board. Attendants for dorm polling boxes will be selected by the dormitory presidents.

ID cards of all voters will be stamped by the Elections Board. Dorm voters will sign dormitory rosters at the polling places.

Town voters will be required to fill out index cards giving name, class and address. These cards will be retained by the Elections Board.

Town Men's district I will vote at the Carolina Inn; Town Men's II at the Scuttlebutt; Town Men's III at Graham Memorial, and Town Men's IV at Victory Village.

Town Women will vote in Gerrard Hall.

Art Sobel, chairman of the Elections Board, has asked all interested persons to come to the basement of GM Tuesday night after 7 p. m. to help tabulate election returns.

Strange Object Is Seen At Smithfield

SMITHFIELD, N. C. (AP) — A Smithfield police captain reported today he and a number of other persons had watched an unidentified cigar-shaped object hovering over a vacant lot here yesterday.

Capt. Jim Massey said he spotted the object about 5 p. m. and called it to the attention of several persons. He said they were able to watch it for several minutes before it traveled slowly over buildings and away from Smithfield.

World In Brief

No Major Surprises

MOSCOW, Nov. 7 — (AP) — The Soviet Union paraded a mighty array of new tactical rockets and guns at its 40th birthday celebration today without unveiling any of the major surprises the world had been led to expect.

The big puzzlers for western military men in the massive march in Red Square were two huge guns of strange design. Moscow radio talked of "a new type of artillery based on the principle of jet propulsion," but there was no explanation.

Closing Gap

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7—(AP)—A Defense Department scientist said today the United States fell four or five years behind the Russians in missile development but "We're very close to them now."

"I think we'll be ahead of them in another year in all missile work in general," said Dr. Paul D. Foote, Assistant Secretary of Defense in charge of research and engineering.

Foote testified before the House post office and civil service subcommittee.

Ike Holds Pow-Pow

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7—(AP)—President Eisenhower held his largest-ever meeting of the National Security Council today, just hours before the first of his series of chins-up speeches to the American people.

He called in a total of 45 Advisers from the military, diplomatic, scientific and mobilization fields.

The Security Council gathering was so large it wouldn't fit in the cabinet room at the White House and was transferred to the broadcasting room in the basement.

Results Expected

WASHINGTON, Nov. 7—(AP)—The United States said today any high level meetings on East-West problems would be desirable "only if there are reasonable grounds for expecting . . . beneficial results."

A State Department spokesman set out this offical reaction to the implied bid in Soviet party Chief Nikita Khrushchev's speech for a new summit conference. The idea was also cold-shouldered in London and Paris.

Flowers Appears

RALEIGH, Nov. 7—(AP)—Percy Flowers, Johnston County merchant and farmer wanted by state and federal officers on illicit liquor charges, has given himself up to federal authorities and been released under $5,000 bond—but he is still being sought by state authorities.

Federal officials in Raleigh and New Orleans confirmed today that Flowers had posted his bond at New Orleans last Saturday for his

Germans Club In Limelight On Big Weekend

By MARY MOORE MASON

If you have looked through a 1901 Yackety Yack lately, you will have seen on the page dedicated to the Germans Club a group of dignified young men in tuxedos with slicked back haid and celluoid collars.

The Germans Club, which supposedly has existed since back before 1890, is now in the campus limelight as it presents its Fall German's concert this afternoon and dance tonight.

Traditionally the Germans Club consists of thirteen members, these members being thirteen fraternities. The fraternities that are members have not stayed exactly the same through the years, for as one fraternity drops out another one will take its place.

The fraternities that now compose the Germans Club are Alpha Tau Omega, Beta Theta Pi, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Kappa Alpha, St. Anthony Hall, Kappa Sigma, Phi Delta Theta, Phi Gamma Delta, Pi Kappa Alpha, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Sigma Chi, Sigma Nu, and Zeta Psi.

The membership of the German Club organizational body consists of seventeen members: one representative from each fraternity and four officers who at present are Mark Cherry, president; John McKee, vice president; Thad Bostic, secretary; and Kelly Manness, treasurer. The membership of the club as a whole is at present from 700 to 800 fraternity men. However, according to Cherry, the membership was about 1,200 after the last war.

Each year the Germans Club sponsors three Germans weekends, one in the fall, one in the winter, and one in the spring. During these weekends there is a concert and a formal dance.

"We are concerned by the fact," said Cherry, "that so many people have lost interest in dances. We always have a formal dance at each Germans because it is traditional and because there are so few occasions like this still held on the campus."

Cherry also stressed that the Germans Club always brings the best in musical entertainment to the campus on these occasions. Such celebrities as Ray Anthony, Louie Armstrong, Charlie Spivak, Stan Kenton, Fats Domino, the Four Freshmen, and Billy May have presented the music in the past.

This year music will be furnished by Les Elgart and by the renowned Negro Washboard Band which has been playing for some time at Sea Island, Ga.

The concert will be held at 3:30 p.m. in Memorial Hall. However, in the past the Germans Club has been known to have the concert on the lawn or in the stadium for Spring Germans.

The dance will be in Memorial Hall, starting at 9 p.m. In the past it has been held in the Tin Can whch was the old basketball stadum before Woollen Gym was built. "The decorations were most elaborate and beautiful back then," said Cherry, "however, we are planning to have beautiful decorations in the gym this year although it is considerably harder to decorate than the Tin Can."

Members of the German Club stressed that although the dance is exclusive it is not just open to those boys in the thirteen member fraternities. Just about anyone who wants a bid can obtain it, for each member of the club is given a bid which he may use himself or give to someone else who wants to go to the dance.

Complimentary bids are also given to certain members of the faculty and the administration. The housemothers of the various dorms, sororities, and fraternities serve as chaperons. The Dance Committee is also present as a group to see that the dance runs smoothly.

The dates of the 17 members of the governing body of the club always serve as sponsors of the various fraternities and of the weekend, and are presented in a figure at the dance.

"We have all indication that this year's Fall Germans will be one of the most successful ones so far," said Mark Cherry, "and we hope to see many of you there."

Black Bile And Lethe: The Modern Dilemma...

"Since it is universally believed that man is merely what his consciousness knows of itself, he regards himself as harmless and so adds stupidity to iniquity. He does not deny that terrible things have happened and still go on happening, but it is always the others who do them. And when such deeds belong to the recent and remote past, they quickly and conveniently sink into the sea of forgetfulness, and that state of chronic woolly-mindedness returns which we describe as normality." — Dr. Carl Jung in the Centennial issue of The Atlantic Magazine.

Among the transitory population of the University campus, one often senses a complacency — non-pregnant — which permeates behaviorial patterns and dooms intellectual curiosity to Lethe, mythical sea of oblivion.

There seems to be no apparent compromise between abominable pseudo-intellectualism and despicable lethargy — no middle ground, no golden mean.

Dr. Jung, Swiss founder of analytical psychology, before he rants into a commercial dissertation on the merits of psychology and the psyche, calls this convenient complacency, "chronic wooly-mindedness," and labels it admirably.

Basically on the same subject, Carolina Quarterly Editor Christian Lefebure says in an editorial in the fall magazine, after an explanation of the Middle Ages belief in the four humors — yellow bile and resultant hot temper; too-much blood and over-passion; too-much phlegm and listlessness; too-much black bile and melancholia:

"Anyone who was disillusioned, gloomy, pensive or lethargic was said to be affected with melancholia. Although this quaint medical theory died with the Middle Ages, the disease itself is still much with us. It is the malady, that a large part of the world has fallen victim to during the 1950's. We have become complacent and too content with ourselves."

Many seem to have adopted the Candide attitude: Thta this is the best of all possible worlds, and the world goes by with rosy optimistic consequences.

In unrestful times, such as this, when Soviet technics are progressing to Godless extremes, when the cancerous earth threatens to erupt with gory destruction, there is little room for euphemism — such as Eisenhower propounded in his fire-side hypnosis last night.

To say that the Soviet advances are innocuous is to cling assiduously to the brand of wolly-mindedness against which Psychiatrist Jung argues, to grasp tenaciously to the "black bile" proclivity against which Editor Lefebure argues effectively.

A rapprochement between pseudo-intellectualism and conscientious curiosity must be promulgated.

And men must think.

Mankind's prospects are not as black as those of Sisyphus, whose perpetually rolling stone spelled defeatism.

Nor are they as bright as those supposed by Candide.

The time to dispell lethargy and complacency is now.

Petitions Are The Vogue

Petitions seem quite the vogue these days.

From Sebring, Fla. comes this Associated Press release:

"A petition by a 76-year-old man to adopt his ex-wife as a daughter was dismissed today.

". . . In seeking the adoption, Walter H. Rebman and his former wife, age 44, said the arrangement would benefit both because they have 'mutual reliance and dependence on each other due to their association over the past ten years,' and have mutual business interests."

Sounds almost as ridiculous as other petitions we've been hearing about lately.

Rockets & Demoniacs

Unless the ruthless and brutal killer of two North Carolina patrolmen is participating — as a passenger — in the rumored Russian launching of a moon rocket, his days of freedom are drastically numbered.

Killers of cops don't go far without apprehension. Some never even stand trial.

The killer of Ellerbe Patrolman Wister Lee Reece and Sanford Patrolman J. T. Brown is, of course, entitled to a fair and just trial.

But the maximum punishment in the jurisprudential repetoire is far to good for the demoniac and bloody slaver.

Cop killers don't go far.

Bills Make The News

Bills make the news both on campus and in Raleigh, where the State Student Legislature is currently convening.

Here, a retroactive bill passed last week to defray bills incurred by the now defunct Tarnation humor magazine is threatened with a presidential veto. Such action is unwarranted, we feel, because student government is morally obligated to build as much confidence in its subsidiaries as is possible. Unpaid bills definitely fail to guarantee such confidence.

In Raleigh, the University delegation is sponsoring measures condemning Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas and condemning censorship of rather arbitrarily classified "obscene literature."

Both measures should pass resoundingly.

THE HILLTOP:

Recall Seems Destined To Deserved Halt

Nancy Hill

The recall election movement appears to be coming to a slow halt. After starting in a rush of publicity on the coattails of anti-anti-Tatum sentiment, the petitioners are having more trouble than they anticipated getting the last few hundred signatures needed to make a recall election possible.

Some reflection, at least for one hitherto rather neutral on the question, will result in the conclusion that the slow death of the recall movement is the best thing that could happen in this situation.

The real question is, charges of incompetence notwithstanding, freedom of editorial expression. If the editor is believed to be incompetent, steps should be taken to prevent the future election of incompetents. This is claimed by some to be the purpose of the recently created committee to investigate procedures of college papers on other campuses.

Immediately, the recall of the editor, if he were defeated in campus-wide elections, would mean that his successor would be dangerously hindered in expressing editorial opinion, particularly if he happened to oppose big-time athletics.

A successful recall would set a dangerous precedent. If the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel remains a post to be filled by student election, any editor may expect, that any expression of opposition to big time collegiate athletics might automatically set recall machinery in motion. He would have firm basis for that assumption in the fact that twice in three years recall attempts have been made on those grounds.

Those who are behind the recall no doubt believe that the real issue is incompetence. They were merely choosing the phychologically correct moment to make an attempt at removing what they consider to be a bad editor. There was not only opposition to his stand on Tatum, but his view of the recent epidemic was a thorn in the flesh of many.

It will be fortunate if students realize the perfect timing of the recall move, and can view the whole question objectively. Incompetence of an editor is one thing, perhaps the fault of an uninformed student electorate, but disagreement with an editorial policy is another.

Less radical and more lasting measures than a recall election are needed to keep unprepared aspirants out of the editorial offices of The Daily Tar Heel. Students are no more qualified to judge competency in a recall than they are in regular spring elections.

One purpose of a newspaper is to arouse public attention to existing situations, whether or not the public agrees with the manner of arousal. Surely the present editor cannot be charged with incompetency on the grounds of failure to arouse the student body.

Turnipseed Lashes Out At Gans, Reader Frays Footballers' Spirit

DEAR MR. CURTIS GANS:

I would like to pass on a few facts and comments in regards to a lengthy, but somewhat shallow maze of words that comprised your dissertation on segregation. Daily Tar Heel. Tues., Nov. 5.

You begin with a quote on equality and rights by Thomas Jefferson. Do you think in defining these rights it is the best thing for federal troops to be sent into a a state, desregarding private property and mauling private citizens who are expressing their opinions. (The Supreme Court this spring on individual freedoms, says a citizen can work and speak out for the Communist Party with no fear of prosecution).

All this to take a handful of Negro children where they are not wanted by an overwhelming majority of the people of the state. (A majority rule is the cornerstone of our democracy). The Negro school they should have gone to is one of the top high schools in the nation. Those poor, poor little Negro children, with their parent's pockets bulging with NAACP money. No, I do not think Mr. Jefferson had this in mind.

Now to your so-called 14th Amendment. It has never been legally ratified by ¾s of the States of the Union so therefore the Negroes in this country are not even citizens if you would like to be truly legal about this matter. No, the 14th Amendment that was used by the Supreme Court to legislate their de-segregation proclamation does not exist! We had 37 states in 1867, and only 21 states legally ratified this Amendment with 16 failing to do so. Then the Reconstruction Congress decides to away the legal Southern State's Governments, and replacing them with military occupation, with all Confederate Veterans deprived of their citizenship.

Down comes the Northern rabble, and joining with the semi-civilized Negroes takes control of the South, and the 14th Amendment is declared ratified. Most historians recognized this Amendment as being grossly unjust.

And to finish it off you offer the opinions of Norman "Welfare State" Thomas. If this man's philosophies were followed our government would be in the Kremlin.

Wherever this "hill" is that you are doing your "viewing" from it must be enveloped with fog, because your knowledge of historical events is almost totally lacking.

EDITOR:

It seems to me that one of the biggest dangers of big-time athletics is a lack of identity with the University by so many of the boys who play football. I sat in Kenan Stadium on Saturday, and aside from the final score, I enjoyed the game when it was a matter of watching the single wing power displayed by the Tennessee team.

But what did dismay me was the lack of spirit shown by too many members of the Carolina team. With the exception of a handful of players, led by Captain Buddy Payne, there seemed to be little or no indication of giving their all on the part of the team. It was always my understanding that when a player put on a uniform and went out on the field to play a game, he did so with the idea of doing his best. That was, and is, all that can be asked of him. Like a good many people here in Chapel Hill, I don't ask for an undefeated season, nor do I leave the stadium until the final whistle has blown. But I do think that when a player represents a university, he ought to play the very best he knows how; for the other members of the team, for the school and the student body, as well as for his own sense of personal pride.

Why, then, this lack of spirit? Is it because some of the players have no genuine pride in the school which they represent? That they might just as well be playing for Podunk U.? Is their attitude really what it seems—that it is not a question of what can I do for my school, but rather what can be done for me? Is it a question of their feeling that as long as they get free schooling, free books, free bed and board that it doesn't matter where they get it? Or whose colors they are wearing?

This is not intended in any way as a criticism of Coach Jim Tatum. He was hired to coach football, and that is precisely what he is doing. Presumably, every member of the football team is there because he wants to play football. But the players have no cause for complaint about lack of school spirit among the students, when, with a few notable exceptions, here is virtually no Carolina spirit on the football field. And unless these players identify themselves with the University and its traditions, then that lack of spirit that we witnessed last Saturday will prevail.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Godmother Gamet: Muddled Morals

Gail Godwin

Cheer up, all you little rainclouds and professional worriers, for deal old Gail Godmother is going to bring you some Carolina funny fables.

At Saturday's game, amid undercurrents of "Will we lose to Tennessee," and "Is Tatum the father of Tatumism," one couple was oblivious to it all. A boy and a girl sat very close together in Kenan Stadium eating peanuts and arguing very seriously over something.

"But, honey, I know it is."

"But, darling, it couldn't be."

"Sugar, believe me, it IS."

Closer eavesdropping revealed that they were disputing over whether the Jones' Sausage streamer being pulled through the air was the length of the football field. He said it was. She said it wasn't, otherwise how could it look the same size as twenty yards of the football field. He patiently explained that things looked smaller in the air and told her to compare the size of the airplane with the Jones' Sausage streamer. He also gave her a melting look with this explanation. She melted and they went back to watching the game.

Moral of this fable: Appearances are deceiving —even at football games.

This week's J-53 lab assignment was a wedding story. It was sort of an unusual wedding story, but the bride still wore a dress and the dress still had to be described in the conventional, gushy way.

The girls made out fine, but the boys did not fare quite so well. Upon being told that the bride wore a waltz-length gown, one male protestor exclaimed:

"Holy Cow! What in heck is a waltz length gown and why do we have to put that in?

A dainty little J-53 powderpuff informed the dumb one that waltz-length dresses were dresses that hit just below the calf of a female limb.

His utterance indicated disgust.

The next fact, that the bride's dress was "tulle over tafetta" became rather distorted. One male version said "she wore a pull-over tafetta skirt."

Moral of this fable: There are some things girls can do better than boys; there are other things boys can do better than girls. Writing wedding stories is not one of these things.

As your poor old Godmother passed Bynum Hall today, a bundle of newspapers flew out of the window and crashed to the ground. The crash was immediately followed by a second. Not only is some subversive group around here trying to crush unsuspecting students with falling limbs, but also this group is trying to educate the masses by seeing that newspapers get into their heads one way or another.

Moral of this fable: A newspaper in the head is worth two on the ground.

Name-Calling & Back-Biting?

Editor:

Sunday's Daily Tar Heel was certainly a far cry from the usual "back-biting, name-calling" routine. It seems like we have suddenly turned our interests to the Hungarian freedom fighters; even alcohol and commericialism were discussed a little.

I ask: "What has happened to ten gallon-headed Jim Tatum?" Dr. Hedgpeth even disappeared from print. Editor Bass, now is the time to defend yourself, not your rights.

Miss Godwin, as a member of your edit staff, wrote a wonderful piece of propaganda Sunday, "Free Opinion on Recall." My dear Miss Godwin, who are these selfish opportunists to whom you refer?

And Tarheels, did you get a good look at the Readers' Repository? It has everything from Voltaire to a former associate of the Tar Heel. Isn't all this wonderful? Now our beloved editor can blast any and everyone he chooses. Perhaps we could change the paper's name to the "Daily Blaster."

Maybe someday Editor Bass will write a book that will earn him millions—Name Calling Made Easy. It is my humble opinion that he is well qualified for this chore.

Freedom of the press covers a lot of territory. And it is a little like candy. Too much of it seems to make one sick. I am definitely not inferring that Editor Bass is sick, but I do think he has had just about enough candy.

Can there be any doubt that the recall election attempt is obviously contrived by a political clique who would, should the recall be successful, use The Daily Tar Heel to their best advantage.

How else could petition-weilder Wally Kuralt guarantee that only one other candidate would enter the race against the present editor, should the recall movement gain enough strength from the unsuspecting? Unless Kuralt and Co. were manipulating the whole move for political reasons, how would he know that only one other candidate planned to enter any abominable recall race???

Disarmament

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Nov. 8 (AP)—The United Nations brushed aside today the threat of a Soviet boycott and called for new private talks aimed at breaking the disarmament deadlock.

By a thumping majority of 57 to 9 the 82-nation Political Committee approved a resolution calling for the U.N. subcommittee on disarmament to resume its negotiations with priority given to proposals by the western powers.

The Soviet Union failed to find any support outside its own bloc in opposing the proposal. Among the 15 nations abstaining were Syria, Yugoslavia, India, Egypt and other Arab nations. South Africa was absent.

Cut System Change Eyed

A change in the cut system's regulations on illnesses is being considered.

Student Body President Sonny Evans said yesterday that he will appoint a committee to act through the Chancellor's Cabinet and appear before the Faculty Committee on cuts to discuss a change.

Evans said a consideration of the regulations was forthcoming from the recent influenza crisis when UNC students were placed under the Honor System in reporting illnesses.

This committee will appear before the Faculty Committee at its first meeting in December.

North Carolina farmers will have $6.58 million in ACP funds in 1958.

Need Greater Than Supply

A greater demand for history teachers than the existing supply can satisfy is reported by Dr. Fletcher F. Green in the recently issued News Letter of the Department of History in UNC.

Thirty recent graduates were placed in new positions, the department chariman reports, but many requests were unfilled because graduates were not available. The UNC graduates took positions in North Carolina and 10 other states: Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, New Jersey, New York, Tennessee, Texas and Virginia.

The News Letters reports the activities of the department faculty and alumni, as well as their extensive publications.

Grdauate students working in the department this year total 70, Dr. Green states, with 30 others having completed their course work, now engaged in research and preparation of these and dissertations.

"The total enrollment in history, graduate and undergraduate, is 1,880. More than 200 undergraduates are majoring in history," he reports, which shows a considerable increase over 1956 figures.

A large number of the graduate students hold non-University fellowships, including three Woodrow Wilson Fellows, four Southern Fellows, two Danforth Fellows, two foreign students on Fulbright Fellowships, one Leopold Shepp Foundation-Presbyterian Church U. S. A. Fellow.

Durham Sewage Plant Said Cause Of 'Glow'

While other people in the United States have been seeing Sputniks and other mysterious objects in the sky lately, Chapel Hill came up with its own whatnik, probably a not-nik Wednesday night.

Several UNC students reported seeing a mysterious red glow in the sky that split into two parts.

Another UNC student said he saw the same phenomenon in Durham — a red cloud in the general vicinity of the moon.

At the time he saw it, he was a short distance from the Durham sewage disposal plant. As he neared the plant, he saw that the red cloud resulted from a cloud of smoke rising from the plant.

This smoke cloud was illuminated by a red neon sign in front of Howard Johnson's restaurant.

UNC student Faul Rule was the first to report sighting the "red glow" Wednesday night from Chapel Hill.

Rule said he first thought he saw a glow from a fire in the northern sky, but noticed it didn't come down to the horizon like a fire glow.

An Orange County deputy sheriff who saw the glow from his car said he thought he heard a sound like the motors of a jet plane.

Henry Fulcher, Carolina student, said the red glow appeared to him "like the glow of neon lights."

Manhunt Follows Trail Of Cars Into Kentucky

RALEIGH, Nov. 7—(AP)—The search for a killer of two North Carolina highway patrolmen followed a trail of wrecked, stolen autos across Kentucky today. North Carolina police took down roadblocks, up since the Tuesday night slayings.

Kentucky police told the Charlotte News by telephone that they believed the killer afoot and injured in the Lancaster area of central Kentucky.

Bloodstains in the wrecked cars prompted the belief that the man was injured, police explained, as they searched farms in the area.

Focus of the biggest manhunt in North Carolina in 20 years had shifted to Chattanooga, Tenn., earlier today when the killer abandoned the powerful, black Oldsmobile the two North Carolina patrolmen stopped just before they were shot to death.

The car bore Pennsylvania license plates, reported stolen Monday night. Inside the vehicle, among luggage, weapons and ammunition, was a North Carolina license tag, also reported stolen.

Within 10 minutes after the slight, dark-complexioned killer left the Oldsmobile in a residential area, state, city and federal police started combing the area for him.

The trail shifted to Kentucky this morning, however, when officers found a 1957 Chrysler 300C, capable of 150 miles an hour, wrecked at Stanford, Ky. Stanford is 220 miles from Chattanooga, where the vehicle was reported stolen.

At Lancaster Ky., officers found another wrecked car, a Chevrolet reported stolen at Stanford, only 10 miles away. The vehicle was parked by an automobile agency from which another 1947 car, a Dodge, was stolen.

Next Playmakers Show To Begin November 15

Light and laughable entertainment in the form of "Teahouse of the August Moon" will be presented by the Carolina Playmakers in Memorial Hall, Nov. 15-17 at 8:30 p. m.

Sodsai Vanij-Vadhana, a native of Bangkok, Thailand, and Joe Dillard, of Greer, S. C., will provide the romantic interests in this comedy of occupied Okinawa.

Sodsai, as Lotus Blossom, will appear for the first time in a major Playmakers show . Members of the Department of Dramatic Art saw her last month as Estelle in "No Exis," a studio production.

She is, however, no stranger to the theater, having appeared as Harpagon in Moliere's "The Miser" and as Mrs. Knipp in "The Privy Council" with the drama group at Chulalongkorn University, Bankok. Sodsai is a graduate student in the DA Dept.

Joe Dillard will play the role of Capt. Fisby, to whom Lotus Blossom is given as a present. Fisby, who has bungled every task assigned to him before Tobiki, is determined that he can bring Western culture to the Okinawans, only to find himself being assimilated into the village life: kimona, getas, and all.

Tickets for "Teahouse of the August Moon" are available at the Playmakers' business office and at Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

A professional theatre group will present "The Rivalry," a new play by Norman Corwin, at Memorial Hall on Dec. 6.

Agnes Morehead, Raymond Massey, and Martin Gabel will star in this production.

AT UNC

Students On Bridge

Pick up any bridge book and somewhere in it you will read that Blackwood is the most abused convention in bridge bidding.

Some beginning beliefs about Blackwood (all wrong) are: 1) you must bid Blackwood every time a slam is visualized; 2) all "4NT" bids are Blackwood; and 3) the Blackwood initiator has complete charge of the bidding everytime he starts the request for aces.

The hand:
Dealer—South; both vulnerable

NORTH
S 5 3 2
H K J 10 3 2
D A 7
C A 4 3

EAST	WEST
S Q 7 6 4	S A 9 8
H 7	H 8 5
D Q J 10 9 8 6	D K 5 4 3 2
C J 6	C 10 8 5

SOUTH
S K J 10
H A Q 9 6 4
D VOID
C K Q 9 7 2

THE BIDDING:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1H	PASS	3H	PASS
4D	PASS	4H	PASS
4NT	PASS	5D!	PASS
6H	(ALL PASS)

None of these beliefs are correrct.

Blackwood is bid only if they only problems are sheer number of first and second round controls (aces and kings) hled by partner and if the contract is safe at 5-odd over any negative resource by partner.

To illustrate the above point. Let us assume that the bidding infers that you and your partner have a good chance for slam in, say, clubs; but you only have one ace and must find two in your partner's hand to safely bid six. Do you use Blackwood? An emphatic no. If partner bids 5-diamonds, you will be extremely embarrassed; for you will have to bid six clubs even with two aces against you. And exactly this problem frequently exists when you are contemplating a minor suit slam. To handle such slam tries, you should plan some other sequence, probably one involving cue bids, so that you learn what is necessary at lower levels.

Today's hand illustrates a subtle point in the use of Blackwood that few players are aware of. The use of Blackwood following one or more cue bids has a special modified meaning: it requests partner to name the number of aces in suits other than suits in which cue bids have been made.

Quite naturally South, with a revalued hand of 20-24 points (depending on which bridge book you read), contemplated slam in hearts. But he had a problem. If he initiated Blackwood directly, as most players are inclined to do, he will really be in a sweat if any response is forthcoming that shows only one or two aces. For South will simply have no way to know if the shown ace or aces includes the ace of diamonds; and if only one ace is shown, he therefore will be on a guess as to whether six are in the hand or not. If two are shown, he'll be sure of six, but he certainly will not have any way of knowing whether seven are there or not.

But today's South thought ahead and instead of barging wrecklessly into Blackwood, he cue bid his diamond void. North of course was able to infer his partner was void since he himself held the ace of diamonds. Were it not for his three worthless spades and the knowledge that South lacks the aces of spades (in cue-bidding one must cue bid his lowest suit with first round control; had South held the ace or a void in spades, he would prefer a cue-bid of three spades to the actual cut bid of 4-diamonds which he made and which denied first round control of both spades and clubs), North might have been tempted to go along with the cue-bidding by a bid of 5-clubs himself. But North fears duplication in diamonds and feels he has pushed his values far enough, so he resignedly returned to the agreed trump suit by a bid of 4-hearts.

Now South can safely bid Blackwood, for partner must now show the number of aces held overlooking the diamond suit. North obediently supperesses his ace of diamonds and bids 5-diamonds to show one other ace.

Whether that ace is the ace of spades or the ace of clubs, South does not care. He has second round control in both suits and the combined point count suggest that slam is more than possible.

And only by truly sloppy play can South miss making his small heart slam.

There are many other subtleties to Blackwood which escape most players' reservoir of knowledge. We will take up these finer points from time to time - of Blackwood or other bidding conventions.

Unless you know exactly why you are bidding Blackwood, and unless you are prepared for every possible response by partner, don't use Blackwood.

On today's hand, for example, I would much rather hear South bid directly 6-hearts over his partner's three heart raise than to hear him immediately go into Blackwood. At least he would be conceding that he did not know how else to bid his hand, and even if the wrong aces are held by North, he has the chance that the opponents may get off to a bad lead and he may pull in his slam even though two aces are out against him.

You want a job

PLUS

. . . plus the chance to get ahead
. . . plus the chance for recognition
. . . plus the chance to keep learning

As a leader in many fields, Union Carbide offers a handsome assortment of plus factors with its jobs. It's a top producer of petrochemicals—and U. S. output of petrochemicals has roughly doubled every five years since World War II. It's a leading producer of oxygen—and new steelmaking methods use such vast quantities of oxygen that consumption in '57 is expected to be double that of '55. And these are only two of the expanding fields in which Union Carbide is a leader.

In terms of jobs with plus, this growth means Advancement with a capital "A." As our markets expand, we need more people to handle the development, production, and sale of our products.

Tomorrow's Game Has Some Interesting Facets

Tomorrow's football battle between the Universities of North and South Carolina in Kenan Stadium should be an interesting one from several viewpoints.

First, will Jim Tatum be able to avenge a 14-0 defeat suffered at the hand of his protege Warren Giese in Columbia one year ago? Giese played under Tatum at Maryland and later assisted him there. The Tar Heel mentor would like to even the score with Giese and there's no better time than tomorrow.

Secondly, this game could mark the turning point in the season for the two clubs. The Gamecocks will bring a 3-3 record into the contest with Virginia, N. C. State and Wake Forest remaining on the schedule. A victory over the Tar Heels would give the Gamecocks a good chance of at least a 5-5 mark on the season, and perhaps even better.

Likewise, the Tar Heels need a victory to enhance their chances of a "break even" or "winning" season. The Tatummen have a 4-3 mark and games with Duke and Virginia remaining.

The Gamecocks will also offer an opportunity for Tatum to test his reserve power. Injuries to several key players have weakened the Tar Heels considerably. This should give the Carolina secondary manpower a test.

Another interesting sidelight will be the effect which television will have on attendance. With the game being aired from Baltimore to Miami, via television, chances are the crowd will be greatly reduced.

Physical Status Is Hard To Discern

The actual physical strength of the Tar Heels is as hard to predict as a grade on a multiple choice quiz. First it seemed that the Tar Heels would be without the services of halfbacks Jim Schuler, Emil DeCantis and Don Coker. Now it seems that the trio might be ready to go tomorrow.

Tatum, however, probably will not use anybody who is not in almost top physical condition. After the Gamecocks, the Tar Heels have a week layoff before going against Duke and it would be foolish to risk re-injuries against SC.

It is almost definite now that center Ron Koes will miss the South Carolina game since Tatum has moved senior end Jim Jones over to the pivot spot. Behind Jones will be Bill Hardison and Dick Need.

Students To Be Represented On Committee

The students will be represented on the Coaches Committee from now on.

At the monthly meeting of the Athletic Council Wednesday night, a proposal by Student Body Prexy, Sonny Evans was approved to have student representation on the Coaches Committee whose function it is to interview, review, approve and recommend new coaching contracts and new coaches.

"We all feel very gratified and pleased with the decision of the Athletic Council to allow students to participate in the selection of our coaches," Evans said. "We feel that it is important to have all three groups (faculty, alumni and students) represented on the committees appointed by the Athletic Council."

Evans said that the student representative would be chosen from the student members of the Athletic Council which includes himself, Daley Goff (Monogram Club President) and Wayne Bishop, Carolina Athletic Assn. head.

Sports Calendar, Social Calendar Conflict

It's a shame that Germans weekend should fall on the busiest weekend of the season on the Carolina sports front, or vice versa.

This afternoon, the Carolina soccer team plays Maryland in a very important ACC match, the freshman football team makes its first appearance on home soil against Virginia and both the varsity and freshman track team will be in action at home.

Naturally, the crowd at all of these events will be sparse. The concert is scheduled for 3:30, and this makes it practically impossible to divide one's time.

Incidentally, all of the aforementioned teams are doing well this season. The Carolina minor sports program is always strong, although support is, more often than not, very poor.

How's This For An Average?

There's a good chance that South Carolina halfback Haywood King holds a sizable lead in the "kickoff returns" department in the nation. His average is 82.0—but there's one hitch, he's only made one return.

The Wake Forest Deacons should finally win themselves a ball ball game this weekend when they entertain Virginia Tech in Winston-Salem. This will be the seventh bid to crack the win column for the Deacs.

Buck Freeman, Frank McGuire's able basketball assistant, will be on hand at Fort Bragg Sunday for a service basketball clinic. McGuire was scheduled to appear but had to forego the clinic due to other commitments.

South Carolina backers are singing the praises of a Fayetteville native named Corky Gaines. Gaines is a defensive middle guard who SC Sports Publicist, Bob Isbell says "is most often seen in the presence of opposing backfieldmen on a Saturday afternoon."

Barnstorming Tour Set

New York Yankees will barnstorm home from spring training with the Philadelphia Phillies in April in a departure from usual Yankee policy.

Normally the Yanks play several minor league clubs in their home parks on the way back to New York from their St. Petersburg, Fla. base.

With the departure of the Dodgers for Los Angeles, the Phillies will take over the usual home-and-home weekend series before opening day. The Phils will play at Yankee Stadium Saturday, April 12 and the Yanks will visit Philadelphia Sunday, April 13. The Yanks will close their training camp April 4 and will start their tour with manager Mayo Smith's Phillies April 5 at Jacksonville.

Quigg Injured

Carolina basketball center Joe Quigg sustained a knee injury last night in an intra-squad scrimmage in Woollen Gym. Quigg was shouldered from the court. Trainer John Lacey said right after the incident that it was too early to determine the extent of the injury.

A crowd of about 500 saw last year's varsity defeat the current sophomores 83-82 in a thriller.

Booters In Big Battle Here Today

By JIM PURKS

The Carolina varsity soccer team will face its biggest test of the year here today when it encounters always - powerful Maryland at 3 p. m. on Fetzer Field.

When the Tar Heels take the field against the Terps they will be facing a team whose predecessors have set a torrid pace in the record books.

Maryland has won the soccer championship in the Atlantic Coast Conference ever since the conference was started. Even more impressive, a University of Maryland soccer team has never been beaten or tied by an ACC rival.

NOT DAZZLED

Coach Marvin Allen's Tar Heels, however, are up for today's game, and are not to be dazzled by the record books. Allen's squad has been waiting for this game since practice started on Monday, September 16

The spirit of the team was exemplified by one member of the team who had printed and posted early in the year a painted sign in the team's locker section saying, "This is the year to beat Maryland!"

FULL STRENGTH

Currently holding a 2-1 record, the Tar Heels will be at full strength for today's clash with the Terps.

Defensively, the team has been boosted by the return of right fullback Dave Corkey, who has been out of the lineup for over three due to illness. Corkey was able to play in Tuesday's 2-0 win over Davidson College and was one big reason for the team's fine defensive showing.

Ted Youhanna, who was injured in the left leg last week, also was back in the lineup Tuesday at left fullback.

SWITCH PAID OFF

A defensive switch paid off for Coach Allen in the Davidson game, and he'll try the same for the Maryland contest. Allen switched Bob Borden, who had been center fullback in the team's first two games, to the left halfback slot.

In the vacated center fullback position, Allen put his sturdy sophomore star, Hugh Goodman. Both Borden and Goodman excelled at their new positions.

The team's hustling captain, Bill Blair, will be at the right halfback position and work along with Borden. Backing the defense up will be goalie Jim Rattay, who has gained two shutouts in the three games played so far this year.

Sophomore whiz Mike Thompson, playing the center forward position, will lead the Tar Heels' forward line against Maryland. Thompson is the team's leading scorer, booting in six of the team's total of eight goals.

Along with Thompson will be insides Ted Smith and Tom Rand. Smith scored the other two goals for the Tar Heels in September's 3-0 victory over Roanoke College.

Duke - Navy Battle Billed A 'Humdinger'

BALTIMORE, Nov. 7 (AP) — You can take the rival coaches' words for it that the Navy-Duke football game Saturday in Memorial Stadium should be a humdinger.

Each coach tabs the other team as the best opponent so far this season.

"Duke is by far the best team to face us," says Coach Eddie Erdelatz, whose Navy team knocked off undeated Notre Dame last Saturday, 20-6. "They're way ahead on talent."

"We thought before the season that Navy would be the best team in the country and think it's not far from that now," replies Coach Bill Muray of Duke, beaten for the first time by Georgia Tech last week.

There should be no slackening of pace throughout the game since the rival coaches harp on the other's depth in personnel. And that the other felow's "boys are the biggest."

Going by the listed weights, the two lines should be on an even keel with each averaging 207 pounds. Duke will have a decided edge in backfield weights, particularly if Navy halfback Ned Oldham's sore leg keeps him on the bench for the second straight week.

Ronnie Bernece will start instead and he weighs only 146 pounds. And if Dick Dagampat is able to start, the Navy fullback will weigh only 165 pounds.

TAR BABY QUARTERBACK — Ex-Durham High School star, Russ Hollers will be calling signals for the Carolina Tar Babies when they go against the Virginia freshmen this afternoon in Kenan Stadium. Hollers has been the number one QB all season.

Runners In Three-Team Meet This Afternoon

By DAVE WIBLE

Well on the road towards repeating as ACC champions Carolina's undefeated cross country team will go after victories number five and six this afternoon when it plays host to the harrier squads of South Carolina and Wake Forest at 4 p. m. on Fetzer Field.

The freshman squads of Carolina and Wake Forest will compete in a dual meet at the same time.

The Tar Heels have had victories over Clemson, Virginia, in dual meets; and Duke and Tennessee in a triangular meet, so far this season, while sickness forced meets with Maryland and Wake Forest to be canceled.

Probably the greatest competition for the Tar Heels will be from Bill Medlin, of the Deacs, and Billy Latham of the Gamecock. Medlin has been the pace setter for Wake Forest all season and Latham ,who finished eighth in the ACC last year, has held the same honor for South Carolina.

The Carolina squad will field one of the top distance running quartets in the nation. Wayne Bishop, who set a new course record at Clemson this year, has led the pack followed by the team's captain Everet Whatley, middle-distance star Dave Scurlock, and up and coming sophomore Cowles Liipfert. These four have seen few heels in ACC competition this year.

Rounding out that Carolina squad will be Alex Coffin, Jim Hunter, Doug Henderson, and Fick Authur. Sophomore Joe Friedberg is still out of competition with a sprained ankle.

The squad has had its progress hampered for the past month by flu, but it looks like that is all over now and that they can resume working all out towards the ACC championship coming up Nov. 19.

The freshman holding a 1-2 record have not had the success of their brothers but have been steadily improving during the year. The outstanding men on the squad are

Harry Miller, Worth Sweet, Neal Chappell, Bobby Foxworth, and John Bowles.

The freshmen will start about ten minutes before the varsity and running a shorter course will finish shorty after the varsity gets underway.

FIRST HOME GAME:

Freshman Gridders Play Host To Virginia Today

By ROSTY HAMMON

Today, for the first time this season, the Carolina freshman football team will play before the home crowd in Kenan Stadium against the Virginia frosh in a game scheduled for 2 p. m.

The Tar Babies will be out to improve on their 2-1 record and according to Coach Bud Carson, the team will go into the game better prepared then it has been all season. Probably the only doubtful position today will be fullback, where the top three men are hampered by injuries.

Alex Rice has an injured knee, Frank Riggs is bothered by a knee injury, and Caroll Carpenter sustaind a shoulder injury in scrimmage this week. This will probably place the starting position on the shoulders of Jim Graham or Dick Detanna.

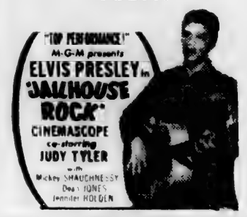
Otherwise, the team is generally sound after the flu epidemic nearly wrecked the squad two weeks ago.

LOST TO WOLFLETS

For the season, the Tar Babies have whipped Maryland 14-7 in the season opener, lost to State 33-19 in the midst of the flu epidemic, and bounced back to edge Wake Forest 14-13.

Defense won the Maryland game for the Tar Babies, as again and again they stopped the Terps inside their own 20, then broke the game open with long downfield drives. State's veteran-loaded team just walked over the flu weakened Tar Babies. An extra point decided the most thrilling game of the year, as the Tar Heel yearlings nudged the Baby Deacs 14-13.

DARK HORSE TEAM



Virginia's freshman are reportedy a darkhorse team and by the only comparison of scores, dropped a 20-6 verdict to N. C. State. Coach Carson thought the Cavalier frosh played an inspired game against the Wolflets and the Tar Baby coach looks for plenty of trouble.

The probable starting lineup for the Tar Babies includes Mike Greenday and Bob Campbell at the ends, Bill Crabtree and Jim Shumate at the tackles, Rip Hawkins and Jim Joy at the guards, and Tom Cabe at center. In the backfield, Russ Hollers will start at quarterback, Sonny Folckomer and Lenny Beck at the halves and Jim Graham or Dick Detanna at fullback.

BUSHY COOK AND RAMESES

They're A Part Of Carolina

MARY MOORE MASON

"Who's that man down there with the beard, leading that big goat around on the field," said the sweet young import at one of the football games this year.

"That," said her date patiently, "is Bushy Cook and Rameses, the mascot of the school."

Bushy Cook and Rameses are to be seen at most of the UNC football games and are always noticed and commented on.

For, indeed, who could help but notice them and comment on them.

However, little is actually known about the tall, wild-bearded farmer and the blue horned ram, the latest in a long succession of blue horned rams at UNC.

When asked a few years ago why he had let his beard grow so long and so wild, Bushy exploded a few popular myths. "I just let it grow for the hell of it," he said.

"Back in 1932—that's when Roosevelt came in, wasn't it?—well, that's when I started growing it," he said.

According to Bushy, his present job started when he went to a football game in 1946, and a photographer spotted him in the end zone and took a couple of novelty shots. Next day his picture was in the paper, and soon he was asked to take care of Rameses at the games.

One reason why so few people actually know so little about Bushy is that he lives a little off the beaten track, in fact on a 69 - acre farm outside Efland. However, Bushy has not always been a resident of Efland. He was born and raised in Haywood County. For the major part of his life he has worked in textile mills, being known now as one of the best men in the operation of a loom.

When the war broke out, Bushy took his family of seven to Connecticut, where the pay was better, and they all got jobs up there. After the war they had made a considerable amount of money and decided to move near Efland where Bushy's folks had bought a small farm.

Rameses is not kept at Bushy's farm but at the farm of H. S. Hogan. Bushy has tried to take him to all the games since 1947. In 1954 Bushy went to Woman's College and was quoted as saying, "They all seemed to recognize me. They said that they were coming over for the game, and if Carolina won they were all going to have to give me a kiss. I guess I'll have to leave quick right after the game 'cause that'll be a heap of women a coming out of those stands at the end."

Rameses of the past have had a hard time of it. After the death of Rameses VII, the ram's keeper said "If you ask me what killed Rameses, I'd say those Duke students worried him to death last fall when they chased him around the pasture all night." According To Frankie Black, head cheerleader, the present ram is Rameses VIII.

One of the most colorful events in Bushy and Rameses' career is one of the Carolina-Notre Dame game, which was held in New York. At this time Bushy loaded Rameses in a trailer painted blue and white, decorated with 27 rebel flags and drove to New York.

During his brief stay he probably created more sensation than the town had ever seen. He is probably the only person in history to make four left turns in the heart of the great metropolis, and when he paraded the ram across Times Square he stopped traffic.

"The police," he said, "were going to put Rameses in the police station, but when they saw what the ram meant to the students they were afraid that he might be stolen so they put him in a kennel."

UNC Delegate Elected SSL Speaker Pro Tem

RALEIGH—The State Student Legislative assembly, convening here this weekend, acted with ususual solemnity in debate on bills and resolutions which came before it Thursday and Friday.

Thursday evening Dave Reid a Carolina delegate, was elected speaker pro tem of the senate, one of the most responsbile positions at the assembly.

Also Thursday evening Charlie Dean of the Carolina delegation introduced a bill to provide for repeal of North Carolina obscenity statutes. Joel Fleischman of UNC spoke of present obscenity statutes as an abridgement of free speech.

Fleischman said he does not feel it was the right of any one state "to impose a public morality."

Friday morning, Duke Women's College introduced its resolution that all states' laws and constitutional stipulations on prohibition of inter-marriage between the races be repealed.

After considerable debate this resolution was overwhelmingly passed in both the house and senate.

Other resolutions and bills were:

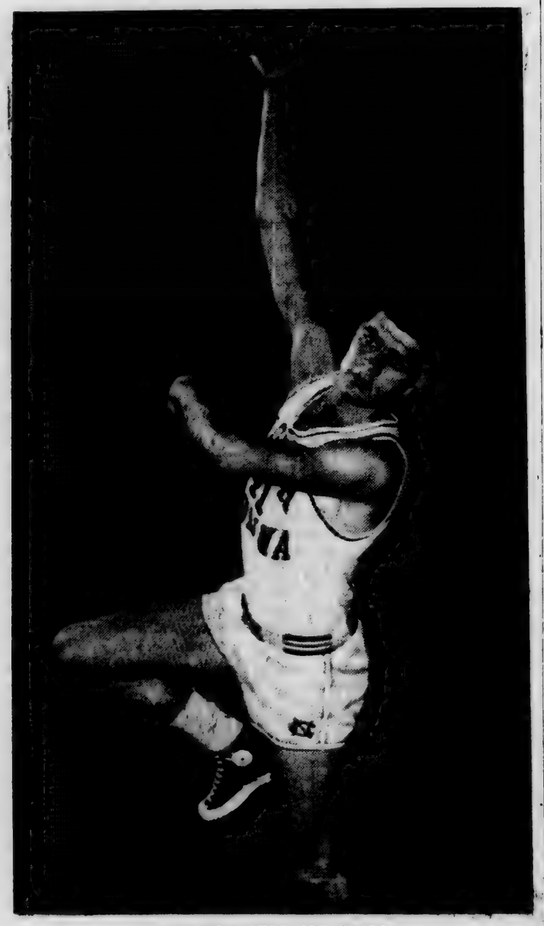
1. A resolution restricting traffic laws in North Carolina, defeated in the House 51-50.

2. A bill by State College to legalize prostitution in North Carolina was defeated.

3. A bill to legalize euthanasia, introduced by N. C. State College at Durham, was defeated.

4. A resolution commending Governor Hodges, sponsored by Catawba College, failed in the Senate but passed overwhelming in the House.

Friday evening Joel Fleischman of the UNC delegation presented UNC's major bill, a resolution commending the action of Gov. Orval Faubus in connection with the Little Rock school integdration crisis.



Knee Injury Sidelines Joe Quigg For Season

The Carolina basketball team received a tremendous blow yesterday when it was learned that number one center Joe Quigg will be out for the remainder of the season due to a knee injury sustained in an intra-squad scrimmage Thursday night.

Dr. Hedgepeth, head physician at the infirmary, said yesterday that "Quigg will undergo surgery this morning for a fracture of the right tibia which extends into the knee joint. Consequently," Hedgepeth said, "Joe will be forced to miss the basketball season."

Coach Frank McGuire had said earlier in the day that he was afraid that Quigg's injury was much more serious than at first thought. "They are the things which happen to a team after a big season," McGuire said. "We got lots of good breaks last year, and now we're having some bad ones." McGuire was not available for comment after it had been definitely confirmed that Quigg would miss the season.

The mishap occurred in a scramble for a rebound, as Quigg was knocked back and collided with sophomore Lee Schaffer and fell on the knee.

Trip To Moon Said Possible

SAN ANTONIO, Tex., Nov. 8 (AP)—Dr. Alan T. Waterman, director of the National Science Foundation, today said a trip to the moon is possible—if the American people decide they want to spend tremendous sums of money for such a project.

He took part in a symposium at the Southwest Research Institute's conference on "Science in the Next Decade."

Dr. Waterman said the trip would take 10 hours, and the first trip could be a landing or simply circling the moon and returning.

"If we want to beat the Russians to the moon, do we want to do so badly enough to spend the millions of dollars that might instead profitably be invested in a half dozen other promising lines of scientific inquiry?" he asked.

Dr. Waterman said that under conditions as we now know them, flights to the two nearest planets, Venus and Mars, would take years rather than hours.

"Thousands or millons of years would be required under present conditions to travel to any of the stars," the scientist declared. "Even if we could travel at the fastest speed known—that of light— 186,000 miles per second."

Waterman said Russia's first in the launching of Sputik was a major disappointment to American scientists, but he cautioned against "A hasty and ill-considered effort to right the situation" that would "turn things upside down."

UNC, Birds Meet In Rival Contest

UP Party Leaders Predict Success

Chairman Says Unit Confident

University Party Chairman Harry Braxton said today his political unit is looking forward to Tuesday's campus-wide elections "with full confidence."

In a pre-election statement issued here, he said UP officials are predicting "broad success" in the vote to fill key judicial, legislative and class posts on the UNC campus.

Election day will get underway at 9 a.m. Tuesday to fill positions on the Men's and Women's Honor Councils, Student Legislature, Student Council, and freshman, sophomore and junior class offices.

In naming candidates for the offices, Braxton said, UP has "applied high standards" in determining whom to nominate for the posts.

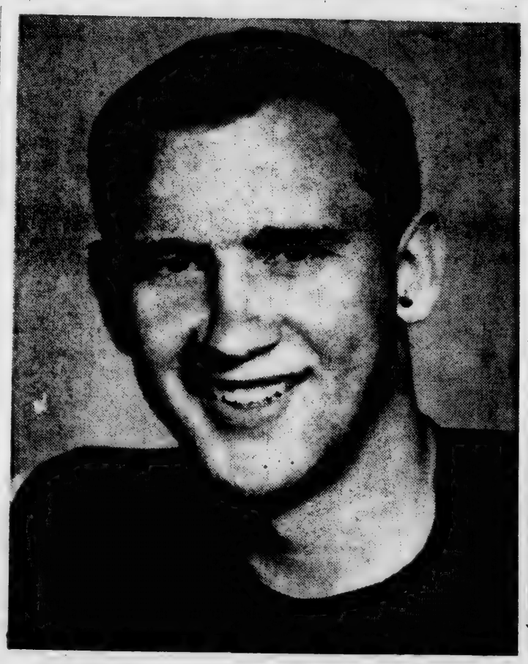
"It is my sincere belief that these candidates will most closely reflect your opinions and feelings simply because they have been nominated by a large cross-section of the student body," he added.

Braxton said that as election day approaches, UP "asks the students to closely look at our outstanding slate of candidates for both the class offices and student legislature."

"We can faithfully promise that if our candidates are elected they will work dilligently and realistically toward fulfilment of student government needs and will incessantly work to improve student government by reflecting accurately student opinion."

Evans Delays Signing Bill

Student Body President Sonny Evans has delayed signing the bill which will pay off the $451.06 debt incurred by the Tarnation, former campus humor magazine.



Evans said he was investigating the background of the Tarnation to see if there is any legal justification for the legislation.

He said he was going to check with the printshop which the money is owed to determine the nature of the debt and to get an itemized accounting for it.

Evans was unavailable for a statement concerning what action is planned on the bill. He stated that he was "undecided" as to just what action would be taken. He is presently conferring with party officials concerning the proposal.

The bill was introduced in the Student Legislature two weeks ago by Ed Levy, UP. The proposal was passed in last week's legislative meeting, but against Student Party opposition.

If the bill is not signed or vetoed by Nov. 11, it will become law.

NEW POSITION—Carolina's former end Jim Jones will get his first crack of the year at center today against South Carolina. Jones played some at center in 1955. He has been switched due to the injury of Ron Koes and Jim Davis, the Tar Heel's number one and two pivot men.

Joint Di-Phi Meeting To Debate Bass Ouster

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The Philanthropic Literary Society and Dialectic Senate, in a joint-session Monday at 8 p. m., will debate a bill "approving the removal of the present editor by the process of recall."

The two organizations will meet in Phi Hall on the top floor of New East; Gerry Boudreau, President of the Dialectic Senate, will preside at the meeting.

The bill charges in the "whereas clauses" that "in the past Neil Bass has shown evidence of being an incompetent employee of the Student Body;

"The aforementioned editor of the Daily Tar Heel has made statements which could be interpreted as libelous concerning the conduct of the head football coach and the head physician of the student infirmary;

"He has ignored available facts concerning the Asian Flu situation at Carolina;

"He has ignored a minimum of two invitations to be present at conference in the Chancellor's office; and

"He has failed to organize his staff as an efficient and smoothly-operating unit."

The bill was written by Representative Don Gray of the Phi.

Jess Stribling, president pro tem of the Phi, said that all people concerned in the issue of the recall have been invited to attend. The meeting is also open to the public.

Commenting on the bill, Editor Neil Bass said he was surprised at "the negative tone of the bill." He said he would try to attend the meeting if possbile in order to defend his position against this "negativism."

In 1956 a joint session of the Di and Phi failed, by a vote of 76-23, to pass a bill to remove Louis Kraar and Ed Yoder, then co-editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Poster Damage Code Violation

Students were reminded yesterday that it is an honor code offense to destroy, mutilate or tear down campaign posters. This reminder came from Leon Holt, member of the Elections Board.

Holt also urged all members of the Election Board to attend the meeting of the board to be held in Graham Memorial Monday at 2 p. m. "The business that must be attended to at this meeting is urgent," he said.

Concerning expense accounts for candidates in the fall elections, Holt said that these must be submitted to the Student Government Office no later than 6 p. m. Monday.

"This account must be a complete, itemized, signed statement of all campaign expenditures," he said.

Tar Heel–S.C. Contest Will Have TV Audience

By BILL KING

A couple of old Southern gridiron rivals will carry their exploits onto the verdant Kenan Stadium turf here this afternoon, and the 2 o'clock kickoff should commence an interesting Atlantic Coast Conference struggle to be viewed by about 25,000 fans plus a large home television audience.

It's the Greater Universities of North and South Carolina in the 33rd renewal of a series which had its inception back in 1903. Since then, the North has built up a tremendous edge of 22-6-4. But last season, the Gamecocks leveled a 14-0 shutout at Jim Tatum's warriors.

It should be a battle of the avengers as both teams suffered losses last week, and both need a victory today in order to shoot for a winning season. Last week mighty Tennessee smote down the Tar Heels, 35-0 and Maryland edged by South Carolina, 10-6.

The Tar Heels (4-3) hold victories over Clemson, Miami, Navy and Wake Forest and have lost to Maryland, N. C. State and Tennessee. The Gamecocks (3-3) have beaten Wofford, Texas and Furman, while losing to Clemson, Duke and Maryland.

Injuries will take some of the luster off this afternoon's contest, as both teams are below par physically. The Tar Heels will probably miss the services of halfback Don Coker, guard Jack Lineberger and center Ron Koes in addition to several other second unit men. It now appears that backs Jim Schuler and Paul DeCantis will be starting.

The flu-bitten Gamecocks are reportedly in only "average" physical condition with a host of "doubtfuls" making a starting lineup hard to predict.

The game will bring together a couple of coaches who should know each other pretty well by this time. Warren Giese, head man at SC now, once played and coached under Tatum at Maryland — This was only three years ago. Tatum would like a little revenge for the South Carolina victory last season and Giese would like to continue his mastery over his old boss.

The oddsmakers call it a toss up. Both teams are capable of busting loose with tremendous offensive power, but nobody wants to venture a guess just who will be on the long end of the count this afternoon.

The Gamecocks are a running ball club, and rightly so because they have a couple of halfbacks named King Dixon and Alex Hawkins who compare favorably with any backfield duo in the country.

The probable starting lineups:

Pos.	USC	UNC
LE	Derrick	Payne
LT	D. Rogers	Pall
LG	Weston	Swearingen
C	L. Rogers	Jones
RG	Addison	Furjanic
RT	Kompara	Blazer
RE	Beall	Turlington
QB	Spears	Cummings
LH	Dixon	Schuler
RH	Hawkins	Goff
FB	Johnson	Gaca

These are the two men the Tar Heels will have to watch closest. Both can do about everything with a football, but their forte is moving the leather along the ground.

South Carolina likes to use the option play, with the two aforementioned halfbacks doing the chunking. The loss of quarterback Bobby Bunch has weakened the quarterback slot, thus Giese makes little use of his other two signal-callers, Stan Spears and W. L. Strickland.

The Tar Heels, offensively, will again be counting on the potent running of such men as Schuler, DeCantis, Daley Goff and fullback Giles Gaca to blend with the capable pitching arm of sophomore quarterback, Jack Cummings. The ever-dangerous Cummings has handled the club admirably since he became the number one QB against Wake Forest two weeks ago.

Cummings, indeed, could make a lot of difference today. He has

Bands To Add Color At Game

Saturday will be a colorful day on the campus of the nation's first state university. In addition to the North Carolina-South Carolina football contest, termed by one newspaper as the "Clash of the Wrecks," the day will mark the 16th anniversary of High School Band Day.

A total of 60 high school marching bands, all in colorful uniform, will add to the spectacle of the half time show in Kenan Stadium. Imagine yourself sitting in one of the stadium seats with over 4,000 performers in uniforms of various shades of Red, Green, Blue, Yellow, etc., stretched out on the green turf below.

Miss Kathyrn Siphers, Director of the Drexel N. C. High School Band, will be the guest conductor. She will lead the massed bands in a program especially arranged by Herbert W. Fred, director of UNC band. Her bands have consistently won superior ratings in state contests.

The program will include: "Pilgrim's Chorus" from "Tannhauser," "Dixie," "God Of Our Fathers," a novelty arrangement of "Working On The Railroad," and the two university alma maters.

The UNC Marching Band will add further color to one of the fall's biggest weekends when they present "A Salute To Carolina Industries" before the game begins. It is an abridged version of the show the band presented at the Maryland game. Be sure to be in your seat by 1:40 p.m.

Suspect Freed In 2 Shootings

GEORGETOWN, Ky., Nov. 8 (AP)—Robert Terry Jr. of Norman, N. C., said today the man being held here was not the motorist he saw shoot a North Carolina highway patrolman to death last Tuesday night.

Terry told police he hitchhiked a ride with the gunman before the man shot Highway Patrolman Wister Lee Reece, 39, near Ellerbe. Terry was brought here today by three North Carolina state police officers to check the identity of a man who gave his name as Kenneth Combs, 24, of Cincinnati.

Meanwhile, police at Bristol, Tenn., were holding a 27-year-old Buffalo, N. Y., man for identification in connection with the slayings. Authorities said the man, being held without charge, was picked up as a hitchhiker. They said the arresting officer noted a resemblance between the man and a description of the killer issued by North Carolina authorities.

Kentucky state police continued a farm-to-farm search for a man who abandoned two cars in Central Kentucky yesterday. One of the cars was abandoned near Stanford, Ky., and another, this one wrecked at Lancaster.

Police believe the driver of these wrecked cars was the same man who killed Reece, and an hour later shot to death another patrolman, J. T. Brown, near Sanford.

Combs was not freed immediately. He was unable to pay a $25 fine in police court for vagrancy and loietering today. These were the only charges which had been filed against him since his arrest yesterday.

Acceptance

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—(AP)—The White House reported today an immediate and gratifying acceptance of President Eisenhower's plans for a scientific big push to overtake Russia in satellite and missiles.

And a White House caller, Sen. Bridges (R-NH), supplied a guess at what it will cost: one or two billion dollars a year extra.

Two billions would just about equal what it cost to develop the first atomic bomb back in World War II. It would almost double the amount now being spent on missiles—2¼ billion dollars this fiscal year.

But Bridges, even though he is usually counted among the economy demanders in Congress, predicted Congress will appropriate whatever is needed to get the job done.

Tornadoes

ALEXANDRIA, La., Nov. 8—(AP)—Vicious tornadoes, their oncoming rush cloaked in thunder and rain, suddenly lashed out at four southern states last night and today, leaving 12 dead, more than a hundred injured, hundreds homeless.

The total damages easily will reach several million dollars.

Alexandria, a city of 40,000 in central Louisiana, absorbed most of the fury. Three died in that area. Louisiana recorded four other deaths, Texas had three and Mississippi two.

A baby twister also struck Selma, Ala. but no one was injured.

Sputnik Each Month

WASHINGTON, Nov. 8—(AP)—The head of the U. S. satellite program said today "I wouldn't be surprised" if the Russians launch a sputnik each month until the end of 1958.

Dr. John P. Hagen, director of Project Vanguard, also told a news conference he expects an extra push for his own program for the administration's new emphasis on missiles and science.

But he didn't change previous estimates that the United States will first get a test baby moon up next month and a full-fledged satellite in March.

Peasant Boy Khrushchev And Bowel Disruption . .

"The Soviet Union is an empire, not a country. And the fact should be remembered . . . The time may come sooner than we expect when the Soviet Union, presenting herself as a satisfied and 'progressive' land, will make approaches to the United States, as one anti-imperial power to another. What will America answer?"—Edward Crankshaw in the Atlantic magazine.

In all the hullabaloo of Russia's celebration of the Bolshevik Revolution's 40th anniversary, Russian technological progress and other various and sundry Soviet advances, the situation in the Soviet bowels has been all but overlooked.

Russia—contrary to the flashy psychological - propagandistic hodge-podge propounded by snaggle-toothed peasant boy Nikita Khrushchev—has always been plagued with internal difficulties which inevitably result in periodical purges.

De-Stalinization, de-Malenkovization and the recent de-Zhukovization all emphasis the tremendous bellyache of power-struggle which constantly harass Soviet bowels.

And the Soviet Union has many other difficulties which would make the ordinary country's internal organs roll in agitation.

Russian enslavement and exploitation of Caucasus, Uzbekistan, Kazakhstan, Transcaucasia have not made the population of these Russian-dominated provinces homogeneous Soviet disciples.

And enslavement of Poland, Czechoslavakia, East Germany, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, half of Austria, Albania and for a short time, Yugoslavia have not necessitated that these puppet states become unquestioning and unified divisions of the Soviet Empire.

The downfall of the Soviet Union—we feel and hope—will come from within. Already admirable demonstrations of freedom-seeking from Poland and Hungary have caused speculators to prognosticate that they may become another Yugoslavia—a fissure in the Soviet organizational scheme.

Secretary of State Seward ventured somewhat clairvoyantly in 1861:

"Russia and America may remain good friends until, each having made the circuit of half the globe in opposite directions, they shall meet each other in the regions where civilization first began" (China).

There definitely is an impending crisis. And there are indications that the crisis and conflagration may come in the Middle East—rather than in Seward's speculated China.

If such a conflagration does occur—and heaven forbid that such annihilation should doom mankind to oblivion—, we question whether Russia can present a unified front in combat. We should most definitely hope not.

In short, we feel that the name—Soviet Union—is most misleading. We do not feel that Russia is unified, and we hope that the Godless tyranny of Communism will meet its ignominious defeat from its bowels rather than from external forces..

Racial Amalgamation & Civil Liberties Limits

The State Student Legislature's passage of a resolution urging repeal of all state statutes prohibiting inter-marriage must be taken with a large economy-size grain of salt.

The resolution was introduced by the Duke Women's College delegation and has successfully passed by both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

Legal prohibition of racial inter-marriage may, in a sense, be a curtailment of civil liberties. But there are definite merits to laws which prohibit what may become wholesale racial amalgamation and miscegenation.

The element-time—is a panacea for many things and helps to iron out many knotty problems. Time—gradualism—in the integration-segregation crisis is an all-necessary element.

And limitations on civil liberties may be somewhat necessary—with the current integration antipathy being what it—as far as prohibition of racial inter-marriage is concerned.

SSL delegates should have looked long and hard before passage of the resolution.

Executive & Politics

We wonder if student government's executive is playing party politics with the legislature-passed bill to defray debts incurred by the now defunct Tarnation magazine.

President Sonny Evans refused to make a statement on his threatened veto of the bill until he conferred with "party leaders."

The measure was passed through the University Party's Student Legislature majority. And now the Student Party's banner-carrier Evans threatens a veto.

We definitely feel the measure has merits. Student government can hardly enhance its prestige by allowing closely-tied organizations to pile up and refuse to pay expenditures.

A law passed and enacted last year prohibits student government organizations from overspending their allocated budgets, under penalty of prosecution by the student government attorney-general. Thus there should be no repetition of the Tarnation fiasco.

But the debt incurred by Tarnation should be paid.

And Evans should not override the legislature's decision to take such responsible action.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Segregation III: Myth Of Equal Ed Facilities

Curtis Gans

There is a clause in the preamble of the U. S. Constitution which sets forth as one of the objects of American government, the promoting of the general welfare of the people of the United States.

Herein lies the inherent inequality of segregation in schools, no matter how equal the quality of education in separate schools.

One of the things that education is supposed to do, besides give the student knowledge of certain facts and fundamentals, is to bridge the gap between the lack of understanding between people. The net result of this is to enable people to deal more capably, more fairly, and more humanely with one another.

This gap of misunderstanding cannot be bridged by any separation between peoples of different races, creeds, religions, or cultures.

Yet, if integration is to take place, the white children must not sacrifice their standard of education to make this possible, for the protection of individual rights includes the protection of the rights of the majority. The sacrifices of any rights to the higher education standards that the whites now posses in the South in order to provide a common denominator is antithetical to democracy.

Then one must reconcile the current failure in Washington schools with the ideal of equality of education.

The Washington case is a standard example of the argument many southerners and some northerners use in support of separate facilities for education. In Washington since 1953, the educational standard has gone down, and since that year of integration of all public schools in Washington, the incidence of delinquency has gone up.

However, the cause for this is clear. The colored high school in the south is, by evidence of several surveys, as much as four years behind the standards of the average white school. Hence, when the children who have been in colored schools go to integrated schools, they are as much as four years behind and drag the level of education down. It must be clear that even in rudimentary fundamentals, the southern school for colored children is unequal.

Certain states, such as North Carolina, have taken steps to give the colored children excellent facilities, but facilities are but a hollow shell, when experienced educators are lacking.

It is a vicious circle that develops. The children go to schools that are inferior in educational standards; they come out ill equipped for college work Moreover, in the South and in some places in the North, the colored high school graduate is barred from going to superior public institutions by the color line. Hence, they are forced to settle for colored colleges and universities, which are taught by men who are products of the same inferior high school and primary education and have not been able to get a superior education in college.

They come out of the colleges poorly equipped to teach the high school and grammar grades and hence the upcoming children get the same poor quality brand of education.

The cry is then raised, "Why don't they get it themselves?" But, a child is not born to think and penetrate into complex problems. He is not by birth given impetus to do intensive research. This type of stimulation is not inborn, and it has to be fostered. It can be fostered by the right type of teachers. But if teachers, are not equipped, as today, the colored children will continue to be unable to pursue their intellectual capabilities to capacity performance.

It should be clear from this that integration in all grades is at this time, not only foolhardy but in a sense anti-democratic. It should be clear also that something must be done to integrate schools.

To reach this goal a program of gradual integration is necessary. Colleges and universities that are not privately endowed should be made open to members of both "races," so that teachers of high caliber can be available to society. The grammar grades should be, as suggested by many, integrated at the first grade first, where few educational differences exist. Then, the next year these students progress to the second grade and a new group of students both white and colored enter the first grade, and the process should continue until all grades are integrated.

The process will take twelve years. The results should be worth the effort.

It is only through education as a beginning that equality of opportunity can begin to exist in American society. It is only through education that mutual understanding and good will can become a reality. It is only through equality of education that equality under the law can be a fact as well as a statement.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Lewd And Lascivious? Or Puritanical Prowess

Whit Whitfield

The future of downtown magazine stands may hinge on the decisions of the local sheriff. Such favorites as Adam, Cabaret, Caper, Confidential, Dude, Escapade, Glamor photography, Pix Annual, Playboy, Nugget, Scamp, Sir and Whisper to name a few, are among the list of some 51 publications that are labeled as "objectionable" by the North Carolina Sheriffs' Association.

Comic books have not escaped the long arm of the law either. Batman, The Durango Kid, Crime and Punishment, Exotic Romance, War, Love Problems, Straight Arrow and T-Man, as well as many other favorities, are included among the "lewd 50."

The state law defines obscene literature as any thing which," if considered as a whole its predominant appeal is to the prurient (Note: Webster defines prurient as "inclined to or characteried by lascivious thought,") interest, or if it goes substantially beyond customary limits of candor in description or presentation of such matter (i. e. nudity or sex.)

The Puritan drive is in full force in Buncombe county, and is just beginning in Durham County. Loose interpretation of the law will outlaw most any magazine, and who do we have making the arbitrary decisions? County sheriffs--mostly old men with old ideas, elected year after year with the support of old men with old ideas. It would seem to us that a Board of Censors appointed by the governor with the aid of the state Attorney-General could do a better job, if indeed it must be done.

We will probably see more "Dook stoodents" at our local newstands in the near future. Business looks better for a few downtown merchants, but how long will it be before the wave of Puritanicism hits Orange County and Chapel Hill? Maybe it never will, and maybe it will be next week. Who knows, but the sheriff?

It might be a good idea if the connoisseurs of these lewd and objectionable magazines send for subscriptions now and avoid the rush. If you wait, possibly the only magazines you will get besides the Womens Home Companion and Better Homes and Gardens, will be what you can buy undercover at blackmarket prices. Think it over.

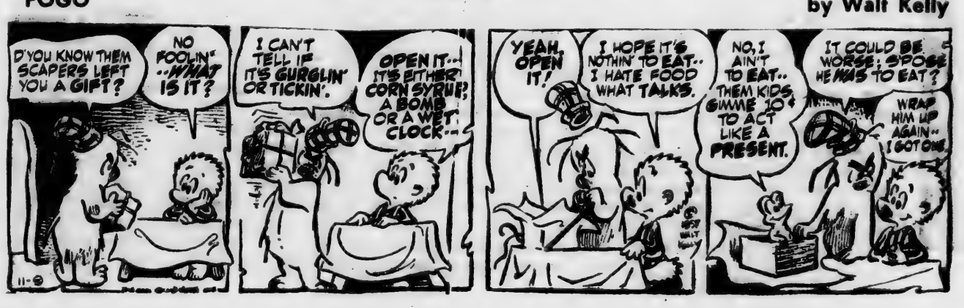
A sad looking character was shown into the office of a prominent psychiatrist. "I've lost all desire to go on, Doctor. Life has become too hectic, too confused."



"Yes," said the doctor, clucking sympathetically. "I understand. We all have our problems. You'll need a year or two of treatments at $50 a week."

There was a pause. "Well, that solves your problem, Doc. Now what about mine?"—N. C. Education

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Carolina Coeds: Real Reception . .

Gail Godwin

The other day, as my roommate and I were starting out to supper, a little old wrinkly lady dressed in black asked us to help her across the street. She was standing in front of Alderman looking very bewildered as all these new-fangled automobiles whizzed by.

After we had been good boy scouts and gotten her safely across at the entrance of the Arboretum, she turned her beaming old face up to us and announced:

"Maybe you girls would be interested to know that you have helped the first girl graduate of Carolina across the street!"

We slowed our pace down to hers and walked slowly through the Arboretum.

"You know," she said as she hobbled along on her cane, "I can't walk very well, but I like to and so I walk miles and miles if I feel like it."

She told us about how she loaned her cap and gown to members of her family down through the years. It seems one snooty little grand-nephew had turned up his nose because it had a hole in it.

"I said, 'Listen here, young whimpersnapper, you ought to be proud to wear that gown — holes or no holes.' That's what I told him," she said.

Her first name was Alice and she graduated at the turn of the century.

"I could tell some of the boys resented having a girl in their class, but that didn't bother me."

That's a coed for you. She's got spunk from the day she becomes a coed til the day she dies. I certainly hope that when I get as old as Miss Alice is, that I still have that same determined, happy-go-lucky outlook.

I wonder, when I come back visiting in 2,000 A.D., if some polite little coeds will help me across the highway so that I won't get run over by those new-fangled flying automobiles.

ERIC THE RED:

Hell's Kitchen & Lost Liberty

Harry Kirschner

My forefathers helped to settle this country. It was back in the days before immigrants had to be sane and literate that they came over. Family legend has it that they crossed on the famous ship, Garbage Scow, with other pilgrims from Andorra, and so are classed in the select group which is responsible for the growth of many of our most revered train robbers.

My forefathers had faith. They started out under the most severe conditions of hardship in a colony of New York known as Hell's Kitchen. Tribes of aborigines, called Street Gangs, were a constant menace. The icy wind of winter froze them in their alleyway homes. The suffocating heat of summer left them stricken on the sizzling sidewalks. Many died that first year.

Nothing deterred the pilgrims, however. They built push carts and began pushing them. At first the danger from the Street Gangs was so great that they had to carry muskets with them wherever they peddled. But they gradually overcame their obstacles to success, and even began pushing their carts into the wilds of Greenwich Village.

At the end of a few years, a thriving push-cart trade had been established. The home government of the Empire State took cognizance of the fact and designed to tax every push cart as a means of revenue. The tax was to be levied by requiring peddlers to buy tax stamps and affix them to their push carts. My forefathers refused, and a revolution insued in which the Empire infamously used its Blue Coats in an attempt to suppress liberty.

The pilgrims had come here and made a go of it. When the time came that they were persecuted they banded together and won their liberty. They had grown strong working as a unit, and their philosophy was crystalized. They wrote their beliefs of liberty on the sides of their push carts, and paraded them about for all the world to see.

A century and a half later, a new group of push carters arose in the Bowery. They had only one push cart. It was very big, its volume being almost that of all the Hell's Kitchen push carts combined. All the Bowery push carteers helped to push their cart together, in one organized mob, down the street.

Intense friction developed between the two groups. The Hell's Kitchen people with their modern, swept-winged push carts, hated the Bowery's crude, brutish cart. They claimed that they might be overtaken by Boweryists working from within, and be made to push one huge cart together.

The beliefs that had been faithfully recorded in Hell's Kitchen after the Push-cart Revolution were preserved, but they began to be misinterpreted. Instead of maintaining freedom, it began to be destroyed. Anyone who was found to have even seen the Bowery push cart trundling down the street was called, "a fellow traveler." Conformity in Hell's Kitchen became mandatory. It was no longer right for a peddler to grease the wheels of his cart in a different way even though his right to do so was inscribed on the side of every cart.

Hell's Kitchen said it was afraid of losing its freedom. It could not have really been afraid of that, because in defending itself it restricted its freedom. Perhaps it was truly afraid that the Bowery would sell more things to more people from its huge cart.

Unfamiliar Violations Of Honor Code Defined

Four unfamiliar violations of the Honor Code—plagiarism, falsifying class rolls, collaborating on laboratory assignments and use of false names on closed reserved books—were re-emphasized yesterday by Dave Evans of the Men's Honor Council.

Many students who appear before the Honor Council do not seem to realize these practices are offenses against the Honor Code, Evans said.

The Men's Honor Council defined the violations as following:

(1) Plagiarism is the use of another author's word and ideas as your own without properly attributing them. Plagiarism does not have to be a word for word copy. It may consist of using the same thought patterns or ideas of a previous writer without indicating them as such. Whenever a student is in doubt, he should not hesitate to footnote his material.

(2) Falsifying class rolls is the signing of someone else's name or allowing someone else to sign your name to a class roll.

Signing a student's name who is not in class may also implicate both the signer and the absent student should they be discovered and brought before the Honor Council.

(3) Collaborating on laboratory assignments is definitely a violation of the Honor Code

Some departments have different regulations regarding lab preparations and assignments. Others allow students to help each other in the labs. Every student should be sure he knows what the regulations are concerning his own lab. Disregard for the regulations of any department is an Honor Code offense.

(4) In the library one must often use books on the closed reserve list and one may take the books out of the library by simply signing a check-out card. This leaves the way open for a student to sign a false name and keep the books, depriving other students of the use of them. This offense is an Honor Code violation.

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Mary Alys Voorhees, Editor

The Big Weekend Is Here

The big days have finally arrived and with a multitude of parties to keep Tar Heels on the go all weekend long. And if the weatherman doesn't get his dander up and try to "rain" over Germans, this weekend should be one long remembered.

Adding a touch of beauty to the dance last night were the 16 lovelies who were sponsors for the German Club officers and members. And among the court of beauties were seven UNC eods—Ginny Dawson of Snow Hill, Lilia Scott of Shreveport, La., Sara Williamson of Darlington, S. C., Joan Brooks of Greensboro, Susie Donald of Nassau, Bahamas, Anita Edwards of Raleigh and Carolyn Myers of Raleigh.

For music there was Les Elgart's' orchestra plus the Negro Washboard Band which has been playing at Sea Island, Ga.

But although the German dance last night was the highlight of the weekend, actually it ushered in a round of socials at the various fraternities on campus that promise a busy time for Carolina Gentlemen and their dates.

Sigma Nu Fun

As a beginning for Germans weekend the Sigma Nus became weatherwise Thursday afternoon when they entertained the Chi O's at an "Indian Summer" party at the house with Doug Clark and his "Tops" supplying the music.

The fun will continue tonight when the brothers and their dates party out at "The Shack" where the combined combos of Wellington Black and his "Globes" plus Frank Wright and the "Kool" Kats" will be going full blast—as will the Sigma Nus!

ATO—Double Dividends?

Undoubtedly the ATOs will receive double dividends this weekend, ts they have divided tonight's entertainment into two parties. From 8 p.m. until midnight a rock 'n' roll combo from Durham will be the cause of "a whole lotta shaking going on."

And following a two-hour "catch your breath" break, Willy Hargrades and Co. will be featured until 6 a.m. for any ATOs who can still keep their eyes open until then.

Chi Psis Go Hawaiian

Hawaii comes to UNC today when the Chi Psi Lodge will be transformed into the sunny shores of Wakaki for a Hawaiian party. Chi Psis and their dates will be dressed in appropriate costumes, and leis, flown from Hawaii, will be given to dates.

Bill Byers' combo will provide the music, which in all probability will not be Hawaiian. Sunday finds a progressive quintet playing for their concert party.

Delta Psi Dinner-Dance

In keeping with the dress finery of Germans, Delta Psis and their dates, after partying over at St. Anthony's Hall, will don their best for a dinner-dance over at the Castle in Durham this evening.

KA Socializing

A party Thursday at the KA House, where the brothers feted the Pi Phis, began the weekend fun for the KAs who will continue partying tonight at Beulah's. The "Burlington Symphony" will be on hand to present the music, and Sunday afternoon a combo party is the order of the day.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

Misses Ann Cofield, Elmira Herring, Rebecca Smith, Patricia Hamer, Beverly Culbreth, Margaret Smith, Pat Dillon, Nancy Milan, Barbara Sills, Claudia Milham, Margaret Evans and Patricia Anderson.

Sputnik II Led By UFO Friday

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Nov. 8 (AP)—A Smithsonian scientist reported sighting a faint object about 10 to 15 seconds ahead of Sputnik II this morning.

Dr. John S. Rinehart, assistant director of the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, said he saw an object resembling a faint star moving in advance of the much-more brilliant satellite-rocket.

Dr. Rinehart said he saw both objects low in the western sky disappearing to the North.

Sputnik II was sighted by a moonwatch team on the roof of the Harvard Observatory as well as by other viewers in the East. It appeared low in the west due to its distance from Eastern seaboard.

No speculation was immediately available on the question—whether a mechanism set to return a chamber carrying the dog, Laika, back to earth might gone wrong.

Such a mechanism might have been designed to eject the dog's chamber in a direction opposite to satellite's flight and thus slow it down for a return to earth. On the other hand, if tumbling motion of the rocket caused such a portion of the rocket to be thrust forward, it would become a satellite itself—traveling even faster than Sputnik II.

Astronomers Plan Sessions

The Chapel Hill Astronomy Club has scheduled four telescope viewing sessions at the Morehead Planetarium here, it was announced today by President Bill Baylis of Durham.

The club will meet Sunday, November 10, and on November 18, 25 and December 2. The four sessions will last from 8 until 10 p. m.

The club membership roll is open to any person in the state with an interest in astronomy.

Press Club To Hear Craven

Charles Craven, columnist and feature writer on the Raleigh News and Observer, will speak to members of the UNC Press Club meeting at the home of Dean Norval Neil Luxon, on Mount Bolus Road, at 7:30 p.m. Monday, Nov. 11. W. Davis Merritt Jr., Hickory senior and club president, will preside. Journalism, pre-journalism and other students interested in newspaper careers are invited.

UNC Cadet Group Will Honor U. S. War Dead

The UNC AFROTC Cadet Group is making final plans for the Armistice Day Retreat Ceremony which it will sponsor Monday, the national holiday commemorating our war dead.

The ceremony will be held on the lawn between South Building and Wilson Library at 4:30 p.m. Cadet 1st Lt. Jerry Cole, cadet group adjutant, will introduce Director of Student Activities Sam Magill, who will give the invocation, and Dean Fred Weaver, who will be guest speaker.

Music for the ceremony will be furnished by the AFROTC Band.

OUTSTANDING CADET

The Cadet of the Month Award for October goes to Cadet Basic Harry A. Usher, selected from the freshman, sophomore and junior classes. Selection was made by a board of five cadet officers on Nov. 6, who used the interview-interrogation method of selection.

Cadet Usher, freshman from Northport, N. Y., qualified for the award by demonstrating outstanding knowledge of drill and Air Science and by showing ardent interest in the Air Force ROTC.

Cadet Usher, a member of the AFROTC Drill Squadron, has an "A" average in Air Science and has more merits than any other freshman in the AFROTC corps. He plans to make a career of the Air Force.

FEDERAL INSPECTION

The AFROTC Cadet Group has already begun to prepare for Federal Inspection which will take place Dec. 5. Practice is in full swing for the parade-review ceremony.

Connoisseurs of drill and ceremonies have been invited to drop by Emerson Field any Thursday from 12 to 1:45 p.m. to observe the progress of the troops.

GAME ON TV

WUNC-TV, Channel 4, will present the film account of Saturday's football game between UNC and University of South Carolina from Kenan Stadium in Chapel Hill, Sunday at 9 p.m.

Games played away from Chapel Hill have been shown on film over Channel 4 but they have been coaches films of action only. The film account to be shown Sunday will be in its entirety.

Cardboard To Perform Today

Carolina's Cardboard section will try to take a little of the color away from the Band Day festivities in Kenan Stadium this afternnon. The men who spend much time planning these events have come up with some great tricks.

In tribute to band day, there will be a musical staff with the notes B D. A flip stunt will show a "Gamecock' becoming a "plucked hen". Other stunt to be presented are "Stop Light," "Beat The Bird," "Tar Heels" and a Christmas Seal.

The "Stop Light" was first used several years ago. The first flip shows the Red light and STOP S. C., then caution and finally GO UNC There will be a map depicting North Carolina in blue with the Old Well in white, and South Carolina in red with their symbol black.

Legion Official To Speak Here

The national commander of the American Legion will be present to participate in the dedication ceremonies of new Chapel Hill Post No. 6, Commander Charles W. Johnston of the local post announced today.

National Commander John S. (Jack) Gleason, Jr., will deliver the principal address at Hill Music Hall at 11 a. m. on Wednesday, Nov. 13. All legionnaries and the wives are invited to the Legion Building for a buffet lunch at noon.

The public is invited to Commander Gleason's address and to the dedication ceremonies. The dedication will be at 1 p .m:

Commander Gleason will speak in Charlotte Tuesday night and will arrive Chapel Hill Wednesday morning. His party will include: his pilot aide, Jim Parham; national publicity relation's Officer, Pat Ceile: North Carolina State Commander, Dud Robbins; State Adjutant, Nash McKee; and vice-commanders Charles Whitley, George Horner and Clayton White.

The public is invited to attend the open house at the Legion Building which is located just off the by-pass highway near the Patio.

Ever meet a fanatic?

He's got just one thing uppermost in his mind. If he's looking for a job he's thinking only of pay or only of security. Reasonable men, however, weigh these and many other factors when they're evaluating career possibilities. Such factors as opportunity, challenging work, training, professional associates—things fanatics never bother to consider.

The Bell Telephone Companies have a booklet for reasonable men. It's called "Challenge and Opportunity." It's not the sort of thing that'll make a fanatic's eyes light up, but it ought to interest a thoughtful young man—whatever his college background—who is weighing career possibilities. Get it from your Placement Officer or send the coupon.

BUTTON-DOWN WINSOCKI!

College students love shirts with button-down collars, but we've never known exactly why. So Van Heusen's research department asked around and got the following answers.

L.B. Senior at Mass. Institute of Entomology. "The buttons keep things from crawling under your collar. Or, if things do crawl under your collar, the buttons prevent them from crawling out again."

D.D.E. Freshman at Horatio Alger Tech. "You get more buttons so I figure the shirt is more valuable. Is it?"

B.P. Junior at the Pate School of Tonsorial Arts. "They're cooler! Wisps of air blow through the little hole in the button and keep my clavicle at a refreshing temperature.

P.S. Senior of Makemoney's Correspondence School. "I'm a neurotic. With Button-down shirts I can wear one side buttoned and the other side unbuttoned, thereby giving the effect of wearing two types of shirt at one time. Oh help me, help me!"

Z.J. Graduate student at the T.S. Swinburne School of Beautiful Experiences. "Buttons remind me of pearls. Pearls remind me of oysters. Oysters remind me of indigestion. Indigestion reminds me of my doctor. My doctor reminds me of his nurse. She's gorgeous. Gorgeous! So the more buttons the better."

Yes, there's agreement that button-down collars are the thing. And there's further agreement that Van Heusen is the king of Button-down stylists. Just take a look at Van Heusen Oxfordians next time you're in the market for shirts. You'll see immediately why they're famous. $5.00.

Tar Baby Gridders Trounce Virginia Freshmen, 32-6

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's Baby Tar Heels won their third game of the season today against the Virginia freshmen by a score of 32-6 as slashing line play set up long runs by fast Tar Baby backs.

The rain-soaked contest was played on Navy Field in order that Kenan Stadium could remain in good shape for today's Carolina-South Carolina battle.

Carolina tok the opening kickoff and marched 80 yards for the first score of the contest. On a second and thirteen situation, Russ Hollers hit Bob Campbell with a pass good for a first down on the Carolina 34. On the very next play, Hollers kept on the option play and raced 66 yards to paydirt.

HOLLERS AGAIN

Following the ensuing kick-off, Virginia was unable to move the pigskin and punted to the Carolina 16. The Tar Babies moved the ball to their own 42, then Hollers hit Mike Greenday with an aerial good for 58 yards and another T.D.

Rice converted to make it 13-0, Carolina. Virginia, once again unable to go, kicked deep into Tar Baby territory, Roy Wall returning to the 35. Then Wall took a pitchout from Hollers, swept around his own left end, and ran all the way to the Cavalier 7 before being pulled down from behind.

But an alert Virginia lineman pounced on a Carolina fumble, giving the Cavaliers a first and ten on their own three. Virginia ran several short yardage plays, picking up two first downs, then pulled a quick-kick which rolled dead on the Tar Baby 32.

THIRD TALLY

Then quarterback Henry Clements connected with halfback Joe Olejnick who went all the way for the third Carolina touchdown. The score stood at 19-0 when Virginia finally launched their first offensive thrust. They took the kick-off on their own 20, and went 80 yards for their first and only score of the game. Bill Weitz plunging two yards for the T.D.

Frank Riggs returned to the Carolina 45 on the kick and the Tar Babys launched still another sustained attack with Jim Graham dashing the final 10 yards to make it 25-6. Carolina. After the kick-off, Roy Wall picked off a Cavalier aerial on the Virginia 22 and crossed the goal line with Carolina's final score of the day, pushing the count to 32-6 in favor of the Tar Babies.

SEA OF MUD

Just after the second half began, a driving rain turned the field into a virtual sea of mud, making a good footing nearly impossible.

The sloppy field set the stage for many injuries, most of them incurred by the Cavaliers. The ball just see-sawed back and forth across the mid-field stripe most of the second half, the furthest penetration being a Carolina drive which fell short on the enemy 18. The game ended with the Tar Babies threatening at the Virginia 23.

FOOTBALL HELMET TAKEN

The football helmet used in the display of homecoming in front of Carr dormitory was taken sometime over the weekend. The girls in Carr had paid a deposit to the Athletic Association for the use of the helmet. They would like to have returned to Carr as soon as possible.

Evenly Matched Teams Should Furnish Good Battle

Today's ball game in Kenan Stadium could be one of the most exciting games the Tar Heels have played all season. The bookies give nobody the edge, and that could be just how close it will prove to be.

Both clubs are below par, physically. However, one should offset the other and set the stage for a real dilly of a battle. The Tar Heels lost last week to Tennessee. The Gamecocks have dropped two in a row, to Clemson and Maryland.

Neither team is in contention for the Orange Bowl bid, but both will be seeking revenge. Actually, they are about even in strength and everything else. Consequently, you can look for a real good battle in Kenan this afternoon.

Tar Heels Hold Big All-Time Edge

The records show that the Tar Heels hold a tremendous 22-6-4 margin in the overall record. The Tar Heels won the first match between the two clubs, 17-0 way back in 1903. Since 1950, the Gamecocks have beaten Carolina only twice and both of those were shutouts—18-0 in 1953 and 14-0 last season.

Last year the Gamecocks were in the Orange Bowl fight right down to the wire after beating Duke in the season's opener. A loss to Clemson, the eventual representative, did not knock the Gamecocks out of contention, but only the following week, they were upset, 14-7 by N.C. State and that paved the way to Miami for the Tigers.

The Tar Heel's two youngest players will not start today, but could see some action. Tackle Don Stallings and halfback Don Coker are only 18. Coker, of course, is injured and might not be ready, but Stallings is in top shape. The eldest member of the Tar Heels is tackle Stu Pell, who is 25.

Two boys who are destined to get in their licks against South Carolina are halfbacks Wade Smith and Larry Fredrick. Another is converted tackle Ralph Steele from North Wilkesboro.

Large Crowd Watches Cage Squad Scrimmage

Basketball is askance, you might think. But not if you were in Woollen Gym Thursday night. A crowd of about 500 went down to watch the nation's number one team hold a regulation scrimmage, and the only thing missing was an overtime.

The contest pitted last year's freshman squad (and now the sophomore crop) against the veterans—and what a battle it was. The old hands finally pulled it out, 83-82, but the younger team gave the champs a real battle. Somebody reasoned, and logically, that we now have the number one and two teams in the nation at Chapel Hill.

The scrimmage was not without mishap, however. Veteran center Joe Quigg sustained a knee injury in the final minutes of the game and had to be shouldered off the court. The extent of the injury is not known at this writing, pending X-ray examination.

Incidentally, veteran Pete Brennan was the top scorer for the night with 28 points. But sophomore Ray Stanley was close behind with 25. Sophomores Harvey Saylz and Lee Schaffer each gathered 18 points.

We Predict: Duke, Wake, State And Clemson

The time has come once again when we try our hand at weekend pigskin predictions.

Big game of the day for an Atlantic Coast Conference team is the Duke-Navy affair up in Baltimore. The bookies have given the Middies the nod in lieu of their victory over Notre Dame last week, coupled with Duke's loss to Georgia Tech. We don't like to dispute their word, but we look for the Blue Devils to get back on the winning track—let's say about 20-14.

N. C. State's unbeaten and twice tied Wolfpack will clash with William and Mary in Raleigh. The Injuns will be game, but the Pack has all the odds. State 27, William and Mary 7.

Wake Forest seeks its first win in seven games against a tough Virginia Tech outfit in Winston-Salem. The Deacs are overdue. Tech will be tough, but we look for victory number one at Baptist Hollow, 13-7.

The Clemson-Maryland scrap could be one of the best of the season. It should be rated a toss-up as the two teams are very evenly matched. It's murder going either way, but we'll take the Tigers by a hair, 21-19.

Virginia is taking the week off.

Battle Of Carolinas

a tremendous passing percentage and, should the Tar Heels ground game be halted, it will be up to him to move his charges through the air. The Tar Heels are also adept at the run-pass play with the halfbacks doing the tossing.

Defensively, South Carolina will probably prove as formidable as any opponent this season. The Gamecock front wall averages about 215 pounds and scouting reports have it that the line is tough to penetrate.

The Tar Heels, at about the same weight, will miss the services of Koes and Lineberger tremendously, but Tatum has some reserve strength upon which he can depend to stop the Gamecocks. The Tar Heel's pass defense is its main weapon and the Gamecocks probably are not planning anything elaborate, aerial-wise.

The rejuvenated Tar Heel lineup will probably have Buddy Payne and Mac Turlington at the flanks, Stu Pell and Phil Blazer at tackles, Fred Swearingen and Ed Furjanic at the guards and former end Jim Jones playing his first game of the season at center.

The Tar Heel starting backfield should be composed of Schuler and Goff at the halfback slots, Gaca at fullback and Cummings at quarterback.

Spartans-Irish Renew Rivalry

The Associated Press

During the 10 years the Notre Dame-Army football rivalry was allowed to cool off, the Fighting Irish, shorn of their subway alumni, installed Michigan State as their big rival. The 24th meeting between the Irish and Michigan States's Spartans today fully deserves the Big Game designation.

For one thing, it marks the beginning of one of the toughest assignments ever handed a college team. After meeting Michigan State, curently ranked fourth in the nation in the Associated Press poll, Notre Dame will go up against Oklahoma, No. 2, and then Iowa, No. 5, on the next two Saturdays.

The game will be played before a capacity crowd for the ninth year in a row—a 76,000 sellout in Michigan State's double-decked Spartan Stadium.

Thin Clads Keep Clean Record In Double Win

By ERWIN FULLER

Superior team balance and depth proved decisive yesterday afternoon as Carolina's undefeated cross-contingent continued its winning ways with a 21-41 victory over the Wake Forest Demon Deacons. South Carolina, the third team in the triangular meet, failed to score, as the Gamecocks had but three finishers from a starting field of only four.

Bishop Injured

The win, which closed out the Tar Heel's regular dual and triangular meet season, may have been an extremely costly one for them, for junior Wayne Bishop, who had paced UNC in each of its five previous triumphs, reaggravated an old knee injury which sidelined him for his entire sophomore season and failed to finish the race.

Athletic and medical officials had not determined the extent of the injury last night, but they indicated that it might possibly not be so serious as they had first feared.

Dave Scurlock, Carolina's crack middle distance runner, was the first Tar Heel to cross the finish line, but South Carolina's Bill Latham turned in the day's best individual effort with a 19:52 clocking. Scurlock's time was 20:26.6, and he was trailed by UNC Captain Everett Whatley, Wake's Robert Medlin, and Tar Heel soph Cowles Liipfert.

Terps Rally In Second Half To Hand Booters 4-2 Defeat

By JIM PURKS

Maryland's powerful soccer team scored three goals in the second half to defeat a spirited, upset-minded Carolina team here yesterday, 4-2.

Until a penalty kick was called against Carolina, the Tar Heels almost had an upset in their grasp, leading 2-1 early in the third quarter.

But Maryland's inside left, Terry Charchalis, blasted the ball past goalie Jim Rattay to tie the score, 2-2. Maryland's second goal seemed to take some the starch out of the Tar Heels, who had previously outplayed the Terps.

Controlled Play

The Maryland eleven then proceeded to control most of the play, keeping the ball in Carolina territory for a major part of fourth quarter.

Center forward Asad Shurky dealt the Tar Heels the decisive blow several minutes later when he drilled the ball into the Carolina goal to give Maryland a 3-2 lead. Midway in the fourth quarter, right wing Tom Sinclair scored to give Maryland its two-goal margin.

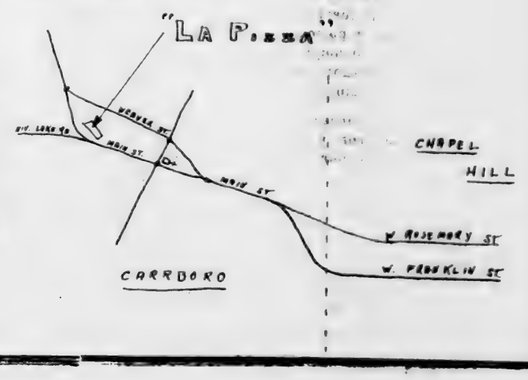
The 4-2 score, however, is deceiving as the fired-up Tar Heels had the Maryland squad on the defensive for a greater part of the game.

Barks Scores

Coleman Barks gave the Carolina side something to yell about as he scored to put the Tar Heels ahead, 1-0, early in the first quarter after taking a beautiful pass from center forward Mike Thompson.

But Maryland was not to be denied either during the first quarter and soon tied the game up on a goal by inside right Chico Liacuris.

In the third quarter, Carolina's hustling forward line hit paydirt again when left wing Rick Grausman booted a beautiful shot into the Maryland goal to put the Tar Heels in the lead again, 2-1.



It was a heart-breaking loss for the Tar Heels, who combined in an all-out team effort which marked one of the best games a Carolina squad has played under Coach Marvin Allen.

SP Leader Urges Vote For Slate

Student Party Chairman Whit Whitfield yesterday urged Carolina students to consider his party's slate of candidates for the fall elections Tuesday.

Whitfield said, "I think the Student Party has nominated an outstanding slate of candidates for the election.

"From the legislature down through freshman, sophomore and junior class officers, the slate is filled with outstanding candidates with a purpose to promote student government."

Student Party candidates were selected from both Greek and independent groups, Whitfield pointed out.

Whitfield said that SP did not want to make promises that would remain unfulfilled in the coming months. Instead, he urged students to consider the administrations of past Student Body President Bob Young last year and the current administration under Sonny Evans.

Whitfield said that SP is asking voters to consider the success of these two administations. He said that the students should bear in mind not the promises of what will be done, but of what has been done and is continuing to be done in student government by Student Party elected officials.

In Tuesday's election, seats will be filled on the Men's and Women's Honor Councils, Student Legislature, Student Council and freshman, sophomore and junior class officers.

Balloting will get underway at 9 a.m. Tuesday.

Board Studies Test Proposal

RALEIGH, Nov. 8 —(AP)— The State's Advisory Budget Commission today looked with favor on a proposal under which applicants for admission to units of the Greater University of North Carolina and East Carolina College would be given scholastic aptitude tests.

At the same time the board urged the State Board of Higher Education to draw up a plan under which tests would be given to all high school graduates in the state.

D. S. Coltrane, the state's budget officer, said the tests for the high school graduates would be for purposes of vocational guidance and to determine qualifications of the graduates for admission to the state's institutions of higher learning.

The budget commission told the University and East Carolina College, in effect, that it would recommend to the Governor and council of state that the institutions be reimbursed from the contingency and emergency funds for losses in receipts resulting from the plan to give aptitude tests to applicants for admission.

Under the plan, those taking the aptitude tests would pay a $7 fee. However, if they passed the tests and won admission to one of the institutions the $7 would be credited toward their tuition payments. It was estimated that proposal would reduce receipts of the University's three units.

Win Is Number 5 For UNC; Hathaway Has A Broken Arm

By BILL KING

An alert Carolina defense turned three South Carolina fumbles and one bad punt into touchdowns to gain a resounding 28-6 revenge win over the Gamecocks in Kenan Stadium yesterday.

A crowd of about 22,000 plus a large regional television audience saw the Tar Heels bounce back after a 35-0 defeat to Tennessee last week and completely overwhelm Coach Warren Giese's charges. It was the worst defeat he has suffered at USC.

It was perhaps the best defensive effort of the season for the inspired Tar Heels as their stout line stayed in the Gamecock's backfield all afternoon and stopped the running of the vaunted King Dixon-Alex Hawkins duo.

The victory was not without a price, however. Tar Heel quarterback Curt Hathaway suffered a broken arm late in the third quarter after turning in his finest game of the season up until then. The injury forced Tatum to call on sophomore Nelson Lowe to back up Cummings at quarterback. Tatum had been holding Lowe out to give him an extra season of eligibility.

Rushing Tar Heels

It was evident from the outset that the Tar Heels were all business as the line charged the Gamecocks continously. The Gamecocks lost six fumbles in the contest, three going for Tar Heel tallies.

The Chapel Hillians drew first blood just after the second quarter had gotten underway. With 44 seconds remaining in the first period, South Carolina halfback Frank Destino fumbled on his own 32 and tackle Don Redding recovered for the Tar Heels.

North Carolina ran three plays before the end of the quarter and moved to the SC 20. Ed Lipski, Hathaway and Daley Goff got the 12 yards for the Tar Heels.

On the very first play of the second period, Hathaway pulled a beautiful fake to fullback Lipski and pitched out to Ron Marquette who went wide to the left to the 12.

Halfback Emil DeCantis carried to the three on the next two plays and then Lipski broke off left tackle for the score with 1:32 gone. Phil Blazer, who has made nine of ten extra points this season made good on the first of four during the day.

Another Fumble

South Carolina got possession twice before its next fumble but was unable to penetrate NC territory. With 3:45 left in the half, the Gamecocks were on their own 27. Dixon then took a pitchout and hit Hawkins at the line of scrimmage but he fumbled and this time it was center Jim Jones who pounced on the ball.

The Tar Heels took over on the 27, this time with the passing Cummings at the helm. On the first play, Cummings rolled out and hit end Mac Turlington at the left sidelines on the 15. He did it again on the next play, this time a bullet to Turlington at the two. Fullback Giles Gaca got the score as he went off left tackle for the 13th Tar Heel point with 2:42 left. Blazer made it 14-0 and that's the way it was at half as another late Tar Heel threat failed after the Gamecocks could do nothing on the ensuing kickoff.

In the third quarter, the Tar Heels kicked off twice before the Gamecocks could run a play from scrimmage. The Tar Heels picked up a third touchdown in the process and threatened to score a fourth.

Two Straight Fumbles

Blazer opened the second half with a kickoff which Dixon took on his goal line and returned to his 31. But the SC star was racked by a host of N. Carolina tacklers and lost the ball. Captain Buddy Payne fell on this one and the Tar Heels were all set to go with another touchdown drive.

Hathaway ran one play, a pass to Turlington which was no good and Cummings took over.

Gaca got four up the middle to the 27 and the talented Cummings took to the air. On the next play, he hit DeCantis at the six but the play was called back as the Tar

Tatum Calls Ball Game Best Effort This Year

By DAVE WIBLE

UNC's 28-6 victory over the Gamecocks of South Carolina yesterday afternoon was termed "the best 60 minutes of Carolina football this year" by Head Coach Jim Tatum in a post-game interview.

Tatum, who a week ago was "ashamed as a coach" for his team's performance against Tennessee, felt that yesterday's game was an even finer performance than the Navy game which the Tar Heels won 13-7.

The only blemish to an otherwise perfect afternoon came near the end of the third quarter when junior quarterback Curtis Hathaway suffered a broken arm. Hathaway, playing one of the finest games in his career, moved around his own right end for eight yards on an option play and was hit very hard by three Gamecock tacklers. When the players unpiled, Hathaway was writthing in pain from a fractured right forearm, which will end his pigskin activity for the remainder of this season.

The injury forced Tatum to make a move he dreaded. With Hathaway out and Dave Reed suspended, he had only one signal caller left on the squad. Nelson Lowe, a sophomore quarterback who had been held out thus far this season because of an injury suffered early in fall practice, entered the game in the third quarter, thus leaving him with only two games and two years' of eligibility.

"Nelson has been working right along with the club all year," Tatum commented," and I think that he has everything a quarterback needs. He is tough, a terrific passer, a good kicker and a very hard runner. I was very sorry that we had to put him in, but there wasn't much else that we could do."

Referring back to the ball game, Tatum said, "The reason I feel that this was our best game, is because of the way the boys fought back to overcome bad breaks in the opening minutes. I thought we would never get out of that hole. That South Carolina team was one of the

Congressman Blasts Student Solons; Labels The Inter-racial Bill 'Shocking'

By ETHAN TOLMAN

Special to the Daily Tar Heel

RALEIGH, Nov. 9 — A North Carolina Democrat today lambasted members of the State Student Legislature for passage yesterday of bills approving inter-racial marriages and prostitution.

Rep. Harold D. Cooley, speaking to the group this morning, said he was "shocked by the action taken." He told members of the mock assembly that they had "shocked the sensibilities of our people."

Departing from his prepared text, Cooley indicated that he considered the actions taken prior to his appearance a personal insult. "I am certain my position on racial matters is well known," he said.

Cooley, who received widespread criticism last year for his refusal to sign the Southern Manifesto—a resolution condemning the Supreme Court's integration decision, was emphatic in his criticism of the college legislators' behavior.

"I regret very much the actions taken by this assembly," he said. He pointed out that in his opinion "a more constructive agenda could have been prepared."

The congressman's address came at the close of the weekend assembly made up of some 212 delegates from 21 white and Negro colleges throughout the state.

Other action taken by the students included the passage today of a bill which commended President Eisenhower's use of troops to enforce integration at Little Rock Central High School and condemned the actions of Arkansas Governor Orval E. Faubus. This bill was introduced by UNC Delegate Pat Adams and passed a joint session of the House and Senate by a 96-38 vote.

Speaking in favor of his bill, Adams asked the legislature to bear in mind the legal, social and moral issues involved in the Little Rock controversy.

UNC Delegate Larry MacElroy spoke in opposition to the measure. He pointed out the constitutional and ethical problems raised by sending federal troops into a state without the consent of the state government.

Joel Fleishman, delegate from UNC, was selected as the best speaker in the House.

President's Hope

GERMANTOWN, Md., Nov. 8—(AP)—President Eisenhower today expressed prayerful hope that "the curse of the atomic explosion will pass from man's knowledge" and that only its good will remain.

Eisenhower voiced the hope in a brief informal talk at the dedication of the new 13-million-dollar headquarters building of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC). The building is situated on the outskirts of this small community some 30 miles north of Washington.

Kennedy Will Speak Tuesday Night At 8:15

"The Role of the Attorney in Congressional Investigations" will be the topic of Senate rackets committee counsel Robert F. Kennedy when he speaks here Tuesday night at 8:15 o'clock in Hill Hall.

The Law School Association is sponsoring Kennedy's speech, which will be open to the public, as another event in the Heck Lecture Series. The Series is supported by a fund set up by the oldest living alumnus of the UNC Law School, George Heck of Glen Head, N. Y.

Herb Toms of Shelby, chairman of the LSA speakers committee, will introduce Kennedy at the Hill Hall program. The association president, James Ramsey of Roxboro, will preside.

The address was switched to Hill Hall from the previously-announced location in the Knapp Building, Toms said, when great interest in hearing Kennedy was expressed on the campus.

Following his arrival at Raleigh-Durham Airport at 5:57 p.m. Tuesday, Kennedy will be honored at the Carolina Inn at a private dinner by the law students. A public reception will be given in Graham Memorial following his talk by the Law Wives Association.

Kennedy has been chief counsel for the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management field, and prior to that held the same position with the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

In 1953 he managed the campaign of his brother, Sen. John F. Kennedy (D-Mass.), having just completed a year's work with the Justice Department. He holds the A.B. degree from Harvard and the LL.B. from University of Virginia Law School.

Accomplished Pianist To Play For Musicale Next Sunday

An accomplished pianist, Mrs. Cara Kelson, whose performances have covered among other places, London, Paris and New Zealand, will perform here next Sunday, Nov.17.

Mrs. Kelson will be presented at the third Petite Musicale, sponsored by Graham Memorial Activities Board, in the Graham Memorial Lounge at 8 p.m.

No admission is charged for these concerts and the public has been cordially invited.

Originally from New Zealand, Mrs. Kelson received her early training there. She received an Associated Board scholarship which enabled her to study four years at the Royal Academy of Music in London. She has also studied in Paris, on a bursary from the New Zealand government, with Monsieur Lazare-Levy, teacher of the famous pianist Solomon.

Mrs. Kelson has made frequent appearances, as soloist, with the National Symphony Orchestra of New Zealand. She has performed for the Arts Council of Great Britain and the Community Arts Service of New Zealand. She has also broadcasted recitals for BBC of London, ABC of Australia, NZBS of New Zealand, Radiodiffusion Francaise, Paris and the Ceydon Broadcasting Service.

In Paris, she played at a chamber concert for Arthur Honegger, the composer, in honor of his 60th birthday. She also took part in the Victory Celebrations of Croydon, London in 1946, for which she performed the Grieg Piano Concerto.

Mrs. Kelson's recital at Graham Memorial will contain the Mozart C Major Sonata, K. 330, and the Schubert B Flat Sonata, Op. Post. She will also present three short pieces by Debussy, and one each by Rameau, Lully and Dandrieu.

Mrs. Kelson is now living in White Named Delegate To Industry Convention

Louis Norman White, a junior in the School of Business Administration, has been selected as southeastern student representative to the 62nd Annual Congress of American Industry, to be held Dec. 4-6 in New York at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel.

White will attend the sessions with 30 other student guests of the National Association of Manufacturers and participate in a special panel, in which they quiz businessmen.

White, a transfer student from Wake Forest College, was graduated from Henderson High School, but now lives in Laurinburg. He is majoring in banking and finance at UNC.

Joseph Class Wins Award

A UNC student from Greensboro has been named the recipient of the Pilot Freight Carriers Scholarship for the academic year 1957-58.

The $500 award went to Joseph M. Clapp, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred L. Clapp of Greensboro.

The award is made each year by the Winston-Salem firm to a senior majoring in traffic and transportation in the School of Business Administration. The winner is chosen by officials of the B. A. School.

Clapp is presently serving as president of Alpha Kappa Psi, professional business fraternity at Carolina, and is a member of Phi Beta Kappa and Beta Gamma Sigma honorary fraternities.

As a freshman, he was active in YMCA freshman activities on campus, and in successive years was vice-president and president of the University Club, the organization which sponsors pep rallies and other "Carolina Spirit" projects. He was graduated from Senior High School in Greensboro, where he was a National Honor Society member, in 1954.

Get Off Your Can And Vote, Vote, Vote

Tuesday is the day for University balloting, the day when the political life or death of aspirants and aspiring parties will be decided.

And the fate of aspiring politicians and political parties is incontrovertibly in the hands of the student elections toward lethargy and sit-on-your-can-and-not-vote-itis.

Studnts have consistenly failed to exercise their most priceless privilege, failed to come to the ballot box in sufficient numbers.

Political parties, as we have said before, have demonstrated an admirable enthusiasm during their nominating sessions. This spirit of enthusiasm should permeate the student body on election day.

Voting percentages in past elections has been little short of disgusting. When only 38 per cent of the student electorate goes to the polls, the entire elections procedure — and a priceless American heritage — goes down the lethargic drain.

Such a percentage voted in a recent election. And even fewer numbers have voted in elections preceding this particular one.

The old cliche uttered somewhat hypocritically and without sincerity by many politicians: Vote for the candidates of your choice, any choice, fits the situation to a tee.

And we are definitely opposed to straight-ticket balloting. Students should consider all candidates exclusively on their individual merit, without party consideration. Straight-ticket balloting most often leads to blind voting — voting without thought.

But, regardless of your consideration — or lack of it — place your can beside a ballot box come Tuesday.

There is no place for lethargy in student government.

The Cavalier Daily And Missile Race Short-Side

After the launching of the first artificial earth satellite, Sputnik I, there was vast concern in the free world with the technological superiority of the Kremlin scientists. Now that the Russians have put a second, and far more impressive satellite into an earth orbit, there is again a furor of concern, but this time it is not over the magnitude of this accomplishment, but with the dog which has gone up with Sputnik II.

There is a very basic fallacy in this sort of "logic." The fact that the new satellite represents a feat which American scientists cannot begin to approach, does not appear to worry anyone, judging from the quantity of letters published in the Washington Post lamenting the fate of the big Sputnik's "canine passenger." This is nonsense, not worth even a second thought. One need only reflect what the use of experimental animals has done to advance scientific knowledge in the past half-century to scoff at this sort of thing.

But let us examine for a moment what the new satellite really means to us in its proper light. For some time U.S. scientists have been engaged in a missile program which has included the development of an artificial earth satellite. We had advanced to a point where we where capable of putting a 25-pound satellite into an orbit around the earth. But the ideal is a round, or nearly round, orbit, and the U.S. attempt had been rather crude here. Our satellite's orbit would have been sharply elliptical, and there was a danger that at certain points in the orbit the satellite might have gone spiralling off into space, never to be heard of again. This was not what was desired.

The Russians surprised everyone by placing a 185 pound satellite into the skies in an almost perfectly round orbit. It was the weight that really scared us. We could never have gotten such a monster off the ground. And now they have gone themselves one better. Sputnik II weighs approximately six times as much as its predecessor, and even carries a small passenger.

We hope the dog gets back to terra firma in one piece. We wish that they had put Mr. Krushchev in the satellite instead of the husky. But if the dog doesn't make it, we needn't worry about that too much. Our alarm is now rightfully at the fact that our general missile program is bringing up the rear in this race. The Soviet scientists have achieved a nicety of measurement that we can only dream about and it is to be hoped that our program will get the shot in the arm that it needs with a minimum of delay. If it does not, we may soon have a lot more to worry about than the fate of a lonely little dog which is now circling the earth at a speed unknown to man.

Rah-Rah And De-Wolfizing

University footballers demonstrated an admirable esprit de corps at yesterday's game.

The superb passing of Comet-Armed Quarterback Cummings, coupled with an incurable case of fumblitis which harassed the Gamecocks and an overall team spirit of dynamism led to a victory which kept Carolina rooters off and on throughout the contest.

We editorially compliment the footballers and their admirable effort.

The day was full of "cheerable" occurrences.

Even the high-flying Wolfpack from across the way managed to get de-wolfed.

Cheers and post-time festivities to all.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Argument For Argument's Sake Purely

By GAIL GODWIN

Controversies seem to characterize the entire edit page of the Daily Tar Heel, The Readers' Repository is slowly but steadily blocking out more and more column inches. Letters to the editor and the answers to these letters are mushrooming into huge argumentive blobs which dominate the second page of our newspaper.

The latest blob is in the form of a segregation debate.

The leaders of this debate are, I believe, searching frantically through every history book, newspaper, congressional record, almanac, etc., and lifting any little word, phrase or clause that will justify their side and their side only.

It just struck me as rather amusing. Because neither side will win. An argument is hopeless when it is one-sided on each side and when its sole purpose is to win just for the sport of winning.

Progenitors of these arguments remain glued stubbornly to one spot with their eyes glued stubbornly shut.

We might label them the "Blind Philosophers."

Their heaven lies in the terribly highbrow experience of looking up superior rhetoric and digging into deep and dusty philosophy for argumentive sport.

They simply neglect to look up both sides of a question, but pounce only on facts supporting "Their side"

They forget that compromise is necessary in almost every argument. Where compromise is barred, reason may also be excluded. No?

Some very unusual statements have emerged from the present "blind philosopher' debate.

One of them is that there is no fourteenth amendment. This is upsetting. For the past two weeks in Poly. Sci. 41, we have been devoting entire class periods to cases dealing exclusively with the fourteenth amendment, how it nationalized the Bill of Rights, its famous "Due Process" clause, etc., I would hate to think the poor Supreme Court Justices have been basing their decisions on a non-existent amendment for lo these past hundred years. And I would hate even more to think that poor students have been studying a historical fallacy in such detail.

It is interesting to see what will come next.

The sad thing about all this is that this pugnacious type of daily print is not enjoyed by readers who look to a newspaper for information, new ideas and insight.

The entire second page of our newspaper is becoming a battleground of conflicting Personal opinions.

Are some of the contributors who write such hot little masterpieces simply trying to become well-known through the means of a newspaper?

Are the writers of such articles, whether staff members or otherwise, really championing a cause. Or are they just indulging in their favorite sport at the reader's expense?

Perhaps the real newspaper spirit of informing and enlightening is being undermined by the sport of arguing just for the sake of arguing and seeing it in print.

"Thanks A Lot, Fellows"

FROM OREGON DAILY EMERALD:

Concerning School Spirit And Channelling To Propriety . . .

It was no surprise that the campus erupted Saturday at the radio's last gasp finish to the Oregon-Stanford game. There was just too much hair-tearing, rolling-on-the-floor anguish in that one to sit back down at the study table and start worrying about Monday's midterm.

And it was no surprise that the post-game festivities took the form they did. There's the natural tendency after a listening party to get outside and share your joy with anybody—everybody on your side of the cause. But in this age of power and speed off as well as on the gridiron, this final gun search for togetherness becomes almost as loaded with anguish as the living room listening. And it is getting to be more dangerous than actually playing in the game.

We're not suggesting that you can control that immediate burst if enthusiasm that sweeps the campus living groups into the campus transportation so noisily. This is spontaneity—something rare to this campus in any true form. But the follow-up publicity, coupled with the continuing success of the football Webfoots, is making this sort of enthusiasm less and less spontaneous.

Saturday's outburst was quite naturally large and sudden. But we cant help thinking that if the Washington State post-game activities hadn't grown to such exciting proportions, perhaps the Stanford follow-up wouldn't have been so large and sudden.

And this leads us to believe that it wouldn't be quite so difficult to organize something along lines a little more safe and sane—on-the-ground type of activity. The brief intersection rally near the "Side" block in the midst of Saturday's car parade might approach it.

This wild, pile-em-on-the-car and drive-like-mad way of celebrating may be fun, but things like that can get dangerous. Even if we aren't concerned about the old women and small children trying to cross Willamette St., we might stop to consider what could happen if a couple of 10-men convertibles, victory bells and all, slammed together.

It may seem a little bit stodgy, we admit, for the Eugene police to crack down on a bell-ringing crowd in a slow-moving pick-up for "obstructed vision." And we certainly didn't approve of the way the "Side" street rally was "broken up" a week ago.

But we can't expect the police to hold traffic for too many more of these red light-running races to nowhere. They wouldn't be doing their duty to keep us safe—from ourselves.

We're bound to win more ball-games in succeeding weeks. And we're bound to have more spirit—even spontaneous spirit. It's time for the Rally Board to use this spirit to good advantage—with some planned activity. The airport welcome was fairly well done, although the leadership had to come informally.

That school spirit stuff is growing this minute. And if the football successes keep that pleasant one step ahead in growth, we're going to see spirit they never dreamed could exist on this campus. But this long-sought stuff has got to be handled. Rally Board, we'll remind you again. We aren't too anxious about trying to photograph a running car parade the length of the Salem freeway this weekend.

Rameses XXI:

Old Rameses sees a certain amount of collusion in the present ignominious recall movement.

The negative bill being debated by the Di and Phi Monday night comes — not from an objective member of the debating societies —but from a spirit of opposition and political opportunity manifested by certain members of a certain fraternity on campus.

The Ram thinks, definitely, that conscientious members of the debating societies will reject this brand of what the editor calls "negativism."

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Reader Explains Edit Situation

EDITOR:

I follow with interest the conflict that you are presently having with members of the University's student body. In my opinion, editors of University newspapers hold unique positions on campuses. I suppose it is very difficult to satisfy the pseudo-student politicians and the administration, but as you are now having a taste of such, it perhaps would be superficial, indeed, to give advice to an editor whom I personally think is doing a tremendous job.

As a student member of the Board of Publication (the governing agency for all student publications) and a former editor of the Colorado Daily, the student newspaper of the University of Colorado, Boulder, Colorado; I have at times been placed in a similar position in which you find yourself today.

I've been reading The Daily Tar Heel since I have arrived at NYU, where I am presently a student at the Law School. (The paper was supplied by Jim Exum, a former student at UNC).

The paper, in my opinion, does not have the polish nor the coverage of the New York Times, but it does have the polish and coverage of a good college daily. One forgets that putting out a newspaper everyday is not easy — it is not difficult to criticize the editorial policy of the paper (and who ever wholeheartedly agrees with an editor), but in my opinion the charges of incompetency leveled against you have no basis in fact — unless the people asking for your recall are ready to provide for a highly-paid skilled journalist.

A college newspaper is just that. No more, and no les. It should not try to emulate a great city newspaper. On the contrary, it should strive to describe to the reading public, the academic and student activities that are being held on campus. Above all, it should fairly represent the University, and not just a segment.

This is hard. On all pages, an editor attempts to do that. Without a competent staff, an editor is hard put to accomplish the goal. If students are interested in reforming content, then their interest should be manifested in coming to the newspaper and working on the staff.

As for the editorial page. This is your page — and solely yours. It is here where the idea of freedom of the press is maintained on the highest level. I suppose, that when an editor writes an editorial, he tries so hard to be correct in factual statement and in his comments on the subject. It is easy to get emotional and use the wrong approach or words in discussing an issue. This is a weakness which you and all editors of any paper have and will continue to manifest. We are human. But, if it is a weakness, it can be corrected. This is not to say that one should tone down the tenor of the comment, but simply to point out the varying possibility that one might state phrases so as to make the reader read attentively and not be revolted by the statements of the editorial.

I certainly have the highest esteem for the paper, and regard it as an outstanding daily. With the help and comment of the student body, and administration, the paper can even be better. Petty arguments will only hinder and prevent advancement.

The University of North Carolina should be proud of the paper. It would indeed be a shame to continue the conflict that is presently on campus.

Joseph Fontana

STAFFER SPEAKS:

Edit Freedom & Crowd Pleasing

EDITOR:

I believe that the only legitimate consideration in the recall election is whether you have abused your editorial freedom.

I feel the charge of incompetency to produce a newspaper is poorly grounded as the Tar Heel has continued to come out and has been gradually improving.

You seem to imply that editorial freedom gives you the right to print anything. I cannot agree; I think editorial freedom has been traditionally limited by truth and good taste. The students of the University of North Carolina have the right through a recall election to judge whether you have exceeded these bounds.

I think that some of your remarks and the manner in which you have expressed yourself have been in poor taste; however, I do not feel that you have yet seriously abused your freedom, certainly not enough to justify your recall and the election of a new editor.

Unfortunately, there is a minority of students who would wish to limit editorial freedom for any editor. They do not consider the question objectively, only emotionally. They do not want any editor at any time to be anything more than an anxious crowd pleaser. They would deny the editor the right to criticize or to speak against what they believe.

Should these students by themselves prove to be strong enough to oust you, the next editor will hardly dare print a controversial opinion, for, if he should, these unthinking students will place him in your present position. Editorial freedom of any sort will be dead.

Baptists Will Launch 'Listen' Drive Tonight

Carolina's Baptist student population will launch its biannual LISTEN fund-raising campaign tonight with a supper meeting at 6 o'clock at the Chapel Hill Baptist Church. The drive will be sponsored by the UNC Baptist Student Union.

Featured speaker for the program, according to an announcement by Erwin Fuller, chairman of the LISTEN program committee, will be Miss Angeline Gore, who is presently a student nurse at Highsmith Hospital in Fayetteville.

Miss Gore spent this past summer as a student missionary in the LISTEN program, witnessing and ministering in Nigeria. Tonight she will relate some of her experiences and supplement her remarks with colored slides made during her stay and service there.

LISTEN is a mission program which was originated in 1953 by dedicated Baptist student leaders, and it is financed entirely by voluntary contributions from North Carolina Baptist college students.

Its program provides for technical, medical, educational, agricultural and spiritual aid, insofar as is possible, to those in need around the world. The word LISTEN represents the phrase "Love Impels Sacrifice Toward Every Need."

LISTEN Campaign Committee Chairman Willis Whitehead has announced that the drive will continue for two weeks, culminating on Sunday, Nov. 24. During this time LISTEN representatives in each dorm will contact each Baptist student individually and provide him with an opportunity to contribute to this cause.

All interested persons are cordially invited to attend tonight's supper forum program and to actively participate in the drive.

'Whole Lotta Partying Going On'

Jerry Lee Lewis might've thought there was "a whole lotta shaking going on" but if he was in Chapel Hill this weekend, he would probably change the words of the song to "A Whole Lotta Partying Going On."

Just about everyone has discarded book worries and is off to a party at one place or another.

Betas And Combos

If there has been or will be a moment of silence in the Beta House this weekend, it would take a detective to discover just when it was or will be. Because, from reports we have learned that the brothers, pledges and dates will have musical accompaniment to every move they make this weekend.

Friday afternoon after the concert, which many attended, The Washboard Band — which presented music at the concert — played at the Beta House for a party. That night another musical group — a combo this time — was on hand to entertain at the Beta party at the Elbow Room after the Germans dance.

Yesterday after the game the Doug Clark combo played and also at the Western party at the House last night which featured cowboys and cowgirls. As a finale today, a Dixieland combo will present music for a concert party.

ZBT Weekending

A party at the ZBT House Friday got the weekend underway for brothers, pledges and dates when a combo was on hand for musical entertainment. Saturday night a Dixieland combo from C. Va. provided music, after which ZBTs will bring the fun to a close today with a party at the House.

SAEs, Zetes & Sigma Chis Party

As a highlight to the weekend, the SAEs, Zetes and Sigma Chis partied last night in the Crystal Room of the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham.

Friday the Sigma Chis partied before going to the concert and a combo was on hand for their cabin party. Yesterday before the game, combo music was again provided for Sigma Chis and their dates.

As a finale for their weekend the SAEs will have a combo party at the house today with music by the "Three Deuces."

Meanwhile, the Zetes, after enjoying a combo party at the House Friday night and the Durham party Saturday will close their weekend activities by joining the Kappa Sigs and Phi Gams on the Phi Gam patio for a combo party today.

Pi Lam Partying

Joining in the weekend fun, the Pi Lams celebrated at a party at the House last night with combo music to add to the entertainment. On today's calendar will be brunch for brothers, pledges and dates, bringing the weekend activities to a close.

TEP Houseparty

Just about every point on the map is represented at the TEP House now while they are having their big houseparty weekend.

To welcome their dates was a party Friday afternoon, and after getting to know everyone, the Group moved over to the Carolina Inn for a formal banquet and dance with the "Embers" presenting music for dancing. After the dance, the Jerry Farber Combo provided music for a party at the House.

Following lunch at the House Saturday, the TEPs and their dates went in a group to the ballgame, returning to the House for dinner. Last night they entertained their dates at a cabin party at the Rotary Club with music by Jim Crisp's Combo. A dinner at the House today will bring the houseparty to an end.

'Teahouse' Production By Carolina Playmakers Is Group's Most Difficult Show, Technically

By CAROLYN BREWER

"The Teahouse of the August Moon," current production of the Carolina Playmakers, to run Nov. 15-17 in Memorial Hall, promises to be the most technically difficult show presented by the drama group this season.

Requiring four different settings, three of which are exterior, the comedy places great demands on the Playmakers personnel, who are spending many long hours in the scene shop. The settings are designed by Tommy Rezutto, technical director for the Playmakers.

Lewis Goldstein and Albert Gordon, technical assistants, aid Rezutto in the execution of the designs.

The intricate light cues are handled by James Armacost.

The costume shop, under the direction of Mrs. Irene Rains, has remained open for the past two weeks until the wee hours of the morning. Costumers have been busy mending and sewing for the cast of 31. Richard Newdick is the assistant in this department.

Taylor Williams, property master for "Teahouse," regards his problems as unique. His prop lists look like something from a theatrical nightmare and include such items as one jeep, one wheelbarrow (handmade), one Tsukemono bowl, one goat and two cricket cages (without crickets).

"Theahouse," with all its difficulties surmounted, opens Friday night in Memorial Hall. Tickets are available from the Business Office of the Playmakers, 214 Abernethy Hall, and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Covering Campus

SPLASH CLUB

Splash Club tryouts will be held Monday from 7-9 p.m. at the indoor swimming pool in Woollen Gym. They will take about 15 minutes and will consist of demonstrating the front crawl, back crawl, side stroke, breast stoke, surface dive, back dolphin and diving from the side of the pool.

CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH

Program topic for the Laymen's Fellowship of the United Congregational Christian Church at 7:30 p.m. today is "A Christian Looks at Politics." Rev. William T. Scott, Jr., pastor of the Congregational Christian Church in Durham, will present the subject and lead the discussion.

The Laymen's Fellowship will meet at the Parish House of the United Church, 211 West Cameron Ave.

FELLOWSHIP CONFERENCE

Rev. James O. Cansler, Baptist Student Union director at UNC, is attending the Roger Williams Fellowship Conference at the Divinity School of the University of Chicago this week.

Rev. Cansler, a graduate of UNC and of Duke Divinity School, has been BSU director here since 1954. Approximately 150 Baptist ministers from over the United States were invited to attend this year's session.

"I'm in a business nobody dreamed of three years ago"

"In a company that develops new ideas by the thousands," says 30-year-old William K. Cordier, manager of General Electric's Man-Made Diamond pilot plant, "a young man's career progress need not be limited by his particular field. In my five years with General Electric, I've gained valuable experience in several different fields, and each assignment has helped me to move ahead. Right now, I have an exciting job. I run the world's first diamond-making plant — a business nobody dreamed of three years ago."

Diamond Making a Reality

The job Bill Cordier holds is an important one, created because General Electric has the scientific and technical resources needed to seek out new knowledge and swiftly translate it into products that people want and need. In 1955, the company announced a major scientific breakthrough — the production of real diamonds in the laboratory. Today, little more than two years later, General Electric is making and selling quantities of these diamonds for civilian and defense use.

Achieving Three-Way Progress

General Electric's ability to take on and solve big problems — in research and development as well as every phase of production — is constantly creating challenging new opportunities for the 29,000 college graduates at the company. As we see it, by providing a healthy climate for a young man's self-development in whatever area he may choose, we encourage not only his own progress, but that of the company and the nation as well.

WILLIAM K. CORDIER received his B.S. in Mechanical Engineering from Purdue University (1949). He joined General Electric's Metallurgical Products Department in 1952.

UNC Cross-Country Unit Defends Big 4 Title In Raleigh Tomorrow

By ERWIN FULLER

Going through a regular season undefeated is a splendid achievement and Carolina's varsity cross-country contingent is justly proud of its accomplishment, but Coach Dale Ranson and his harriers realize that the going really gets rough and the stakes are really high in the post-season competition which follows.

Thus, when the Tar Heels journey to Raleigh tomorrow afternoon to participate in the North Carolina State Championships against representatives from all the Big Four institutions, Davidson, and possibly several other smaller colleges across the state, there will be a double incentive for them to cop that event.

First the UNC group will be the defending champion, and secondly the boys from the Hill will be out to avoid any letdown after their regular season victories which might mar their perfect slate.

Favorite Role

On the basis of past performances this season, the Tar Heels will rate a role as solid favorites at the annual event, for they have already dumped Duke 22-33 and Wake Forest 21-41 in individual meets. In addition, Clemson (25-32), Virginia (21-37), and Tennessee (22-60) all have fallen before this assemblage which boasts excellent coaching and individual brilliance as well as superior team depth and balance.

For the boys in blue, it will be the same group which has performed so well all season which will toe the starting mark at 4 o'clock. Wayne Bishop, whose knee injury Friday afternoon was painful but apparently is not serious. Everrett Whatley, Dave Scurlock, Cowles Liipfert, John Reaves, Howard Kahn, Alex Coffin, Doug Henderson, and Pickle Hunter all have made their contribution to the UNC winning efforts, and Ranson will depend upon them for a victory tomorrow afternoon.

Frosh Run

The freshman runners, victors over the Wake Forest Baby Deacs by a 21-37 count in a meet held here Friday afternoon, also will make the trip to the Capital City. For the yearling harriers, it will be Worth Sweet Harry Miller, Bob Foxworth, Neal Chappell, John Boles, and Bob Constello who will be expected to lead the pack past the finish markers.

Bass Says 'It Was UNC's Day'

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Assistant Coach Marvin Bass of South Carolina, speaking in behalf of Head Coach Warren Giese, said in an interview yesterday that the Gamecock-Tar Heel game was definitely the Tar Heel's day.

"Even though we got a lot of bad breaks, they outplayed us and it was their game nearly all the way. We came from behind to beat Texas but today was another story."

"Carolina (North) has one of the toughest lines in the country today; it is rough and tough and it charges hard every play. That running pass that they ran against us so well today—Maryland killed us with the same type of play. We had a suspicion it was coming but we just didn't prepare for it enough," he added.

When asked about quarterback Jack Cummings, Bass replied, "No, he didn't surprise us too much. We knew from our scouting reports that he was plenty good."

"We have had a tremendous amount of bad breaks this year," Bass remarked. "There have been at least three games we could have won as easily as we lost."

Warren Giese, the youthful South Carolina mentor who was an assistant to Jim Tatum at Maryland for 8 years, suffered the worst defeat of his career today at the hands of his former boss' charges. He made a very successful debut at USC last year, as his team upset Duke in their first game and almost copped an Orange Bowl bid.

Frosh Booters Take 6-5 Win Over WWC

SWANNANOA — Carolina's freshman soccer team engaged in a wing-ding of a scoring duel with Woodrow Wilson College Friday afternoon before finally coming out on top, 6-5.

It was the first win for the UNC freshman squad, which has dropped two games, losing twice to Duke, 2-1.

Quigg Said Resting Well After Operation

Carolina's veteran basketball center, Joe Quigg underwent surgery for a knee injury in Memorial Hospital yesterday morning and is reportedly resting as well as can be expected at this early stage. He will be out for the entire season.

Quigg sustained the injury (a fracture of the right tibia which extends into the knee joint) Thursday night in an intra-squad scrimmage in Woollen Gym.

The accident occurred in the final few minutes on a scramble for a rebound. Quigg and forward Pete Brennan bumped together and Quigg collided with sophomore center Lee Schaffer. Both fell to the floor and Quigg landed on his knee.

Extensive X-rays Friday that the injury was serious enough to sideline the Brooklyn, N. Y. senior for the entire season.

It was the second pre-season blow to the National Basketball Champs. Sophomore York Larese will also miss the entire season because of a knee operation some time ago.

Quigg will be missed severely by the Tar Heels. It was his two free throws in the final seconds of the third overtime which gave the Tar Heels the NCAA championship over Kansas University last March. The Tar Heels will probably be counting heavily on Danny Lotz, Lee Schaffer, Ray Stanley and Dick Kepley to fill the big gap left by Quigg.

Duke Ties Navy 6-6 For Third Straight Time

BALTIMORE, Nov. 9—(AP)—Duke's mighty effort in the closing minutes to break its third straight football tie with Navy came within two yards of the goal before it was killed by a penalty to leave the game tied at 6-6 today.

Duke, biding its time while Navy was wearing itself out running all over the field, made its big move with eight minutes left.

Led by 166 pound halfback George Dutrow, the Blue Devils rammed from their 47 to the Navy 14. Quarterback Bob Brodhead spotted end Dave Hurm on the Navy 10 and threw him the ball.

Hurm barrelled to the 2 and the crowd of 31,000 sensed this was Duke's chance to end the monotonous deadlock business which now is the fourth in the last five years.

But Duke was caught clipping and moved back to the Navy 34 to kill the Blue Devils.

Navy bounced back to go deep nto Duke territory for the eighth time and got to the 27 before elapsing time forced the Middies to have tackle Bob Reifsnyder try a field goal. It was short and wide from 33 yards away.

Tar Heels In Best Effort Of The Year Against Gamecocks

Heels were penalized for backfield in motion.

Touchdown Pass

That moved the ball to the 33. Cummings then tried a pass to Payne which was no good. On fourth down, the Tar Heels decided to shoot the works as Cummings faded back and hit DeCantis who was all alone in the end zone. Blazer made it 21-0 at the 13:34 mark.

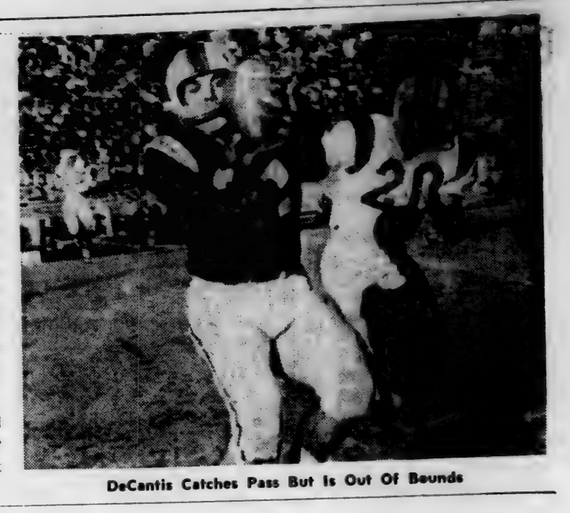
Blazer kicked off again to end Jimmy Duncan at the 25 and he bobbled the ball and Blazer recovered. The Tar Heels moved as deep as the 22 in the fourdown series, but turned the ball over to SC at the 27.

USC Scores

The two clubs traded possession twice before the Gamecocks shifted into high gear for the only time in the game. The result was SC's only touchdown.

The drive started when Hathaway kicked to Destino on the South Carolina 16 and he made a beautiful run back to the Tar Heel 37. Quarterback Stan Spears went right for five and pitched out to fullback Don Johnson who carried all the way to the Carolina six.

Johnson then went up the middle to the four and an off side penalties against the Tar Heels put the ball on the one-yard line. Spears sneaked over on the next play but Johnson's point after attempt was blocked by center Jim Davis and the Tar Heels led, 21-6. The score came with 7:28 remaining in the third quarter.



Drive Halted

Carolina took the ensuing kickoff and the Tar Heel's second unit drove from their own 37 to the South Carolina one before the Gamecocks stopped the threat. It was in this drive that Hathaway received the injury which will sideline him for the rest of the season.

The Tar Heel's were halted only momentarily, however. The Gamecocks took over on their own one and ran three plays that netted three yards before the third period ended.

On the first play of the final quarter, Blazer dropped Spears back on the one. The Gamecocks kicked out but Heywood King's kick went only ten yards and the Tar Heels took over and scored on the next play at 13:54. The tally came when DeCantis took a pitchout from Cummings and hit Daley Goff with a pass on the right side of the end zone.

Blazer added the extra point and that was the ball game as neither team threatened seriously the rest of the way.

best we have played against this season."

A question was asked concerning the unusual shifting in the defensive line during the first half. Tatum chuckled and said, "That was Jimmy Jones' doings. We had him calling the defensive signals, and I think he did a miraculous job. We have done a lot of shifting before, because it gives the defense an advantage, but Jones handled it to perfection today."

Tatum also complimented Jones very highly on his individual performance. Yesterday's game was the first time Jones had played center on the varsity. A star at that position in high school, Tatum made the switch to bolster his ranks at that injury—depleted position. He said that he hasn't decided whether Jones would remain there for the rest of the season.

'I Smell Burning'

HITCHIN, England, Nov. 8—(AP)—Mrs. Vera Ludford walked into a cigar store and told a clerk, "I smell burning."

"No wonder," the girl replied. "Your hair's on fire." Then she beat out the blaze with a newspaper.

Mrs. Ludford thinks a cigarette butt thrown from an upper window may have done it.

Committee Counsel's Speech Slated For Hill Hall Tonight

Final arrangements have been completed for an address here tonight by Robert F. Kennedy of Massachusetts, known best for his role in current Senatorial labor investigations.

The nationally-known political figure will speak in Hill Hall at 8:15 p.m. in the second of the Heck Lecture Series sponsored by the Law Association of UNC.

Kennedy will be met at Raleigh Durham Airport late this afternoon by representatives of the Law Association and escorted to the Carolina Inn, where a dinner will be held in his honor.

James Ramsey, president of the Law Association, will welcome the guests, and Kennedy will be introduced by Herbert Toms, chairman of the Heck Lecture Committee.

Tonight's program was originally planned for the Institute of Government Building, but was changed to Hill Hall in order that more people could hear Kennedy's address.

Tonight's speaker, a 1948 graduate of Harvard, received his LL.B. degree in 1951 from the University of Virginia. He then began his government career as attorney in the criminal division of the Department of Justice.

In 1953 Kennedy joined the staff of the Senate Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and served as chief counsel of this committee in 1955.

When the Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field was appointed, Kennedy was named chief counsel and since has received national recognition for his role in the work of that committee.

He has been the subject of numerous articles in leading magazines during the past year and is a familiar figure on the television screens of the nation.

In 1954 the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce selected Kennedy as one of the "Ten Outstanding Young Men In The United States."

Kennedy's address here tonight will be broadcast over WUNC and will be followed by a reception in his honor at Graham Memorial.

VOTING TODAY FILLS KEY POSTS

Braxton Hits Method Of Selection

Says Vote Ought Pick SSL Agents

The State Student Legislature drew fire yesterday from University Party Chairman Harry Braxton, who called for either abolition or popular election of UNC's delegation to the mock assembly.

Following on the heels of statewide criticism of the students' action in passing bills favoring legalized prostitution and inter-racial marriages, Braxton predicted the possibility of UP-sponsored legislation aimed at revamping the method of choosing SSL delegates.

He predicted that the UP might sponsor a bill "either to stop sending UNC delegates to the SSL or to have representatives elected by the student body."

Braxton said he did not think that "students should be sent from this campus who do not represent clearly the campus views and are not chosen by the student body."

"These people (the SSL delegates) are chosen by a small group and merely reflect their own persoal opinions," he said. "However, they are publicized across the state as giving the opinions of the student body as a whole."

Braxton, who said he was not attacking any specific legislation passed at last week's meeting of the SSL, said he did not think the student government should allow "these students to go to such meetings unless they are properly chosen."

He defined "properly chosen" as being elected by the students and therefore reflecting student views.

UNC GERMAN TABLE FORMED — One of the several UNC activities aimed at closer association of foreign students and teachers with their American hosts is the "German Table," above, where speakers of German of all nationalities are welcome. The group gathers each Tuesday and Thursday at 1 p.m. in a Lenoir Hall dining room to mix food, fellowship and practice of the German tongue.

Polls Open At 9 A.M., Close At 6

UNC students will go to the polls today to fill key legislative and judicial posts and to name class officers to serve the remainder of this year.

All day balloting will fill positions on the Men's and Women's Honor Council, Student Legislature, Student Council and freshman, sophomore and junior class offices.

Elections Board Chairman Art Sobel said polls will open at 9 a.m. and will close at 6 p.m. Absentee ballots must be turned in by next Tuesday.

Although today's election is clearly a contest between the two political factions on campus, neither UP Chairman Harry Braxton of SP Chairman Whit Whitfield believe it will be "indicative of what will happen in the spring."

And while Whitfield said he believes UP will retain its majority in the current legislature, he said the Student Party predicts a comeback in the spring in which it will recapture the legislative majority.

"We would, however, be very happy to capture that majority in today's election," Whitfield said.

UP Chairman Braxton has said "We feel that our candidates, if elected, will best represent student opinion and we ask that a UP majority be returned to the student legislature."

Boxes for voting will be placed in every dorm except Kenan and Connor. Members of Kenan will vote in McIver dorm; Connor, in Winston.

Town polling places will be attended by persons chosen by the elections board. Attendants for dorm polling boxes will be selected by the dormitory presidents.

Town Men's district I will vote at the Carolina Inn; Town Men's II, at the Scuttlebutt; Town Men's III, at Graham Memorial, and Town Men's IV, at Victory Village.

Town Women will vote in Gerrard Hall.

ID cards of all voters will be stamped by the Elections board. Dorm voters will sign dormitory roster at the polling places.

Town voters will be required to fill out index cards giving name, class and address. These cards will be retained by the elections board.

There shall be no campaign literature of any type within a radius of 50 feet of the polling places

Art Sobel, chairman of the Elections Board, has asked all interested persons to come to the basement of GM tonight after 7 p.m. to hel tabulate election re-p.m. to help tabulate election returns.

Candidates for the various posts are:

Aycock Meets With Alumni

Chancellor William B. Aycock will head a delegation from the University who will attend the annual fall dinner for UNC alumni in the Greensboro area tonight at 7 o'clock at the Mayfair Cafeteria, Greensboro.

The appearance of Aycock in Greensboro will complete a cycle which began 12 years ago when he arrived there to teach in senior high school after graduate study at Chapel Hill.

Highlighting the evening's program will be the presentation of "some realistic appraisals of the University's future" by three UNC officials. They are Dr. James L. Godfrey, dean of the faculty; Dr. Sturgis E. Leavitt, Kenan professor of Spanish; and Dr. J. C. Morrow of the Chemistry Department.

The Greensboro gathering will be the first of a number of alumni meetings to be held throughout the state, at which the University's new long-range programs will be outlined.

Grover C. Godwin, president of Greensboro alumni, said that a business session will also be held Tuesday night for election of new officers. William M. Transou is vice-president of the group and C. Clifford Frazier Jr. is secretary treasurer.

Other alumni leaders of the area who have worked with Chancellor Aycock's "team" of administrative-faculty advisors for long-range planning are James Webb, president of the UNC General Alumni Association; James W. Poole, chairman of the 1957-58 Alumni Annual Giving; D. Eward Hudgins; and William D. Snider.

Tarnation Debt Erased With Evans' Signature

Student Body President Sonny Evans yesterday placed his official stamp of approval on a bill to erase the debt of UNC's defunct humor magazine "Tarnation." The bill was passed by the Student Legislature October 31.

Evans said his delay in approving the bill resulted from his attempts to meet with various students in an effort to resolve differences of opinion on the proper fate of the legislation.

"I have witheld my signature from the bill in an effort to meet with both parties and everyone who was concerned to get the facts," he said. "The discussion has ranged around precedent and moral obligation."

Evans summed up the history of the warmly-contested bill as follows:

"When the Legislature re-established a humor magazine, it specifically said that this magazine should not be called the 'Tarnation' since the Legislature did not want to assume the debts and since everyone thought it would be better if we had a fresh start in a new humor magazine.

"However," he continued, "in truth, it re-established the 'Tarnation' in every way except name, and thus student government with a legal loophole avoided payment of the debt."

In signing the bill, Evans said he thought the debt should be paid although there were no legal grounds for such payments.

He pointed out, however, that "it is important that this not be considered as a precedent.

"The Legislature is a free agent in things of this sort and must investigate the validity of each situation and act on them in an individual manners."

UP Holds Edge In Legislature

Today 34 new legislators will be elected; the total membership of the Student Legislature is 50.

Before the election the University Party dominated the body by holding 29 seats as opposed to the Student Party's 21 seats.

Of the sixteen legislators whose terms do not expire until spirng nine are SP's and seven are UP's.

Last year the UP took all class offices up for election in the fall exception for the vice-president of the freshman class.

The sophomore class officers were not elected in the fall, only those of the freshman and junior classes.

Before the election UP held two seats in the dorm women's district; the SP held the same number.

In Dorm Men's I the Student Party will be risking two seats; the UP one.

In Dorm Men's II the Student Party will have three of its seats up for re-election; the UP has one.

In Dorm Men's III the SP will be risking two seats.

In Dorm Men's IV the SP will have the seat they formerly controlled up for re-election.

In Dorm Men's V the UP formerly held one seat now up for re-election; the SP will be risking two.

In town Men's I the UP will be risking five seats it formerly held.

In Town Men's II the UP held the only seat now up for voting .

In Town Men's III the UP held three seats now up for election, and the SP held two seats.

In Town Men's IV UP held the only seat up for election.

The SP held the seat in Victory Village.

De MOLAY TO MEET

Craven Speaks To Press Club

By GAIL GODWIN

Charles Carven, 1948 graduate of the U.N.C. School of Journalism and present noted news and observer columnist, spoke informally to the press club last night.

"There is no formaula for feature writing," Craven told press club members. "It just takes a lot of practice."

He gave several good rules for writing a color story. These included: First, not being tempted by too many adjectives; second, the use of a clean, simple, and terse style; and third, objectivity.

"Let the reader summon up his own emotions," craven advised.

Craven, who has been on the News and Observer staff for eight years, first started his column about four years ago as a result of his regular court beat.

His everday color stories centering around "Rusty's Tavern" have become well-known throughout the state.

Craven saidt the most difficult step in wrting a column was 'just sitting down at the typewriter and doing it." He pointed out that feature stories did not have strict deadlines as did news stories.

When asked how he wrote his columns, he answered that he just "thought about the incident" and decided how it had first affected him.

He told members that most of his day was occupied with a regular beat. "I do my column as a fil in—a harried sort of thing," he said.

Craven pointed out that, although the hard news report is still the heart of a newspaper, the color story is in demand and greatly increases circulation.

"It is a lot of fun and gives you an opportunity to expres yourself," he said.

IGY TO BE TOPIC

The International Geophysical Year will be the topic for two guest speakers before the UNC Faculty Club's Luncheon today at 1 p. m. at the Carolina Inn.

World In Brief

Man To Space

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11 (AP)—Dr. John P. Hagen, head of Project Vanguard, said today the Unted States should develop a well coordinated program aimed at sending man into space.

The Vanguard project, devoted to the launching of a fully instrumented earth satellite, is a step in that direction, Hagen told a news conference.

He estimated it would be "years" before a man could be sen up with any chance of getting back to earth safely, and that meanwhile experiments, with animals must continue.

Laika, the Russian dog inside Sputnik II appeared today to have died in the interests of furthering space travel. There was no official report that it was dead.

Explosion

FLETCHER, N.C. Nov. 11 (AP)-An explosion in the boiler house of the Cranston Print works here injured an undetermined number at the cloth finishing plant. However, first reports said no one was killed.

A woman who answered the telephone told a reporter that she could give no details, and couldn't get others to the telepohne because those in authority were away from their posts.

She said there was at least one doctor on hand. Another report said ambulances were summoned.

Faubus Candidate?

NEW ORLEANS Nov. 11 (AP)-Gov Orval Faubus of Arkansas today said he would not rule out the possibility of him heading a third party as presidential candidate.

"But it would not be a party based on the segregation-integration issue," said the governor. "It would be based on states rights."

The governor made the remark while talking to a small group befor he was to address a Veterans Day meeting here sponsored by the American Legion.

He had said he was receiving support from states all over the nation, including the North.

War Jitters

DOMASCUS, Syria, Nov. 11 (AP) Syria put on a new show of war jitters today after the army reported unusually large Turkish Troop movements at night along the northern frontier.

High excitement was generated also by mass street demonstrations and new editorial attacks against Hussein of Jordan, king of the brother Arab state to the south. Speakers and editorials accused him of betraying arab nationalism and threatened him with liquidation.

Developments which otherwise could presage a new crest of the Middle East crisis were somewhat balanced, however, by unconfirmed reports from Arab sources at the United Nations in New York that Syria and the United States had agreed on steps to improve their relations.

Typhoon

Manila,-Tuesday, Nov. 12 (AP)-A raging typhoon with 140 mile-an-hour center winds moved on the Philippines early today, only hours before the scheduled start of balloting in the nation's presidential election.

Adams Clarifies SSL's Position

In answer to statewide criticism of the State Student Legislature and particularly its recent resolutions to legalize prostitution and inter-racial mariages—the chairman of UNC's delegation to the SSL yesterday pointed to what he termed "misconceptions and misstatements" concerning the groups activities.

SSL Delegate Pat Adams, senior from Asheboro, called attention to the "significant bills" passed by the mock legislature. These, he said, included bills to establish scholarships for mentally gifted children, to investigate the living conditions of migratory workers and to investigate North Carolina's educational needs.

The bill concerning inter-racial marriages, he said, "was to repeal the state laws preventing the intermarriage of the races." He added that it neither "condoned nor condemned inter-racial marrage but merely affirmed the basic guarentee of individual freedom."

Joint Di-Phi Assembly Defeats Recall Vote Bill

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Literary Society last night defeated a bill calling for the recall of Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass by a vote of 5-3. However, the senators and guests passed the evening's legislation by 21-6.

The bill in effect stated: that Neil Bass has shown evidence of incompetency, made libelous statements, ignored available facts concerning the Asian Flu situation, ignored invitations of the Chancellor and failed to organize his staff in a proper manner.

Principal speaker in behalf of the bill was Don Grey of the Phi, who stated in effect; Dr. Hedgepath attempted to secure Asian Flu vaccine as early as July 30, of this year and questioned whether libel wasn't present in some of Editor Bass' statements concerning the infirmary officials and Coach Jim Tatum.

He attempted to eliminate the issue of freedom of the press and to harp on the incompetancy of Bass. He declared that Bass had passed up two opportunities to meet with Chancellor Aycock and an opportunity to greet Governor Stevenson at the airport.

Bass rose in his own defense stating that he had been unable quanity as he has over 50 people working for him including 7 columnists. He stated: "The recall was to attend the meetings with the Chancellor due to illness. He felt that his staff was not lacking in not started for the reasons stated in this bill, but rather by a small clique which has clouded the issue.

"The paper has as much right as anyone to question Jim Tatum. The group initiating the recall has waited for the opportunity to find fault with the editorials of The Daily Tar Heel. It feels that through the Tatum articles the time is right."

"The issue is editorial freedom. I fail to see where I have said anything libelous about Tatum. The paper shall always be aginst professionalism" while I am editor."

Bass made the following statment to the Daily Tar Heel news correspondent following the meeting." Rejection of the recall movement by responsible Di-Phi members was the evening's important action. The overall 21-6 vote was such only because minority proponents of the recall packed the hall.

"Supporters of freedom of the press were not there en mass because there was no anticipation that a minority political clique would pack the hall."

A followup to this article will appear in Wednesday's edition.

Intermarriage Measure Misconstrued & Untimely, But Very Admirable...

The "intermarriage" resolution passed last week by the State Student Legislature has ignited a controversial conflagration throughout the state—partially due to a misconstruing of the measure's content state newspapers.

The News And Observer and other state papers termed the measure an open advocation of racila intermariage, which is diametrically in opposition to the measure's actual meaning.

The resolution actually advocates the repeal of all state laws prohibiting racial intermarriage, which in effect, merely extends more civil liberty to the people of the state.

As an extension of civil liberties, the resolution is admirable. But the tone of the measure, especially at this particular time when racial flare-ups and proposed educational integration has the South on the tip of its touchy toes, was definitely in poor taste and left the student solons open for a great deal of criticism by trustees, administration officials and alumni throughout the state.

The resolution was introduced by the Duke University Woman's College and was passed by both the House of Representatives and the Senate.

We very definitely and very vehemently oppose inter-marriage between Negroes and whites. We can think of nothing more despicable than amalgamation and miscegenation.

But we do not condone nor endorse governmental prohibition of racial intermarriage. To each his own. If individuals want wholesale miscegenation, then the matter should rest with these individuals.

Governmental intervention and prohibition merely stiffles liberty and solves nothing. To wit: The Eighteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution, and on a realistic and more recent level, intervention of federal troops in Little Rock—an action justified only because of the bull-headedness and political-mindedness of Gov. Orval Faubus.

The University delegation, according to one unofficial source, accorded the resolution more negative votes than any other school represented. Thus trustees and others so up-in-arms may partially vindicate local student lawmakers, if vindication is the proper word to use.

In short, the resolution came at a most inopportune and racially-upset time.

But the promulgation of more civil liberties to individual Americans is always an admirable action. More and more, American individualism and justifable states' rights are falling prey to a creeping brand of socialism generated by the federal goverment.

And state newspapers who completely misconstrued the State Student Legislature's action definitely owe representatives a large economy-sized apology. Some papers even reported that the State College-introduced bill to legalize prostitution was passed. It was incontrovertibly defeated.

State Student legislators had guts. But their fortitude was displayed at a rather inopportune time.

The bill restoring individual-civil liberties was admirable, but inopportune.

Life-Blood & Lethargy: Vote And Insure Liberty

The life-blood of American democracy, of democracy anywhere, is at stake today.

This liteblood, of course, is the ballot box procedure—th right to vote for the candidate of your choice. It replenishes government and reinvigorates governmental system through the tenure of office which it instigates or terminates.

Systematic tenure of office is the heart-beat of government, and the balloting procedure is the life-blood upon which the heart-beat depends.

Student autonomy is only as strong as the percentage of voters which appears at the ballot box today. In past fall elections—since the major student government officers, the campus-wide officers, are elected in th spring—the voting percentage of the student electorate has been discouragingly small.

Cynics and opponents of student government and its encompassing self-discipline often argue that students are too-little interested in government to govern themselves. Their most convincing argument is the lack of student participation at the polls.

Government and autonomy's heart-beat becomes lethargic and slow only if student participation becomes slow and lethargic.

Officials in student government's judiciary and legislative branches are being elected today—the law-enforcers and law-makers of the campus. And class executives, whose merit—with exception being the senior class—is somewhat more dubious, will be chosen.

The student electorate must realize that failure to vote could result in a serious jeopardy, as far as student self-government is concerned.

Vote and guarantee student liberty.

Failure to do so is dangerous.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Segregation & States Rts. Doctrinaires

Curtis Gans

Perhaps the most politically important argument against integration comes from those who believe that the authority over education, voting, and opportunity emanates from the states. Those holding this view feel it is the state's responsibility, not the federal government's, to handle the problem of the colored people with regard to education, enfranchisement, and opportunity. This is the States' Rights doctrine.

Article Ten of the amendments to the Constitution of the United States gives the basis for those who claim the doctrine of State's Rights, for this article reserves the powers, not specifically delegated by the Constitution to other agencies of the federal government, to the states.

However, there is a clause in Article Ten that says that powers prohibited to states bythe Constitution shall not be reserved to the states.

Prior to 1868, only Congress was specifically prohibited the power to infringe on the rights guaranteed individuals in the Bill of Rights, articles one through nine. However, in 1868 with the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment, the states were denied power to infringe on individual rights. The colored people by virtue of the Thirteenth Amendment were, in the large majority, citizens. Hence the states had and now have no legal claim to infringement of the rights of any individual regardless of race, creed, religion, or color.

There seems to be no doubt in the minds of the segregationists as to the vailidty of the Thirteenth Amendment. There seems to be indeed some question as to the legality of the Fourteenth Amendment, and the question has been raised often and most notably by Columnist David Lawrence. Yet, the fact is that it is a part of the U. S. Constitution and has had more far reaching effect than perhaps any other single amendment.

Moreover, there is no question that the amendment was ratified legally, and is in the Constitution of the United States justifiably. There are, however, two ways of looking at the ratification of this amendent.

From a Constitutional angle, there is reason to believe that the Southern states were not states after the civil war, but were territories of the United States.

In Article One section ten of the Constitution there is a clause which states that no state may enter a confederation. Hence, the Civil War was the southern independence, and the result was territorial status for the southern states.

If this is true, then the legislatures of the Northern States, with only Kentucky and Delaware dissenting were enough to carry the amendment. Moreover, Congress, which is, by virtue of Article Four, empowered to set the requirements for statehood, was able to call ratification of the Constitution with the addition of amendment fourteen as a prerequisite for readmission as states of the Union. Without ratification ,the southern states still would be territories.

There is another view held by many including the Supreme Court in Texas vs. White, that the southern states had never left the Union. If this is the case, then there is also no question of the legality of the Fourteenth Amendment. Although the Fourteenth Amendment was rejected the first time around, with thirteen states dissenting, there is no bar in the Constitution to trying to pass an amendment a second time. The second ime, it was passed by the "Reconstructed" southern legislatures.

There may be some who say that the "reconstructed" governments were not representative governments, but Congress is empowered, by Article Four, to guaranteed to the states a republican form of government. Hence, the "Reconstructed" southern governments under the 1867 Reconstructions Act, were the governments thought of as respresetative and republican at the time by Congress.

Whatever the ills of Reconstruction, the great good of the protection of the democratic rights of all citizens in law was a product.

Equal educational facilities through integrated schools was judged to be one of the rights or a corollary of the rights guaranteed to all citizens, regardless of race, creed color, or religion. Any attempt by Gov. Orval Faubus, Sen. Harry Byrd, or even the more moderate Rep. Thomas Pearsall of North Carolina to prevent the progress of integration in the southern states is a deliberate circumvention of the law of the land .

It is indeed unfortunate that President Eisenhower waited until force was necessary in Little Rock, but it is a fact that the President as executor of the laws of the U. S. has the power to employ force to see that the law of the land is followed. Equality of rights is the law, and must be followed.

It is only when the colored people have equal rights in all fields, not only education, that the principle of democracy can become reality. The road maybe long and hard, but the ultimate result will be a government of the United States, truly, "of, for, and by the people."

Herringbone Spacers Reject Housing Offer

Whit Whitfield

We don't imagine that anyone else saw it. Most of the coeds were in, and it was after 3 a.m.. It was about 268 feet, 3 inches long, weighed 26 tons, and was shaped like a lampshade with a cigar-like nose.

The Herringbone tweed design of the body was clearly discernible in the streetlight near Y-court. The yellowish, orange-like glow which surrounded the ship as it descended was eerie enough, but the passengers were enough to scare even such a brave man as President Eisenhower.

There were 67 of them in all, each dressed in olive-drab space suits of Harris Tweed (yes, with no pleats). They were all six feet tall and weighed 187 pounds. They appeared friendly enough, so we walked over to chat with them, which was difficult, for they only spoke Greek.

We asked them if they were responsible for the stalled cars in Texas and New Mexico, the kidnapped dog, the potato patch scare in Dunn and the fish pond incident in McColl, S. C. They affirmed that they were and apologized for the trouble they had caused. Incidentally, their leader, Kris Kolombo, mentioned a visit with a gentleman named R. O. Schmidt on a Nebraska prairie a few nights back that proved most interesting. He was the first insane human that they had met.

We were invited in for a breakfast of dogs, and eggs. (They met with Sputnik II on the way.) Afterwards Kris told me that they were married students at the University of Nocoop, a state-owned school on the planet Mars. They too were looking for accommodations.

Most of them were veterans of the Chumpchev Revolution, and deeply concerned over the lack of consideration given them by the state. Their living quarters were in a state of semi-dilapidation, but this was all they could afford, for the apartments near the university were so high that it was absured to think that they would afford to pay for them.

After we had told them the situation here, they were quite upset, and rightly so, for they had wanted to commute from earth if possible. They didn't relish the idea of going on to Jupiter.

Reitterated Plea For Lighter Load

EDITOR:

Last week's article "A Plea for lighter curricula . . ." reiterated the well-known need for scientists in this country — scientists of all ranks, not just Einsteins, but technicians and everything between the two extremes. The major point was something familiar to most students, and that is the unfair workload that is placed on science students. When we say unfair, we mean the actual amount of work required for sceince students as compared to the amount of work required for non-science students.

Just imagine the difference in the amount of work outside of class necessary for a non-science student to keep up with his sociology, anthropology, or english classes, and the amount of work necessary for the science student to keep up with his chemistry, physics, or calculus classes. The number of hours credit for both is approximately the same, fifteen or sixteen hours, but the difference in actual work performed is practically doubled!

And don't be misled into believing that the science courses are just as easy for the science major as the non-science courses are for other majors. It just ain't so! Why is there not a proportional representation of science students participating in extra-curricula activities? Why aren't more science students in fratiernities and sororities Is it because they are not interested in these activities? No—a better reason is that they don't have the time to participate. Most of them have to double up the amount of work in a given time just to be able to go to one football game in two or three months!

Also every semester several science students are forced to quit school or change to another field because they cannot maintain an average scholastic standing due to the present workload requirement. This is a loss of capable students; it is a loss that is detrimental to our country and our way of life. Can we afford this loss?

But what can we as students and faculty do about this? Well our need for scientists is a reality. Why not use a realistic method to help meet this need? Why not reduce the workload for science students? That is, instead of requiring fifteen hours per semester, why not reduce this requirement to perhaps twelve hours of work per semester in cases that need this reduction? What this really amounts to is an equaling-out of the workload for science majors. This would give them a chance to compete and participate on an equal basis with other students. This reduction in workload does not imply a decrease in the quantity of courses required for science majors, nor does it imply a decrease in the quality of work required for any particular science course. But it does offer the student of science an opportunity for a "normal" workload each semester.

One possible outcome for an equaling-out program of this type would be the inducement necessary for students who are interested in science to go into it. Some of these students are afraid to tackle it now. We can't afford to lose these interested people, not with the world situation that exists today.

Some students obviously just aren't interested in how much work a science major has to do, but there is one thing you can bet those "uninterested" students are interested in, and that is protection for themselves and freedom. And after all, those are the problems at hand in the world today! There seems to be one country that knows where its safety lies, and that country is Russia!

Are we going to be able to use our tradition and resistance to change as defense against their knowledge and their missiles?

'THE FIRE FIGHTERS'

FORM OREGON DAILY EMERALD:

Cruelty To Dogs Or Achievement

The peculiar nature of humans is nicely pointed up by the storm of indignant protest that has arisen over the Russians' launching of a small dog in Sputnik II. The repercussions of this act may well catch them with their propaganda down.

This is really — much as we hate to admit it — another scientific "first" for the Russians. They beat us with Sputnik I and now have launched a larger satellite with a warm-blooded animal in it.

Many observers are saying, and perhaps correctly, that sending Curly up with the new satellite will do the Russians much more harm — propaganda-wise — than good. This follows the old journalistic axiom that a picture of a starving pup on a back page will arouse more interest and discussion than a dozen stormy editorials.

But from a detached scientific viewpoint, the storm of indignant protest over Curly is nonsense, and made even more ridiculous by some animal lovers' suggestions that human volunteers should have been sent up instead. Much of scientific value can be learned by sending a mammal orbiting in space.

Most of the modern advances in medical science have been over the dead bodies of thousands of laboratory rabbits and guinea pigs. Many of the techniques of treating heart disease have been perfected through experiments on dogs.

The Emerald certainly does not condone needless inhumanity toward dumb animals. But we hold no brief with those emotional people who are saying tha animals should not beused in legitimate scientific experiments. Apd just because the Russians are using Curly in a scientific experiment does not change the facts of the matter. We're just sorry that she's not up in an American Vanguard.

Broad Interest Noted In Co-Rec 'Carnival'

Thirty-three teams have entered this year's "Co-Recreational Carnival" for the largest number ever recorded for the annual event, it was disclosed today.

This is the twelfth year for the "Carnival" which will start at 6:40 Thursday evening in Woollen Gymanasium. Coach Rabb, director of intramurals, is responsbile for the organization of this event.

These teams are made up from men and women dorms, sororities and fraternities. The women's organization have done a fine job on getting their entries in on time, stated Coach Rabb. Some organizations have entered as many as four teams.

There will be one or more faculty teams to participate as "just another co-recreational team.

It is essential that the teams be on time and meet under the sign bearing its name, Coach Rabb said. Those late for their events will be eliminated.

The carnival will be in three parts. The first will consist of Table Tennis, Badminton, volley ball doubles, tether ball for girls, box hockey for men, archery and carnival games for boys and girls.

The second part will begin at 8:20 and consist of five or six novelty relays. Jackey McCarthy and a group of graduate students in physical education will conduct this division.

The third part will be a "cake walk" and a "turkey walk." During this, the officials will add up the scores of the different teams. The winners in each division will receive a trophy. The team will the most points in the over-all carnival will receives a trophy also.

Coach Rabb said they expected a crowd of 400 to 500 to participate.

OLD BOOK WEEK
November 9th Through November 15th

- To whet your appetite we'll have a window-full of rare and amusing old pamphlets. Because they are fragile, we can't show them on our regular shelves.
- To drive you crazy, we are putting out a table-full of odd volumes and old sets at silly little prices. If there's anything of great value there, don't tell us about it, it would just make us feel bad.
- And — there'll be a special showing of valuable old books that are too big to fit our shelves. Collector's items, we're reducing them to sell fast.
- What's more—All the books on our 48c shelf will be offered at four—you heard it—four for a dollar. Here's your chance to stock up enough old novels and detective yarns to last till next Fourth of July, at a pip-squeek expenditure!

DR. F. VERZAR

Swiss Doctor To Speak Here

Dr. F. Verzar of Switzerland will be the guest speaker at the combined staff conference at the UNC of Medicine Wednesday, Nov. 13.

The meeting will be held in the School Clinic Auditorium in the Clinic Building of the School of Medicine at 4 p. m.

Dr. Verzar maintains a gernotology laboratory in the Department of Anatomy at the University in Basel, Switzerland.

He is a native of Hungary being born in Budapest in 1886. He has been at the University of Basel since 1930. He has retired from teaching but still maintains a laboratory there where he studies the problems of old age.

Dr. Verzar says of his work, "I enjoy myself with research on ageing, not to incerase lifetime, but to make old age enjoyable and to be able to take part in human activities."

Medical World Opened On TV

North Carolinians are having the extraordinary opportunity of entering the fascinating world of medicine throught a new series currently televised on WUNC-TV, Channel 4, Monday nights at 8 o'clock.

The series, "World of Medicine," was produced by the recently-formed Organization for National Support of Educational TV (ONSET), with the cooperation of 18 professional societies and associations.

"World of Medicine" takes the Channel 4 viewers behind the scenes of medical research and therapy and reveals to him in easy-to-understand terms things the layman should know about anesthesiology, hormones, radioactivity in medical science, rheumatic fever, allergies, and a number of other subjects.

Programs will explain the role of nurses in health care; the part the anesthesiologist plays as a vital member of the operating team; the workings of the human brain. By means of a special lens the camera follows the skilled hands of a dental surgeon as he works in the mouth of a patent, and reveals to the viewer what would normally be seen through the eye under normal vision and with defective vision.

ONSET has produced the "World of Medicine" series through its "patron" grant approach for underwriting programs: the idea, original with the series award-winning producer, Sherman H. Dryer, allows private industries to endow nationally distributed eduactional television programs without influence over program content. The Schering Corporation, patron, of "World of Medicine," is the first company to support this new approach for the development of national educational television.

FBI Says It Will Know Identity Of Cop Killer

Charlotte, Nov. 11 (AP)—The FBI indicated today that it's only a matter of time before it can identify the gunman who killed two North Carolina highway patrolmen almost a week ago.

M. P. Chiles, special agent in charge of the FBI office here, said "certain pieces of evidence have been obtained which will enable us to identify the individual" who stole a 1957 Oldsmobile the patrolmen were trying to stop for speeding when they were slain last Tuesday night.

However, for the time being neitner Chiles nor the FBI laboratories in Washington would say whether the evidence consisted of fingerprints, blood tests, or laundry marks on colthing found in the automobile, which was discovered wrecked in a Chattanooga, Tenn., residential section early Thursday.

The manhunt moved into the Lancaster area of Central Kentucky later Thursday in the wake of other wrecked or abandoned cars. But authorities there ended a farm-to-farm search over the weekend without turning up a tangible lead.

Half a dozen suspects in almost as many states have been held the search for the dark-complexfor questioning, and released, in trolman W. L. Reece near Ellerioned gunman who shot down Pabe, N. C., and then Patrolman J. T. Gates an hour later at Sanford, 50 miles away.

The latest man to be detained, Charles Goad, was arrested last night at Clinton, N. C., 100 miles east of Ellerbe. He was driving an automobile with Kenteuky plates. However, police cleared him of implication when he convinced them he was an itinerant canival worker.

A witness to one of the salyings, Robert Terry, 30, of Norman, N. C., a Negro lay preacher, failed to identify any of the suspects. Terry, who was hitch hiking and was given a ride by the killer, jumped from the car during the first slaying and hid in a ditch.

He described the gunman as dark-complexioned, about 5 feet 11, 150 pounds, and speaking with an Italian accent.

Princetonian To Speak Here

The director of Princeton University's economics research project, Dr.Oskar Morgenstern, will be guest speaker this afternoon at the UNC Seminar in Economics and Business.

Faculty and graduate students in the School of Business Administration will hear Professor Morgenstern speak on "The Present Turn of Economic Theory" at 4 p. m. in the Faculty Seminar Room of Carroll Hall.

Before coming to the United States during the 1930's, he was director of business cycle research at the University of Vienna, Austria

In addition to his teaching and research duties at Princeton, Morgenstern has written several books, including "The Theory of Games and Economic Behavior," co-authored with the late John von Neman, noted developer of electronic computers.

Their "theory of Games" has had applications in mathematics, statistics military strategy, as well as economics.

The Seminars in Economics and Business bring to the campus each month an out-standing business leader or educator to address UNC personnel and their colleagues from nearby universities and colleges.

bill to legalize prostitution, Adams denied that the resolution had been passed by the student assembly. "It met with immediate opposition and was overwhelmingly defeated by the legislators," he declared.

He likewise denied that delegates to the SSL are not chosen in a democratic fashion. He said that delegates are selected by a board upon their knowledge of current affairs, parliamentary procedure and speaking ability.

"Any student may apply for the test . . . and officers are chosen democratically by the delegates," he said.

Inquiry Slated Despite Deaths

Washington, Nov. 11 (AP)—Senate probers said today their investigation of racketeering in New York's rich and rowdy garbage collection industry has followed a bloodstained trail into the haunts of under-world big shots.

Robert F. Kennedy, counsel to the special committee conducting the inquiry, said public hearings will start on schedule tomorrow even though killers' guns have silenced two witnesses, Gangsters Albert Anastasia and Frank Scalise, and seven others have disappeared.

The investigation, Kennedy said, is designed to show what went on when racketeers moved in on New York City's 50-million-dollar-a-year garboge hauling industry.

He said one of 30 witnesses under subpoena for the week of hearings in Vincent J. Sjuillante, whom he described as a New York labor relations consultant active in negotiations between Teamsters Union officials and garbage haulers. He said Squillante was a "self-styled godson of Albert Anastasia . . .He Chairman McClellan (D-Ark) has announced the inquiry stems from charges that a corrupt combine of certain garbage haulers, gangsters and Teamster officials has gained powerful infuence in the industry, using gangster tactics to freeze out competitors.

UNC Professor Gets Top Post

Dr. Joffre L. Coe, director of the Research Laboratories of Anthropology, has been elected chairman of the Southeastern Archaeological Conference.

Chapel Hill has been selected as the site for the 1958 conference, Dr. Coe reported after returning from a two-day gathering at Ocmulgee National Monument at Macon, Ga.

Speakers at the Georgia meeting, in addition to Dr. Coe, included heads of archaeological departments from Harvard University, Louisiana State, and the Universities of Florida, Michigan and Tennessee.

Dr. Coe participated in a symposium on "The De Soto Dateline and Its Meaning in Terms of the Mississippian Cultural Development."

Editor To Speak Here

An education editor will address the School of Education's Fall Convention at 3 p. m. today in Carrol Hall.

The meeting will be in observance of American Education week, Nov. 10-16. Sponsors of the event are Phi Delta Kappa, the educational fraternty here; the UNC unit of the N. C. Education Assocation and the Frank Porter Graham Chapter of the Future Teachers of America.

Dr. Amos Abrams, editor of "North Carolina Education," is the main speaker. He will be introduced by Dr. Donald G. Tarbet, associate professor of education here and president of the University NCEA chapter.

Chancellor's Cabinet Gives Report

By ANN FRYE

The admission of more women students and the value of entrance examinations were included in a detailed report released by the Chancellors Cabinet at UNC.

This report was presented to the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees on November 4 as regards to meeting recommendations made last spring by the trustees.

If more coeds are to be admitted to the University, the report said, it would be necessary to provide additional residence halls and to augment existing physical education facilities.

An additional 200 women students could have been admitted to the university this year if housing facilities had been available, according to the report.

Since 1944, the proportion of women admitted has remained practically stationary. In 1946, 1,100 women students were admitted, comprising 16.17 per cent of the total enrollment.

This year, the enrollment of women students is 1,30, or 17.76 per cent of the total.

The Trustees had requested a statement on whether the proportion of women students at Chapel Hill was to be increased or maintained at the present level.

In a progress report on the results of the entrance examinations program, it was stated in part that the admissions test has already proved its value by providing a more complete factual basis for advice to prospective students to undertake remedial studies in the summer or to strengthen their preparation at other institutions.

The pre-testing admissions program was initiated in 1956 at the University. Under the program, after the first year—1956, students who scored below the 25th percentile on all three tests (algebra, English and the American Council on Education Psychology test) would be excluded.

Of the 1,064 students who registered at the university in 1956, 66 (6.2 per cent) scored below the 25th percentile on all three tests.

By the end of the year, only five of the 66 attained the "C" average required for graduation. Sixteen of the 66 were ineligible to continue because of scholastic difficulties; one had been suspended and ten had withdrawn.

This year 64 students applying for admission to the university failed all three tests. All were turned down.

Included in the report was a table showing that the scores of admitted freshmen were significantly higher in 1956 and 1957 than in the four preceeding years.

Other recommendations covered in the report include the following:

1. Enrollment trends. To determine the number of kind of students to be admitted in future years, the University is analyzing its enrollment data and figures from other institutions in the state and nation. During the last 7 years the total enrollmen dropped sharply from 6,874 in the fall of 1952 and then rose to 7,038 this fall.

2. Married student housing. Plans are now underway for the construction of 208 family units east of Victory Village.

3. Student housing. Dormitories now under construction and authorized will add accomodations for 1,352 men and 155 women.

4. School of Pharmacy building. Plans are progressing on the construction of a new pharmacy building, authorized by the 1957 General Assembly with appropriations totaling 1 1-2 million dollars.

5. Student automobiles. The report included figures on the number of automobiles at the university in 1956 and 1957. It was mentioned that new parking lots, now under construction, will be capable of accomodating over 1,000 cars.

Tar Heels Put On Good Show For TV Viewers

Maybe the Carolina footballers are a group of actors in disguise. If so, they certainly "hammed" it up well Saturady for the folks who decided to sit home and view the Tar Heel's game with South Carolina on television.

The Tar Heels put on a show that would befit Ed Sullivan and they weren't trying to sell cars; they were trying to prove themselves to any doubters who might have seen them against Tennessee. What a job they did!

We have never seen the Carolina defense as alert as it was Saturday. It was that alertnes which turned three South Carolina fumbles into touchdowns, and recovered three more.

The Gamecocks were never in the ball game. North Carolina was as dominant as Tennessee had been the previous week.

Jones Kept 'Em Confused With Shift

Converted end, Jim Jones should get lion's share of the credit. The Greensboro native played his first game since 1955 at center and did quite a jjob. It was Jones who vontrived the "Shifting line" which kept the visitors confused all afternoon.

Once again sophomore quarterback Jack Cummings proved his ability to handle the ball club with finness. Cummings was his usual cunning self with his accurate passing and adept signal-calling.

It would be impossible to go down the list pointing out the outstanding Carolina players for they all played top-notch football: It was the kind of game that the Tatummen are capable of playing—the kind which can beat anybody, including Duke.

Stepping the Gamecock's tremendous running combination of King Dixon and Alex Hawkins had a lot to do with the victory. Neither could make any progres against the Carolina backfield played most of the afternoon in the South Carolina backfield.

The Tar Heels were truly an inspired football team Saturday.

Hathaway Joins Mounting Casualty List

Quarterback Curt Hathaway become another unfortunate member of a very unenvious club Saturday. But the club's membership continues to increase. The injury list now includes Hathaway, Center Ron Koes, guard Jack Lineberger and cakers Joe Quigg and York Larese.

Of these, Koes is the only one who is not definitely out for the season.

Hathaway, incidentally, was playing his finest game of the season until late in the third quarter when he sustained a broken arm. It was a tough blow to the Tar Heels. Hathaway is an experienced quarterback who has been a great asset all season. And of course, it ruined Nelson Lowe's chances of having three years eligibility left after this season.

Tatum had to call on Lowe to have somebody to back up Cummings at the all-important quarterback slot. Lowe should see a good deal of action from here out since he is no longer a holdout. Should anything happen to either of these two sphs, it will leave only holdout Jerry Amos and converted QB Ron Marquette. Marquette, however, is playing some fine ball at halfback for the Tar Heels.

Could Tar Heels Possibly Go To Bowl?

It's just a wild thought (and hope) right now, but what if Clemson should beat Duke Saturday then lose to Wake Forest the next Saturday and Carolina should also knock off the Blue Devils then finish the season with a win over Virginia?

If that were to happen, guess who'd probably represent the Atlantic Coast Conference in the Orange Bowl You're right, the Tar Heels.

Dnke is currently in first place along with ineligible State in the ACC and victory over Clemson would virtually sew up the trip to Miami come New Year's Day. But if Clemson, which is tied with Carolina for second and third place, should upset the Blue Devils, it might cause a complete reshuffle in the ACC bowl plans.

Mathamatics has never been our forte, but the ways we see it the Tar Heels still have a chance for a return trip to sunny Florida.

A few sports briefs.

A news release yesterday stated that 'The Knoxvill New-Sentinel' had good reason to believe that the winer of the Tennessee-Mississippi game Saturday will receive a tenative bid to the Sugar Bowl. It would have to be tenative because the Southeastern Conference does not allow a team to accept a bowl bid until the end of the season.

In our opinion, the best looking man on the field for South Carolina Saturday was halfback Frank Destino. Destino was the only Gamecock who could gain consistently against the Tar Heels.

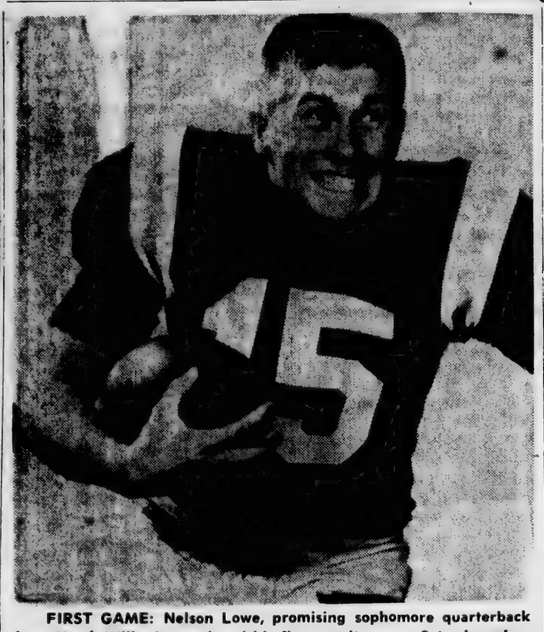
Our vote for the most disappointed team around Saturday would go to N. C. State. The Wolfpack evidently went into its game with William and Mary feeling it would be a breather. But little teams have a way of acquiring inspiration and smoting down the most powerful opponents. Such was the case in Raleigh Saturday.

Gridders Get Week's Rest Before Duke

The Carolina footballers now have a week to recover from its ills. Tatum will probably go easy for a few days and give the boys a rest since there is no game on schedule this weekend. Let's hope that the Tar Heel's can come up with something to stop Duke.

Campus Tag Champions

Tag football teams representing last year's campus champions at Carolina and Virginia battled to a scoreles tie in Kenan Stadium Sunday.



A small crowd saw the UNC Dekes score in the last 25 seconds of play against the Virginia St. A's but a penalty nullified the tally.

1-1 RULE CHANGED

New Basketball Rules In Effect This Season

By ELLIOTT COOPER

The students who attended Thursday nights intra-squad basketball game probably saw the new 1957-58 cage rules for the first time. As the game progressed on the home floor of the national champions, the fans noticed that several minor changes have been made in last years court rules.

The most noticeable change is to the old one-and-one rule. Under the new system, the first six fouls in either half are one-shot fouls. After the sixth foul has been committed, a bonus free throw is awarded on all the following fouls if the first atempt is good. College basketball adopted this rule from the pros who used it successfully last year.

Another rule change involves the double foul. Under the new system no free throws will be awarded, but the players are charged with fouls. The two violaters "jump" for the ball to resume play.

The rule forbidding a player to throw the ball in if he is standing in the extension of the foul lane has been dropped.

If the ball passes over the top of the basket, it is ruled dead under the present rules.

DUNKING IS LEGAL

This year it will be illegal for either an offensive or defensive player to touch the ball or the basket when the ball is in or on a basket. The same rule is inforced when the ball is in the area directly above the rim of the basket.

Dick Christy Grabs ACC Scoring Lead

GREENSBORO, N. C., Nov. 11 (AP)—Dicky Christy, North Carolina State halfback, has finally grabbed the ACC scoring lead from Duke's Wray Carlton.

While Carlton continued at 51 points after failing to score in Duke's 6-6 tie with Navy, Christy fell on a teammates fumble over the goal line Saturday for State's points in a 7-6 loss to William and Mary. He has 54 points.

Carlton, hasn't scored a touchdown in four games. He has scored seven touchdowns and nine extra points. In third place is Virginia fullback Jim Bakhtiar with 43 points on six touchdowns and seven extra points. Christy and Carlton still have two games remaining in which to fatten their totals, and Bakhtiar three. In fourth place is South Carolina halfback King Dixon with 30 points and State's Dick Hunter fifth with 28 points on three touchdowns and 10 extra points.

Bishop Sets Record As Team Cops 3rd Straight

By DAVE WIBLE

Raleigh—Scoffing at a painful leg injury, cross country whiz Wayne Bishop took to the hills and valleys around State College yesterday afternoon and led the Tar Heel harrier squad to its third straight State cross country title and at the same time set a new course record.

Bishop, who injured his leg only last Friday, was not sure he would run in the meet until the last minute. Coach Dale Ranson, giving his OK just before the starting gun, saw his smooth striding charge burn up the 4.1 mile course in 21.28 bettering South Carolina's Billy Latham's old record of 22 flat.

STILL UNDEFEATED

Boostered by Bishop's performance, the Tar Heels poured on the coal and literally ran away with the team title. Carolina finished with 27 points, under half that of second placed State's 56. Wake Forest was third 74, Duke next , with 79, and Pembroke College brought up the rear with 145.

It was a good day for running dispite the cold as the first four finishers were under the old record. Medlin of Wake Forest fought Bishop hard all the way only to finish second best with a 21:34. Carolina's Dave Scurlock was third at 21:52, edging out Duke's Weisinger who came in at 21:59.

FROSH FINISH 3RD

In the State freshman championship meet, Carolina with 59 points came in third behind, State (36) and Duke (51). Wake Forest was third wth 105.

Graham Memorial Director Approved

A permanent director for Graham Memorial was approved by President William Friday and the Executive Committee of the University Board of Trustees during a regular meeting yesterday.

Howard Henry, now director of the student union at the University of Wisconsin, will begin his duties here July 1, 1958, succeeding Tom Lambeth in the GM post.

It was generally conceded that Henry's appointment to the post is the first step toward either construction of a new student union at UNC or major additions to Graham Memorial.

With Henry's apppointment, the GM position will be in the hands of a "professional" man.

The director will become a part of the administration when Henry takes over in 1958. He will be a member of the staff of the Dean of Student Affairs.

Henry has been connected with the student union at the University fo Wisconsin since 1947.

Fred Weaver, Dean of Student Affairs, who recommended Henry to the position, said yesterday that Henry is "well qualified to assume direction of a developing student union program."

In reaffirming Dean Weaver's appraisal, Student Body President Sonny Evans said yesterday, "Howard Henry is noted to be one of the outstanding and most promising individuals in the student union field today."

Evans said, "For three years now the Graham Memorial Board of Directors has sought both to run the present program and to help design a new building."

Dean Weaver made recommendations to Chancellor Aycock on Henry's qualifications. The appointment was made by the Chancellor subject to approval by President Friday and the Executive Committee.

At yesterday's meeting of the Executive Committee, the following report by Chancellor Aycock on personnel changes at UNC was approved:

1) Hans H. Strupp, appointed as

World In Brief

More Flu Deaths

CHARLOTTE, Nov. 12 (AP)—The city and county health department reported today that four Mecklenburg County residents have died within the past two weeks of a combination of influenza and pneumonia.

Dr. M. B. Bethel, city-county health officer, said Mecklenburg County Coroner Dr. W. M. Summerville declared the deaths of three persons definitely were attributable to "influenza-pneumonia." The fourth death was listed after an autopsy as due to the same cause.

Missing

Washington, Nov. 11 (AP)-Senate rackets probers said today six key witnesses sought for questioning about racketeering in New York's rich garbage collection industry have disappeared.

Robert F. Kennedy, counsel to the special rackets investigating committee, said the hearings will go on as scheduled tomorrow, despite failure of his agents to locate the missing witnesses.

Several of the missing, Kennedy said, "have long criminal records."

Two Meetings

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12. (AP)—White House meetings—one small and the other large—dug today into the problems of financing America's space age defenses.

President Eisenhower sought from these two groups of advisers advice on what to put into the budget he will submit to Congress when it reconvenes in January.

He talked first with Vice President Nixon, Secretary of State Dulles, Secretary of the Treasury Anderson and Budget Director Percival Brundage.

This meeting was billed in advance as devoted to the question of foreign aid, a form of expenditure Eisenhower has repeatedly called one of the most effective ways to defend America.

The other meeting was an extraordinarily expanded gathering of the National Security Council —62 persons rather than the basic five who form the nucleus of this top policy making group.

Adlai Will Consult

WASHINGTON, Nov. 12 (AP) —The White House corrected itself today and announced Adlai E. Stevenson will consult with the Administration on the program this country will lay before the NATO meeting in Paris next month.

Presidental Press Secretary James C. Hagerty said it is still true, however, as he announced earlier, that the 1952 and 1956 Democratic presidental nominee has declined to take a part in formulating U. S. policy.

Warns Reds

PARIS, Nov. 12 (AP)—The boss of the U S. Strategic Air Command warned the Soviet Union today his bombers around the world are loaded with nuclear weapons and ready to strike swiftly in case of attack.

Gen. Thomas Power told a news conference at SAC mounted an alert Oct. 1, that there always are some of the great bombers in the air and they are "not carrying swords or bows and arrows."

The general struck at the recent claim of Soviet Communist chief Nikita Khrushchev that the intercontinental Ballistic Missile (ICBM) had made warplanes obsolete.

Lemay Flies

BUENOS AIRES, Nov. 12 (AP)—Gen. Curtis Lemany showed off the long reach of the U. S. Air Force today by flying a big jet stratotanker 6,350 miles in 13 hours without stopping or refueling.

The hop from Westover (Mass.) Air Force Base to Buenos Aires' Ezica Field set a new mark in distance and speed for officially recorded nonstop, nonrefueling jet flight.

GAME TICKETS

Students who wish to attend the Carolina-Duke football game in Durham on Nov. 16 may obtain them at half price if they apply this week at the Athletic Office in Woollen Gymnasium. Three thousand student tickets are available at this price, and application for this limited number should be made prior to noon on Saturday, Nov. 9.

A student may purchase a date ticket at the full admission price.

UP Retains Student Legislature Majority

Recall Petitions Turned In; Election Is Set

Nov. 26 Is Vote Date For Editor

Petitions demanding a recall election for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel were turned over to Student Body President Sonny Evans yesterday.

Evans immediately directed Elections Board Chairman Art Sobel to prepare for the recall vote, which was tentatively set for Tuesday, November 26.

However, there was still one uncertainly surrounding the possible ouster of current Editor Neil Bass from the top newspaper post:

Thus far, no one has announced his candidacy to oppose Bass for the job, and Barry Winston, believed to be the most likely for the race, said several days ago he would not be a candidate.

Contacted yesterday, however, Winston said he "would not care to comment until the recall election is officially called for."

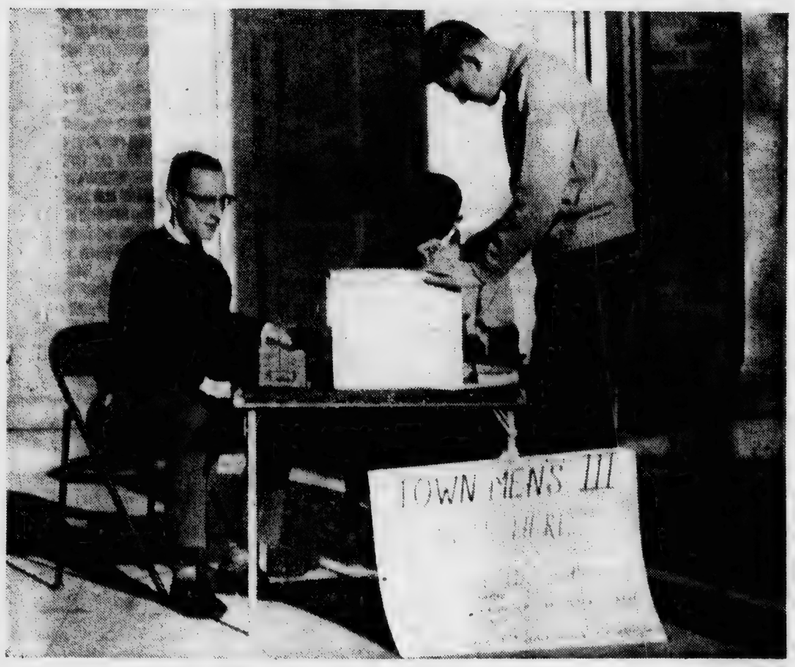
The election was officially called for about 5 p. m. Tuesday after Attorney General Sonny Hallford had checked and counted names on the petitions .They then were turned over to Evans.

The Student Body President said 1,097 "legally certified names" appeared on the numerous petitions.

"I directed the elections board to honor the petition of the students and have instructed its chairman, as specified in Section I, Article A, of the Student Constitution, to conduct a recall vote for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel," Evans said.

Sobel, who will conduct the vote if a candidate announces to oppose Bass, said the deadline for candidates to file petitions for the election is midnight, November 14.

Threat of a recall came about 12 days ago when Wally Kuralt, sophomore from Charlotte, began circulating petitions to initiate a re-election for editorship of the campus newspaper.



The petitions charged that Bass was "incompetent" for the job as editor of the Daily Tar Heel, and called for the revote for which requirements were met Tuesday.

While Kuralt charged Bass with "incompetence," many Bass foes on campus based their dislike for the editor on his recent editorial policies concerning football coach Jim Tatum and handling of a flu epidemic here.

Robber Is Asked To Return Helmet

The person who stole a football helmet from a display in front of Carr Dormitory Homecoming Weekend has been requested to return the same to the dormitory.

Spokesmen there pointed out that residents of Carr Dormitory paid a $5 deposit for the helmet and are, consequently, responsible for its return to the Athletic Association.

Evans Hits State Newspapers For 'Misreporting' SSL Acts

The president of the student body at the University of North Carolina today lashed out at the state's newspapers for what he termed "misreporting, misstatements and mis-interpretation" of the widely-publicized State Student Legislature's bills to legalize inter-racial marriages and prostitution.

In a statement released this afternoon, Student Body President Sonny Evans called the "sensationalism" surrounding the mock legislature's meeting "the product of newspaper irresponsibility."

"When a newspaper, such as the Raleigh News and Observer, does not report the truth from an assembly such as this," he said, "then we students are virtually powerless."

He said the State Student Legislature was a group of which the people of the state could well be proud.

Evans' statement closely followed criticism from both state and campus leaders. Rep. Harold D. Cooley (D-NC) told the student legislators Saturday that their approval of the inter-racial marriage bill had "shocked the sensibilities of our people."

And Harry Braxton, chairman of one of UNC's two campus political parties, yesterday said the UNC delegates had merely expressed their "own personal opinions" but were "publicized across the state as giving the opinions of the student body as a whole."

Evans' major criticism centered around newspaper reports of a bill to legalize prostitution. "Contrary to the newspaper account, the legalized prostitution bill failed by an overwhelming majority," he said.

He described the inter-racial marriage bill as an effort "not either to condemn or condone, but to protect the civil liberties of the individual."

"It is a shame," he said, "that much of the good done by the students who conducted themselves responsibly has been lost in the shuffle of an unjustified controversy."

He pointed out that in other actions, the assembly had passed a resolution condemning Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas for his "flaunting of the court order" and also one denying "the unwise censorship rights" of county sheriffs.

"There is nothing to be ashamed of when students conduct themselves sensibly and with conviction," he said.

Legislation Termed Aim Of Union Investigation

By DOUGLAS EISELE

The nation's foremost counsel in governmental investigations said here last night that "new Becks and Hoffas" will return to the labor scene unless solutions are found to "the defects in law that permitted their operations."

Chief Counsel Robert F. Kennedy of a special Senate committee probing union activities said that Congressional action in solving these defects is the aim of current investigation.

"The success or failure of this committee lies in our ability to arrive at solutions for problems that obviously exist, to develop the facts so that Congress will act," he said.

Kennedy, speaking to an overflow crowd at Memorial Hall, listed what he called seven areas of union activities for which there is "considerable agitation" for some sort of federal action:

1. Misuse of pension and welfare funds.
2. Misuse of union funds.
3. Trusteeship.
4. Democratic process — secret ballot.
5. Terriorism—violence.
6. Use of union money for political purposes.
7. Organization picketing.

While the Massachusetts Democrat spoke primarily of misconduct within labor unions, he noted that "the role of management as well as labor also deserves close scrutiny and study."

"The committee is aware that there is often a very narrow line between what is extortion and what is a bribe," Kennedy remarked, adding that some employers prefer making payoffs to union officials rather than increasing workers' salaries.

Kennedy said that during its 10 months of existence, the Senate Select Committee on Improper Activities in the Labor or Management Field has received over 65,000 letters of complaint of improper activities in labor-management relations.

Student Party Gains, UP Lead Cut To 27-23

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

In yesterday's elections the Student Party gained two seats in the Student Legislature to give them 23 to the University Party's 27 seats.

In Dorm Men's I Erwin Fuller (SP incumbent) got the year seat, and Charlie Gray (UP) got the six months seat.

In Dorm Men's II, the SP got three seats for one year; Roger Foushee, Denton Lotz (incumbent) and Al Walters (incumbent) were the winners.

In Dorm Men's III, Tom Kearns (SP) and Dennis Rinzler (SP incumbent) each captured one year seats.

In Dorm Men's IV, Ralph Cummings (SP) won a one year seat.

In Town Men's I, UP members Dave Biren, Graham Claytor (incumbent), Blake LaMar, Charlie Pittman, Tim Stevens, and Bob Turner won one year seats.

In Town Men's II, Craven Brewer (UP) won a one year seat.

In Town Women's District, Misses Linda Chappell (UP) and Jeannie M. Meador (SP) each won one year seats.

In Town Men's III, Neal Boden (UP), Jerry Oppenheimer (UP incumbent) and Jim Pittman (SP) won one-year seats. In that district Harry Gillis (SP), Jerry Blumenthal (UP) and Lee Wardrup (UP) won six months seats.

In Town Men's IV, Fred Harris (UP) won a one year seat.

In Dorm Women's District, these students captured one year seats: Misses Lucy Forsyth (UP incumbent), Diane Johnson (UP), and Paddy Wall (SP incumbent).

In the same district Connie Bernstein (SP), Ann Harvey (UP) and Martha Wilkinson (UP) captured six months seats.

In Dorm Men's V, John Brooks (SP) and Gary Greer (SP) won one-year seats. Dick Robinson (UP) won a six-months seat in that district (unofficial).

"We are very pleased with the election, especially the class offices," said Jerry Jones, vice-chairman of the UP, after the election.

He went on to say, "We feel very satisfied with the confidence the students placed in the University Party with respect to the legislative elections."

"It is significant that the Student Party picked up three seats in the Student Legislature since the legislative program from both parties in the coming session promises to be vital in the formation and molding of policy for years to come," commented Student Body President Sonny Evans (SP).

Student Party Floorleader Tom Long, whose term expired with this election, did not run for re-election.

He commented, "I did not run because I knew we had several candidates who were capable in the district, and I thought they should get in the experience.

Long is chiefly remembered for the controversial bill he introduced censuring the state park attendant who forbade a Negro, a UNC student, to enter the park with the Cosmopolitan Club.

Recently he introduced a bill to set up a committee to study the policies of other schools' papers.

The SP candidate from Town men's IV, G .C. Pridgen, and John Witty (SP) Town Men's I, were disqualified because they failed to turn in expense accounts.

UP Takes Lead In Class Offices

The University Party swept victoriously through all junior class offices and nabbed four of five sophomore class posts in yesterday's campus-wide election.

The Student Party took three of five freshman class executive positions.

In what was perhaps the day's closest race, the UP's Hamp Lefler won the junior class presidency over the SP's Danny Lotz by seven votes -- 383-376.

Other junior class officials named yesterday are:

Vice president: Dick Frasier over Leon Holt; secretary: Miss Lila Scott over Miss Connie Bernstein; treasurer: Chuck Cashman over Charles Caley; social chairman: Miss Sarah Arnold over Miss Carolyn Donnelly.

Jack Cummings (UP) captured the sophomore class presidency over Harold O'Tuel of the Student Party.

Other sophomore class officers are:

Vice president: Jim Eilliams (UP) over Caleb White (SP); secretary: Miss Ann Morgan (SP) over Larry Carter; treasurer: Charles Pittman (UP) over Norm Smith (SP); social chairman: Miss Nancy Royster (UP), who ran unopposed.

Russ Hollers of the University Party won the freshman class presidency over Lou Crowder of the Student Party slate.

Other freshman class officers named are:

Vice president: Charles Graham (SP) over Tom Evins (UP); secretary: David Grigg (UP) over Bill Lamm (SP) treasurer: Joe Mendelsohn (SP) over Woody Fordham (UP); social chairman: Miss Polly Wooten (SP) over Miss Mary Frances Connell.

STUDENT JUDICIARY

In races for student judiciary posts, the following candidates were elected winners:

Women's Honor Council: Misses Paddy Wall, Kay Kloffer, Lillian Shannonhouse and Nancy Adams.

Student Council: (Juniors) Jim Long and John Owens; (Sophomores) Everette James.

All election returns are accurate but unofficial. The Elections Board and Chairman Art Sobel will confirm elected positions in tomorrow's Daily Tar Heel.

Returns may be counted unofficial until confirmed by Chairman Sobel and the Elections Board.

Details Of Di-Phi Debate Given; Bass Defends Staff, Says There's Room For Improvement

By DAVIS YOUNG

On Monday night the Dialectic Senate and the Philanthropic Literary Society senators and representatives defeated a bill calling for the recall of Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass. However, the senators and guests in the hall passed the evening's legislation by a vote of 21-6.

The bill consisted of five parts including accusations that Bass has shown evidence of incompetancy, made libelous statements, ignored available information on the Asian Flu situation, ignored invitations of the Chancellor and failed to organize his staff in an efficient manner.

The bill was introduced by Don Gray of the Phi, who elaborated on several points by stating that Dr. Hedgepeth of the infirmary had attempted to secure vaccine as early as July 30; insinuated that libel was present in some of Editor Bass' remarks concerning Jim Tatum and accused Bass of passing up two opportunities to meet with Chancellor Aycock.

Editor Bass rose in his own defense denying Gray's charges by stating that he had failed to attend the meetings with Aycock due to illness and saying that the paper had as much right as anyone to question Jim Tatum. He felt that the main issue of the recall was freedom of the press, not incompetancy.

Peebly Barrow, Daily Tar Heel night editor, spoke on behalf of Bass, stating that his courage and convictions compared with those of the previous eight editors with whom he had been acquainted. He continued: "The issue is not the person, but the principle of editorial freedom of expression, within of course, the limits of libel and obscenity.

"To me it is a logical absurdity to expect an individual editor's opinion to agree with that of over six thousand students, especially in an atmosphere like Carolina's where freedom of opinion is so highly prized.

"Let's use the right to referendum and the right to recall as they were intended to be used—as checks against gross malfeasance, failure to perform the office and its duties, violation of trust, etc."

Frank Crowther, former candidate for the Daily Tar Heel editorship, rose to challenge Bass. He stated that the signatures on the petitions for the recall had now been secured and that the recall would definitely go through. His main objection to the present editor was his inability to take criticism.

Barry Winston, who has been mentioned prominently as a possible candidate for the editorship in the recall election, accused Bass of not checking thoroughly into the facts concerning the recent epidemic on campus and the flu vaccine situation.

He reiterated what Gray had said earlier, concerning Carolina's being the first institution of higher learning in the South to place an order for the vaccine. He failed to see where this showed a laxity on the part of the infirmary staff.

Carly Keller, a guest in the Phi Hall, assumed the rostrum to ask Bass several questions. Keller asked him who was responsible for the opinions appearing periodically in the column entitled Ramseses XXI. Bass declined to devulge a "professional secret."

In response to a question concerning Bass's opinion as to who would be his successor as editor were the recall successful, Bass declared that both Crowther and Winston had been mentioned.

In response to Keller's question concerning the definition of freedom of the press, Bass said: "It it the right to speak freely on any and all pertinent issues without fear, intimidation or censorship." Keller left the podium by asking Bass just how long he anticipated it would take him to get the newspaper and staff in shape.

Editor Bass had this to say following the meeting in his office yesterday afternoon: "The staff currently consists of more than 50 people who are working efficiently and conscientiously. There is always room for improvement, but the present staff is the largest —to my knowledge—that has worked on The Daily Tar Heel in my four years' experience with the paper. There is more student writing than ever, which, I feel, is an extremely good indication.

"I reitterate my sentiments that the important decision rendered at Monday night's meeting was the Di-Phi defeat of the bill endorsing the recall. The vote of the visitors was not indicative nor fair in that the meeting was packed with the minority proponents of the recall—visitors with a political purpose."

Tarnation Payment Wise, But Also A Warning...

Student Body President Sonny Evans' official approval of the legislature-passed bill to eradicate debts incurred by the now defunct Tarnation humor magazine was an admirable gesture.

President Evans delayed signing the bill so that he might "meet with both parties and everyone who was concerned to get the facts."

After weighing the facts, Evans decided that payment of Tarnation's debts was morally justified, since creation of a new humor magazine was, in effect, reincarnation of the defunct magazine.

Evans has enhanced the prestige of student government through official eradication of this lingering debt. And the Student Legislature has demonstrated definite responsibility in its instigation of legislation to eradicate the debt.

It was pointed out by Evans that student government was not legally bound to defray Tarnation's debts. This is correct. And student government subsidiaries should take heed in allocating their budgets. Organizations under student government's jurisdiction may be prosecuted for overspending their budgets and going in the red, through provisions of a law passed by the Student Legislature last year.

Certainly the responsibility of student government has been emphasized by payment of Tarnation's debts. And student lawmakers and President Evans have acted wisely.

But other student government organizations should realize that student government was not legally bound to defray Tarnation's debt. And they should allocate their budgets wisely and carefully.

Pen-Knife Sharpening & Wholesale Annihilation

The current international armaments build-up is ominously analogous to mobilization directly preceding World War I.

The armed camps in 1914 — Austria, Serbia, Russia, Germany and others — could definitely be compared to Syria, Turkey, the United States and Russia in 1957.

Nations are madly arming and spearheading drives for armament supremacy. Syria and Turkey both have armament chips on their shoulders and are armed to the teeth. And Russia, just as it backed Serbia in 1914, is backing Syria in 1957. The United States is, and should be, supporting Turkey to the hilt.

The Soviet Union apparently has the edge in this international rush for the sharpest pen-knife. It has reported noticeable progress in the intercontinental ballistics missile race and has launched Sputnik I and Muttnik II.

The United States, on the other hand, announced yesterday in an Associated Press release:

"The United States Navy has told its top officers the Soviet Union would be almost defenseless in a nuclear war against the navy's new missile, the Polaris."

The report, while it must offer some consolation to the American public, reeked with "sea-based" navy propaganda. It emphasized, primarily, and reaffirmed our belief that inter-armed forces bickering is considerably hampering and shackling America's defense program.

International armament races are not conductive to world peace and peaceful relations between nations. We are becoming at a dangerously rapid rate a schizophrenic world of armed camps. Each nation stands with a nuclear chip on its shoulder and waits for another nation to cross the schism which separates and impedes world understanding.

At the same time, the Soviet Union and its atheistic communism is creeping over the world almost parasitically.

Shades of World War I.

Let us hope, for the good of mankind and for the sake of mankind's preservation, that the wholesale annihilation which would ensue World War III may be prevented.

Armed camps and shoulder chips are no solution.

At the same time, complacency and sitting back on our haunches while Russia arms to the teeth is not a solution, rather an insurance of annihilation.

Shades of World War I — in the Middle East, in Russia and in the United States.

Prostitution Is Double-Edged

State newspapers so completely misconstrued the events which transpired at the State Student Legislature in Raleigh that they have seriously jeopardized the prestige of future assemblies.

State papers — those that reported passage of the legalized prostitution, which was defeated; and that reported the intermarriage resolution as an endorsement of intermarriage, while it actually only urged that laws prohibiting intermarriage be repealed — definitely owe the state student solons a large economy-sized apology.

We should like to see some journalistic retractions and corrections immediately — if not sooner.

Christmas Gifts, Sex To Sex And Vice Versa

Gail Godwin

With Christmas only 45 days away, one should be thinking about what one is going to give to various members of his immediate life.

It seems that each year, when Christmas rolls around, there are about ten million new- fangled things on the market to give people for Christmas.

Back when I was young, there were only a very few things that boys could give to girls and girls could give to boys. The proper-gifts-for-boys list went something like this: cufflinks, wallets, fountain pens, and linen handerchiefs. The acceptable-gifts-for-young ladies list was as follows: candy and flowers, period.

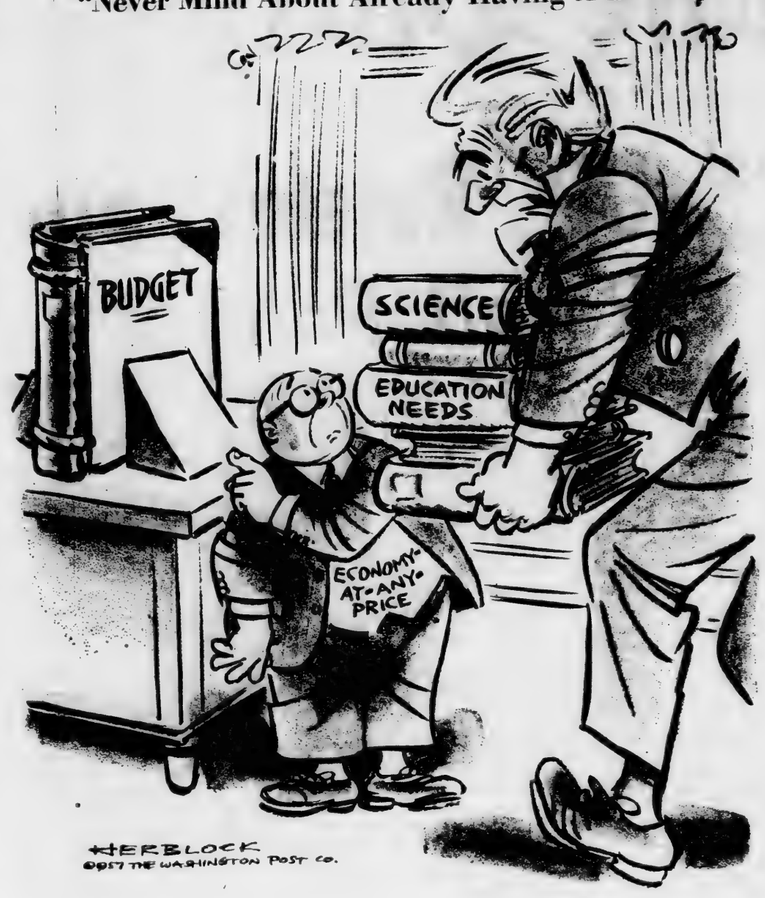
By the time I got to high school, couples were giving each other cashmere sweaters for Chirstmas. I knew one girl that was enterprising. She gave one cashmere sweaters and received seven. Each time she wore the pink, she would speak lovingly of Robert, and the yellow brought thoughts of Ted, and so on. I could never figure out how she managed this mass reception of cashmere sweaters.

In last year's PLAYBOY, suggested gifts from bachelor to his female companion ran from My Sin perfume to black velvet toreador pants. In turn, the Tigress of his life showered him with smoking jacket, tobacco pouches, after-shave lotion, and affection.

The permitted-for college-boys-to-give-to-college-girls-and-vice-versa list runs somewhere between these two . . . that is, the good old days list and the day of the modern bachelor list.

The best thing to do if you are a campus man and want to present your campus queen with the best is to go by the type of queen she is.

If she is the intellectual type, but doesn't yet know what beasts men really are, give her a copy of Nobel Prizewinner Albert Camus' The Fall. This is a real bargain. The book runs about $3, and after she reads it you will never be bothered with her again.



If she is a feminine bundle of featherbrains and fun, give her a nice furry muff made out of imported Muttnik fur. This will keep her little hands warm when you can't.

Other suggestions for Her, if she is not in the two major categories above: A year's supply of Alka-Seltzer for all the headaches you will cause her, a one-way ticket to Beirut, a bottle of "Heaven Sent" perfume if she is your little angel, an electric portable typewriter if you are rich and she is far enough away to be able to write letters to you on it, or a bunch of frozen violets preserved carefully by you from last April if she is the sentimental type.

The New-Approved-gifts-that-girls-give to boys is slightly wider and more complicated since boys are complicated creatures.

Tune in next time, coeds, to learn what other coeds will be giving their Christmas buddies this year.

"Never Mind About Already Having A Book",

FROM THE DAILY KANSAN:

The Bitter Second Rate Pill: America's Technological Place

Regardless of which political party is at fault, there was a lot of hard cold fact and plain truth in what U. S. Senator Mike Monroney said to campus Young Democrat club members Wednesday night.

The senator said the United States is now "the second-best" world power, and Sputnik I and II tend to lend a lot of authority to his words. The senator was right again when he called slashing the defense budget to the extent that our nation winds up with a second rate defense, "the poorest kind of economy."

The idea of being second best is a bitter pill for Americans to swallow. And a lot of Americans will simply refuse to believe it.

Most Americans have a blind faith in the ability of our scientists and in native ingenuity and good old American know-how. They go blithely along believing we have what we have not.

If the United States was capable of putting a satellite into an orbit she would surely have done so by this time. With more than a third of the world's countries sitting of the fence waiting to decide which way to jump, east or west, it simply isn't logical to think the United States would sit with her hands in her pockets while Russia wins the greatest victory of the cold war if she could do anything about it.

Americans might as well face it, the United States is not immune to defeat. The fact that we've never been beaten doesn't mean we can't be beaten, and our past record doesn't scare the Soviets at all.

It would be a pretty futile gesture to try to stop a Russian ICBM with a weapon still on the drawing boards. A nuclear war would be won or lost on the basis of what we had in the way of actual operational weapons when it started, not what we could have in six months or a year.

It doesn't make any difference who goofed, the important thing is to do something to correct the mistake, and quick.

The possibility that the United States is living on borrowed time is greater than any of us care to admit. The way things look right now, if Russia has the ICBM in sufficient quantity and she decides to punch that fateful button, we've had it.

However, even if the Russians have mass produced the ICBM the chances of their pressing the button are remote. Something could conceiveably go wrong. Russia's big hope all along has been to force the west into an arms scramble that will cause our economy to collapse.

The United States and the rest of the western world is between a rock and a hard place. If we don't stay ahead of, or at least keep pace with, Russian arms developments we place ourselves in the position being liable to almost overnight annihilation.

If we plan unwisely and place too great a strain on our economy in the process of winning an arms race we are in an equally bad position.

Still, the threat imposed by the Russians having superior weapons cannot be ignored. It is the more immediate of the two. The United States has no choice but to exert all possible effort to overcome Russia's apparent lead in missile and scientific achievements.

Apparently the first step toward recovering our lost ground is in the process of being made. President Eisenhower Thursday night, in a national television-radio broadcast, announced a revamping of the nation's scientific defense setup.

ERIC THE RED:

Gen. Chowhound & Green Arms..

Harry Kirschner

Although the U. S. Air Force has been shown in these last few weeks to be somewhat behind in space superiority, it is nevertheless still attempting to keep the faith of the "let's-go-clobber-'em-ists."

Last week reports came in from Texas about 200 foot wide, egg-shaped, glowing objects found parked in the middle of highways. The things had used an unknown power to suspend the action of combustion engines when automobiles attempted to approach them. Because a sheriff, his deputy and two highway patrolmen made eye witness reports the Air Force decided that it would launch a "preliminary investigation."

One of my private sources of information, Airman 3/C Ivan Illytch Techebyshreff, has relayed to me how the preliminary investigation fared.

As soon as reports of the mysterious objects came in the Air Force sent a team out to the site in a heavy tank. A giant, glowing saucer-like object was sighted squatting in the middle of Texas Highway 13. The tank got to only 300 yards of the thing before its engine stalled. The controls of the 90 milimeter cannon the tank mounts seemed to be jammed, along with all the other mechanical apparatus within the tank.

The saucer was seen to rise 50 feet off the ground. Then it proceeded to make flashing figure eights over the tank. Air Force General Oswald D. Chowhound, the famous chairborne ace who was spearheading the investigation, picked up a megaphone and shouted from the tank's turret at the saucer. "This is General Chowhound of the United States Air Force speaking. Land your aircraft at once and identify yourselves," he commanded.

At the General's words the saucer shot up to an altitude of approximately 500 feet and began skyriting methodically in luminous smoke. "Oh, go jump in the lake," and 'Roger dodger,' you old codger, I'm a General too," appeared in gigantic letters across the sky. The saucer then made several mock bombing dives at the tank, the ominous sound, "Bra-a-a-a-ck" being clearly audible after each one.

At this, Chowhound, visibly aroused, jumped from the tank and started running around in circles, waving his fists. "Hey you up there," he shouted, "Come down here at once. On the double!"

The saucer dropped straight down to a height of four feet over the General's head. When Chowhound tried to make a jump to grab it the saucer sprang up to 12 feet. Chowhound began to jump up and down on the ground and swear. The saucer wagged its "wings" at him reprovingly. Then it dropped down to an altitude of one foot, just out of Chowhound's reach. The General tried to go up to it, but it scooted away ahead of him. He ran after it, and the saucer began going around in a wide circle at a speed of 11 miles an hour. Chowhound, beginning to pant, ran around after it. The saucer slowed down for a moment, seemingly to allow Chowhound to catch up, and then zipped around behind him and bumped him in the rear.

Chowhound was quite incensed by this time, and uttered some remarks which George Washington chastised the officers of his army for using. Then Chowhound screamed, "You no good ——— ———, land and allow your aircraft to be entered!"

The saucer shot up to 500 feet and wrote, "Say, please." Then dropped down to the ground.

"PLEASE!!" The General screamed.

A door in the side of the saucer swung open. Chowhound ran up to it. Two green arms shot out and pulled him inside. The door snapped shut, and the saucer flashed away into the night at an unestimated speed.

Dutifully following its security regulations, the Air Force the following day told the press that it did not take reports of mysterious flying objects too seriously. Of the numerous reports of the night before, it was only planning to look into three of them.

Carnival Plans Moving Ahead

Coach Rabb announced plans today for the Co-Rec Carnival, which is sponsored and planned annually by the Athletic Intramural Department.

This year's carnival will be held Thursday night, November 14, at 6:45 in Woollen Gym.

Coach Rabb said that those participating in the carnival games will be paired off in couples and placed in teams of six boys and six girls.

Some of the events in which some of the couples will participate are dart throwing, funnel volley, golf putt and the baseball pitch.

Other couples will be placed in the table tennis competition, and there will be archery, badminton, box hockey for the boys and tether ball for the girls.

Four couples will take part in relays. And following these events, there will be a cake walk with free cakes. A turkey will be presented to the winner fo the grand prize.

Talent Tryouts This Afternoon

Tryouts for the "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent" chorus will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Rendevouz Room of Graham Memorial.

The "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent," a show of student talent, will be held on Tuesday night, Nov. 26, the night before Thanksgiving vacations start, in Memorial Hall at 8 p. m.

The show, sponsored jointly by the GMAB and the Y will feature many of the acts from the show last year. "Pee-Wee' Batten, last year's winner, will be a star attraction of the show.

The male chorus on campus will appear in the show, however the chorus for which tryouts are now being held will be used quite a few times during the show in feature numebrs and as background for solo, duet and group numbers.

Today's hand illustrates an end-play along with an exercise in counting and inference. South is able to bring home his game contract in notrump by subjecting West to an end-play.

The bidding:

NORTH	EAST	SOUTH	WEST
Pass	Pass	1 NT	2 S
3 H	Pass	3 NT	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opeing lead: King of clubs.

Holding 16 points in high cards, South makes an opening bid of one no trump. West shrewdly inserts a bid of two spades in an effort to desript the communication of the opposition. North must now make some show of strength, since he can see that there is an excellent chance of making a game after Sonth's opening one no trump bid. He decides on a bid of three hearts. Since South has spades well-stopped and since his support for partner's hearts leaves sometime to be desired, he bids three notrump in preference to four hearts. This is the final contract.

West's usual opening lead would be either the queen or ten of spades. In this case, however, West suspects from the bidding that South holds both of the outstanding spade honors, and so he chooses to make the unusual opening lead of the king of clubs rather than take the chance of giving South a free spade trick.

No spade honors are in the dummy when it comes down, and so West decides to try to avoid leading spades at all. He also decides against continuing clubs when East plays the three of clubs on the first trick. If East had had the queen of clubs, East would have played a club higher than the three (his lowest one) as a signal to encourage West to continue the suit.

West thus decides that it is safest to shift to a diamond on the second trick; either a spade or club lead would give South a trick. Declarer must be careful to take the diamond in his hand with the ace, since both high diamonds on the board will be needed later for entries.

Declarer's first move is to lead out the ace and queen of hearts, when both defenders follow to the second round of hearts, South can be sure of five tricks in hearts and at least three in diamonds. If diamonds don't split three-three, South will have to get his ninth trick from one of the black suits.

South leads a low diamonds to the queen and then leads the king of hearts, throwing a spade from his hand. Both defenders play a heart. Now is the time for declarer to stop for a while and count West's hand. It is known that West originally held three hearts. From the bidding, West should have at least five spades including the ace. West's opening lead of the king of clubs marked him with the ace of clubs and probably at least one other club. All this means that West started with at most three diamonds, and probably only two.

Having made a count of West's hand, declarer figures out a line of play which will make his contract even though the diamonds split two-four. Instead of playing out his last two hearts immediately, he leads a low spade from the board at trick seven and plays the jack from his hand.

West takes the trick with his queen, but he is now end-played. He has no more hearts or diamonds left with which to make a safe exit. Therefore he must lead one of the black suits, and no matter which suit he leads he will set up a trick in South's hand.

Thus West must eventually put South in his hand with either the king of spades or the queen of clubs. As soon as this happens, South leads his last diamond to the king on the board and then cashes his two good hearts to make his contract. Notice that South had to wait until the very end to cash all of his hearts; had he cashed them all the first time he was on the board, he would have squeezed himself in his own hand so badly that the end-play would no longer be a sure-fire thing.

South's line of play obviously would also have worked had West held three diamonds instead of two. For, in such a case, West can lead his third diamond when he gets in with the queen of spades, but then declarer get his ninth trick from the fourth diamond on the board. In no case can West take more than four tricks with his hand.

Lead Characters Listed For Playmakers Show

The three leading roles in "Teahouse of the August Moon," which opens in Memorial Hall, Friday, November 15, at 8:30 p. m., are taken by William Smith, Jot Dillard and Sodsai Vanij-Vadhana.

Smith, of Durham, plays Sakini, whose "logic" brings a teahouse to the people of Tobiki when Capt. Fisby had actually intended a school house to be built.

Fisby is played by Dillard, Greer, S. C.

Miss Vanij-Vadhana, Bangkok, Thailand, will assume the role of Lotus Blossom, a Geisha Girl. She is the romantic element in the play and furnishes many delightful moments while attempting to perform her functions as a Geisha Girl against the wishes of Fisby.

"Teahouse" was originally produced on Broadway in 1953 and was a winner of the New York Critics' Circle Award and the Pulitzer Prize.

Though the play's purpose seems to be primarily comedy and entertainment, it strikes a serious chord in its quest for an understanding of

Two members of the cast have been seen in a previous Playmaker production this year.

Ken Callendar, Greensboro, played Beaudricourt in "The Lark," but will be seen as Col. Purdy in "Teahouse."

James Potter appears as Sgt. Gregovitch, assistant to Purdy. He was seen in "The Lark" as the father of St. Joan.

Tickets are now on sale at 214 Abernethy Hall and Ledbetter-Pickard. All seats are reserved at $1.50.

Kennedy Says

He elaborated on individual cases of theft of union funds, bribery, personal gain from union money investment and numerous other improper acts brought out by the committee investigation.

Kennedy noted that such labor leaders as George Meany have advocated federal controls over the millions of dollars in pension and welfare funds, which have been misused by officials in the nation's leading unions.

"Such misappropriation is not a federal crime and the federal government has been powerless to take any action," Kennedy said.

"The unhappy result has been that these people are still freed and have been suspended from their jobs only recently," he added.

He cited a particular case where Dave Beck of the Teamsters union "took, not borrowed, $370,000" in union funds, and defects in the law prevented any legal action against him.

"Unfortunately, here also, as the law is now written, it is not a federal crime to misappropriate or to steal funds from a labor union," Kennedy said.

He noted that many of the other problems which the Senate committee has uncovered may be traced "directly to lack of democratic processes within a union."

"Autocratic control is an invitation to corruption, a fact too well established to be ignored," he added.

Kennedy said one of the more important areas of concern lies in organizational picketing—the picketing of a company to force it to sign with a union when none of its employes has indicated a desire to do so.

"It is a controversial area" which many feel requires close study and attention by the federal government," Kennedy said.

Kennedy's address here was sponsored by the Law Student Association as the second in a series of Heck Lectures slated on the university campus.

U.S. War Dead Honored By AFROTC Cadets

AFROTC Veterans Day retreat ceremony honored the war dead Monday at 4:30 p.m. on the lawn between South Building and the Wilson Library.

Fred H. Weaver, dean of student affairs, addressed the formation of the AFROTC Cadet Group and about 150 observers.

"This day is dedicated to peace," he said. "In the hundreds of observances across the land, surely there will be none where reference is not made tot he latest revolution which has extended the reach of knowledge and technology into new realms of space and the possibility for construction or destruction.

"The meaning of this is as yet unknown, but we should be unworthy to study under the motto of 'Light and Liberty' if we failed to perceive the compelling force that it is for redoubled effort in the study of science and technology and at the same time the new necessity it poses for success in the search for peace."

Dean Weaver concluded, "Let us then sincerely honor those who have secured to the condition necesary for pursuit of light and liberty. Let us remember that we are students who would be scholars before we would be bearer of arms. Also, that it is for us especially, to read clearly the meaning of history and of events, and to see in these their constructive aspect and to find the way to peace."

Sam McGill, assistant dean of affairs, gave the invocation. In his prayer, he gave thanks for those who fought and lost their lives for peace. He also asked for guidance of world leaders to solve conflicts by peaceful means.

After Dean Weaver spoke, there was a moment of silence. Only the faint rustling of autumn leaves was heard.

Then the cadets were called to attention. A bugler stepped toward the Stars and Stripes. "Taps" was played. It was repeated by a second bugler in the background.

Retreat was then sounded by the bugler. "Present arms!" was the command and simultaneously the cadets saluted the flag.

The AFROTC Band played "The Star Spangled Banner." Then Old Glory was slowly lowered. Three cadets took charge of folding it into its proper trianglar shape.

The cadets marched off the lawn. The observers were still and speechless for a few moments.

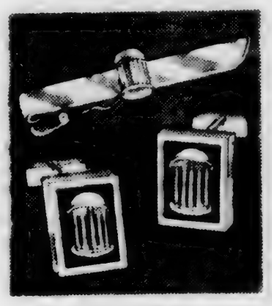
CAMPUS CLUES

By CAROLYN

Where But At Julian's . . .

Can you find this snappy Carolina jacket? This is a tremendous buy for only $7.95—good material, smartly tailored with snug fitting knitted collar and cuffs, full front zipper and slash pockets.



Wear this water repellent jacket over a sweater and you're set for the worst winter weather.

It comes in Navy blue with the Carolina seal in white or in white with the seal in blue.

Here's a Julian exclusive—tie bars and cufflinks with the UNC Old Well in heavy sterling silver.

These Carolina favorites are available in handwrought cufflinks selling for $7.95, tie bar for $7.95 and the machine-milled set for $5.95 for the cufflinks and $2.95 for the tie bar.

The Red Shoes . . .

There is something about a pair of red shoes that makes you feel as well as look glamorous. ALEXANDER'S SHOE STORE has the most exciting red shoe we've seen. It is, of course, a Capezio—in red suede with a tucked-to-the-foot look.

While shoe shopping, remember to look at the luxurious sweaters made of 100% Icelandic wool. These sweaters have an extra thick, almost fur-like quality. They come in white, black and brown as well as all the bright colors.

Footballers Take Things Easy For Few Days

Comparatively speaking, this is a week of rest for the Carolina footballers. Saturday is a football holiday in Chapel Hill and Coach Jim Tatum is just taking things easy, for a few days anyway, giving his boys a chance to recover from physical ills which have evolved since the Maryland game.

Tatum joined the press in a delicious steak at the Pines yesterday in a two-hour bull session in which a few of the pertinent points of the Carolina team came to the fore.

Here are a few of the things which Tatum had to say about various aspects of Carolina football.

About South Carolina:

"Our boys just played great football Saturday. We got some wonderful breaks and cashed in on them. Other teams have fumbled against us and we weren't there, but we were Saturday."

Quarterback Situation Is Best Ever—Tatum

On the Tar Heel's quarterback situation.

"We'll miss Curt (Hathaway) tremendously of course, but we couldn't have been better prepared for the injury. Cummings had developed into a dependable starter and we were far enough ahead in the game to give Nelson Lowe some valuable experience after we saw it would be necessary to put him in. He now has about 14 minutes of game experience under his belt."

"With Cummings and Lowe only sophomores and Hathaway coming back for another season, plus Jerry Amos (a sophomore holdout) and freshman star Russ Hollers, I would say the quarterback situation is the best it's been since I've been at Carolina."

On Carolina's physical condition.

"Koes (Ron) will start practicing again tomorrow and there seems to be a slim chance that Lineberger (Jack) might be back before the season is over. Hathaway is the only definite loss, so we should be in good shape barring unforseen circumstances) for the Duke game."

Duke Could Be Toughest Team This Season

Will Duke be the toughest team the Tar Heels play this season"

"I've seen pictures of several of the Duke games and I would say that they're far superior to anything I've seen on film."

How do you feel about layoffs?

"When I first learned that we would have an open date I hated it. But since we've had so many injuries and lineup shifts lately, I'm happy about the free weekend."

"As for effect, I had a layoff once at Maryland and went out the next Saturday and had a 22-game winning streak broken. That was in 1952 against Mississippi. But we've got a lot of work we can do. We'll stress fundamentals for a few days and try to get some of the boys who have been shifted, accustomed to their new positions."

Carolina-Duke Student Tickets On Sale

Student tickets for the Duke-Carolina game are now on sale at Woollen Gym. Three thousand student tickets are available at half price (two bucks). Passbooks are compulsory. Date tickets are going at the regular price.

Many of the Carolina football players will probably journey over to Durham Saturday to watch Duke play Clemson, but Jim Tatum is neither requiring nor encouraging it. Tatum doesn't feel that it does any good for a team to watch another team in action. "Films are much better," he says.

Quarterback Jack Cummings has thrown 41 passes and completed 21 for a total of 320 yards. This should put him among the percentage leaders in the conference and probably the nation.

Halfbacks Daley Goff and Emil DeCantis are running a tight race for top individual rushing honors among the Tar Heels. Goff still leads the team with 167 yards but DeCantis is only one yard behind.

Quigg And Hathaway Resting Well In Infirmary

A report from Dr. Hedgepath at the infirmary has it that Joe Quigg and Curt Hathaway are "resting as well as can be expected at this stage of the game."

Hathaway, incidentally, was operated on Saturday night to straighten a fracture. Curt broke both bones in his right arm and a pin had to be inserted.

Dr. Hedgepath said that he did not know how long the two would be in the infirmary, but added that both are coming along very nicely. No visitors are allowed as yet.

Footballer Jack Lineberger is out of the infirmary but is wearing a brace on his neck. Lineberger received a pinched nerve in his neck in the Tennessee game.

Globetrotters Appear In Raleigh Tonight

A few sports briefs.

The internationally reknown Harlem Globe Trotters will kickoff the North Carolina basketball season tonight in Reynolds Coliseum (Raleigh) as they take on the Philadelphia Sphas at 8 o'clock.

N. C. State, which lost its first game Saturday, has a 4.1 average per rush with the first five backs boasting better than four yards a try. Dick Hunter's average is 4.3, Don Hafer is 4.4, Ken Trowbridge is 6.0 and Ron Podwika is 4.5.

If the Duke Blue Devils plan to stop Clemson in Durham Saturday, they'll have to contrive some sort of defense to stop the Tiger's sophomore quarterback, Harvey White. White is a wizard with a football and should get All-ACC recognition.

Wake Forest is borrowing an idea from Duke for this week's game with West Virginia in hopes of getting more fans through the turnstiles at Bowman Gray Stadium. It will be 'Family Day' at Deacontown with all children under 12 being admitted free when accompanied by two adults.

HE'S NEVER BEEN BEATEN

Bishop Gaining Momentum As Cross-Country Great

By BILL KING

There is no better record than a perfect one and Carolina cross-country star Wayne Bishop is the holder of just such a distinction.

When Bishop led the Tar Heel harriers to the State cross-country title in Raleigh Monday, it marked the fifteenth time in his college career that he had been the first to break the finish line string. And that's the only place he's ever finish.

NEVER BEEN BEATEN

Yep, the Greenville junior has never been beaten in a cross-country meet. During his freshman year he won ten in a row plus the Atlantic Coast Conference freshman title. This year he has been first in four of the Tar Heel's six meets. He failed to finish a tri-angular meet against Clemson and Virginia here Friday due to an injury which sidelined him while he was on the track.

It was the same injury which kept Bishop out of action last year, thus leaving him two years eligibility at the completion of this season.

Bishop set a new State record of 21:28 in the State meet Friday. It was the third time he had shattered a mark this year. He also set course records against Tennessee and Duke and South Carolina and Wake Forest, both tri-angular affairs.

RANSON IS 17-34

For Coach Dale Ranson, Bishop is only one of a host of proteges whom he has tutored at Carolina. In a coaching career of 34 years, Ranson has won 17 conference titles, a pretty unique feat in anybody's books.

Monday, he'll be going after another title when the top runners in the ACC get together in Winston-Salem (at Wake Forest) for the 1957 conference cross-country championship.

It's a cinch that the Tar Heels will bear the favorite row in this one too. And you can count on Wayne Bishop to be right up among the top at the end of the 4.1 mile run— who knows, maybe another record will fall.

Aggies First

Texas A & M, Oklahoma and Auburn, with 22 victories and no defeats among them, continued to dominate the Associated Press college football poll today. The powerful Aggies, who can wrap up the Southwest Conference title this Saturday, held first place by a comfortable margin.

The competition for second place was much closer with Oklahoma edging Auburn by only eight points.

The 10 leadings teams remained virtually unchanged.

Booters Seek Win Number Three At Virginia This Afternoon

By JIM PURKS

CHARLOTTESVILLE—The Carolina varsity soccer team will seek its third win of the season here today when it faces the Virginia Cavaliers at 3 p. m. in a conference contest.

Coach Marvin Allen's talented squad will try to rebound from last Friday's heart-breaking 4-2 loss to Maryland, which seems to have sewed up the conference championship for the Terps for another year.

Currently holding a 2-2 record, the Tar Hels will be after revenge when they face the Virginia eleven. The Cavaliers defeated Carolina, 2-0, last year in Chapel Hill. The Tar Heels had been riding high on a four-game winning streak when they met Virginia.

TOUGH CONTEST EXPECTED

The contest promises to be a tough one for the Tar Heels as Virginia again will put a strong team on the field. Virginia has beaten N. C. State and Duke, while losing to Maryland by only 2-0.

Starting on the Tar Heel forward line will be center forward Mike Thompson, who has scored six goals this year. Thompson will be working with insides Ted Smith and Tom Coleman Barks will hold down the wing positions.

On defense, Capain Bill Blair and Bob Borden will play the halfback spots. Ted Youhanna, Hugh Goodman, and eiher Dave Corkey or Bill Klein will hold down the fullback positions in support of goalie Jim Rattay.

If you have more friends than money, remember our famous five-cent Christmas cards! Early birds get widest choice.

Check Shows UP Majority Slashed To 26-24

2,641 Vote In Election Tuesday

The fall elections—recording a total vote of 2,641—slashed UP's majority in the legislature from 29-21 to 26-24 in an unexpected comeback by SP in gaining three legislative seast.

Daily Tar Heel tabulations showed that about 34 per cent of the student body voted in the elections for top judicial, class offices and legislative posts.

Other returns not previously reported include:

In Dorm Men's I Erwin Fuller (SP incumbent) was elected to the year seat, with the six month seat going to Charlie Gray (UP).

In Dorm Men's II, the SP swept all three year seats with Roger Foushee, Denton Lotz (incumbent), and Al Walters (incumbent) being election.

In Dorm Men's III, the SP again took the voting with Tommy Kearns and Dennis Rinzler (incumbent) taking one year seats.

Ralph Cummings (SP) won a one year seat in Dorm Men's IV.

In Dorm Men's V, John Brooks (SP) and Gary Green (SP) won one year seats. Dick Robinson (UP) won a six months seat in that district.

The UP swept across the board in Town Men's I with Dave Biren, Graham Clayton (incumbent), Blake LaMar, Charlie Pittman, Tim Stevens, and Bob Turner winning one year seats.

In Town Men's II, Craven Brewer (UP) won a one year seat.

In Town Men's III, Neal Borden (UP), Jerry Oppenheimer (UP incumbent) and Jim Pittman (SP) won one year seats. Harry Gillis (SP), Ken Friedman (SP) and Lee Wardrup (UP) won six months seats.

Fred Harris (UP) won a one year seat in Town Men's IV.

In Town Women's District, Linda Chappell(UP) and Jeannie M. Meador (SP) were elected to one year seats.

In Dorm Women's District, Lucy Forsyth(UP incumbent), Diana Johnson(UP) and Paddy Wall(SP incumbent) won one year seats. Ann Harvey (UP), Connie Bernstein (SP) and Martha Wilkinson (UP) were elected to six months seats.

Whit Whitfield, SP Chairman, said, "The Student Party looks upon the election on the whole as a victory. Even though we did not gain control of the legislature we narrowed the gap considerably from the 29-21 majority the UP has held since last spring. This is in itself a victory.

"I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Vice-Chairman John Brooks and campaign officials Rudy Edwards, Erwin Fuller, and Caleb White for a job

HODGES ADDS CRITICISM—

SSL Action Held 'Immature'

RALEIGH, Nov. 13. (AP)—Gov. Hodges today joined in criticism of the State Student Legislature which met in the State Capitol last week and adopted a resolution urging repeal of state law which prohibits inter-racial marriages.

Hodges said he "certainly" did not agree with the students. He added that he considered their action "somewhat immature and somewhat irresponsible."

He was asked if he felt the students by their actions had jeopardized their chances of getting the use of the state's House and Senate Chambers for the future assemblies.

He answered that he felt the students had taken advantage of the state's hospitality and that if requests for use of the Capitol are made by the group in the future they likely would be "asked questions as to whom they represent."

He said that so far he has been unable to find out "who they represented."

The State Student Assembly is made up of student delegations from a host of colleges in the state, both white and Negro, and it has been holding its student legislative sessions in the Capitol annually for many years. Their actions are merely expressions of opinion.

The students' action on inter-racial marriages was criticized by Rep. Harold D. Cooley (D-NC) who spoke at their closing session Saturday.

The student group has protested that their actions were misinterpreted by newspapers as an endorsement of inter-racial marriages. Actually, they said they did not endorse such marriages but simply called for repeal of laws which would prohibit persons from marrying persons of their choice.

Student leaders also have pointed out that news reports of their meeting said they approved a resolution urging that prostitution be legalized. Actually, they said, the bill was defeated.

The students also adopted a resolution condemning Gov. Orval Faubus of Arkansas for "flaunting" a court order in the Little Rock school segregation crisis.

"Although all of us believe in freedom of speech," Hodges said, "I also happen to believe in responsibility.

New Insurance Law Applicable To UNC Student

UNC students, faculty members and employes having cars registered in North Carolina must take out liability insurance policies, according to the compulsory insurance bill passed by the General Assembly this year.

The only persons exempt from this law are those operating vehicles owned by the State of North Carolina and those having cars registered in other states.

For purpose of registration, the law goes into effect Jan. 1, 1958. However, since the deadline for getting 1958 licene plates is Feb. 15, 1958, North Carolina car owners can drive their vehicles without having insurance until February.

After Feb. 15 1958, the compulsory insurance law will go into effect for purposes of criminal action.

John Robert Montgomery, Jr., of the Institute of Government, who had a hand in framing the bill, said that North Carolina is one of few states to undertake such legislation.

In fact, New York, Massachusetts and possibly Connecticut are the only other states requiring liability insurance.

Montgomery said that the trend among state legislatures now seems to be in the direction of passing similar legislation.

By the compulsory insurance bill, it is expected that court cases evolving from accidents where a party had no insurance will be virtually eliminated.

Scholarships

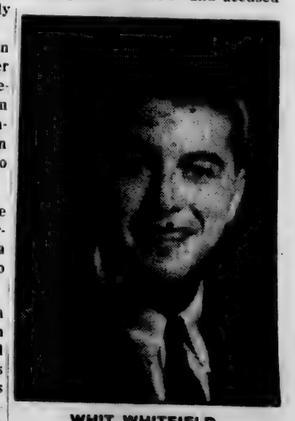
WINSTON-SALEM, Nov. 13. (AP)—Wake Forest College President Dr. Harold W. Tribble said today he will recommend to the college trustees that scholarships be set up for the seven children of two state highway patrolmen who were slain last week.

Wake Forest alumni also are being requested to contribute to such a fund. The movement originated with an alumni group in High Point, a Wake Forest spokesman said.

UP Proposal 'Absurd,' Declares SP Chairman; Says UP Move Political

A proposal by UP Chairman Harry Braxton to revamp the method for selecting delegates to the State Student Legislature drew sharp criticism yesterday from the head of the opposition party, SP Chairman Whit Whitfield.

Whitfield called the UP chairman's proposals "absurd" and accused Braxton of having been politically motivated.



"For a political party chairman to offer two alternatives—either that of popular election of delegates or cessation of participation in SSL—is absurd," he said. "Coming on the day before the election as it did, it would even seem to be a political maneuver."

Whitfield's statement came amid a storm of controversy surrounding the SSL's passage of a bill to end legal impediments to inter-racial marriages.

The student delegates have been the target of sharp words from both campus and state political figures for their approval of this measure. Their latest critic was Gov. Luther Hodges, who said yesterday he considered their action "somewhat immature and somewhat irresponsible."

Braxton suggested Monday that either the UNC delegates to the SSL be elected or that the University drop out of participation in the annual meeting.

Whitfield, who said he had been associated with SSL for the past two years, was emphatic in his criticism of this suggestion. "I and interest."

WHIT WHITFIELD

have yet to find fault with the selections committee," he said.

He explained that the selection of delegates to the SSL is made on a merit basis and said that "no partisanship is shown." He added that the election of the winners being chosen "because of their popularity instead of their ability

Winston Announces His Candidacy For Election

Barry Winston of Chapel Hill, a senior sociology major at UNC, Wednesday announced his candidacy for editor of the Daily Tar Heel in the forthcoming recall election.

Winston's announcement came one day after petitions calling for a revote were turned over to Attorney General Sonny Hallford.

As the deadline at midnight tonight for handing in candidacy petitions neared, it was apparent that Winston would be the only opponent to current Editor Neil Bass.

There was, however, the possibility that the student legislature, in session last night, would extend the deadline to allow the campus' two political factions to endorse their candidates.

Winston, in disclosing his candidacy Wednesday, declared that "the essence of the recall petition is correct," though he refused to elaborate on his comment.

The petitions charged that current Editor Bass is "incompetent" for the job. They were circulated 13 days ago by Wally Kuralt, sophomore from Charlotte, and were turned in Tuesday with required number of names.

Winston, asserting he "would like to make one thing clear," said there would be "no" changes on the Daily Tar Heel staff if he were elected to its editor.

"By that I mean that there would be no changes made unless, after considerable observation, I thought it necessary," he said. "That seems very unlikely."

Winston said he worked a total of about one year over a two-year period on the Daily Tar Heel staff. Other newspaper experience includes one year as feature writer and another as editor of his high school publication.

The 23-year-old candidate jumped immediately into his campaign for the top newspaper post by naming Jonathan Yardley, a freshman, as his campaign manager.

He said he and Yardley would begin immedately in the campaign working through election day, now set for November 26. This is Winston's first appearance on the campus political front.

While Winston would not expound on his campaign plans, he did say he would seek the endorsement of both political parties here.

NSA Committee's Stay At UNC Said Important

The importance of the NSA's Desegregation Sub-commission's remaining in Chapel Hill was stressed in a joint statement released yesterday by Student Body President Sonny Evans and Whit Whitfield, Chairman of the Student Party.

The purpose of this sub-commission is to gather data in the form of case studies, statistics, polls, etc., to be submited to the National Student Assn.

UNC's sub-commission is the only such group in the South. It was moved here in 1955 from the University of Texas.

According to Evans, NSA President Ray Farrabee was on the UNC campus last weekend to outline the program for the sub-commission.

"UNC and the University of Texas are the only integrated large universities in the South," Evans said. "We are very anxious for the Desegregation Sub-Commission to stay here.

"We are going through the same pains now that Georgia, Alabama and the others will face," Evans continued.

NSA Coordinator Whitfield said, "The rest of the nation is looking to us and the University of Texas to see what develops along desegregation lines. Our problems are ones that all Southern schools will be facing eventually—be it 5 or 50 years."

"The Desegregation Sub-Commission has been placed here by the national office of the NSA, and it is essential that we have interested and concerned people working on it," Evans said.

Interested students and members of the community have been asked to contact the Student Government Office.

Aycock Will Give Awards

Chancellor William Aycock will be on hand to present the trophies to winners tonight at the Eleventh Annual Co-Recreational Sports Carnival which will begin at 6:40 p. m. in Woollen Gym. Events will begin promptly.

Some 400 students will participate. This is the largest number ever recorded for the annual event which is sponsored by the Intramural Department and The Women's Athletic Association.

A team composed of six women and six men score points in competition for the winner's trophy in the sports activities, carnival games, and the relays. The sports activities include badminton, table tennis, volleyball doubles, tether ball for women, box hockey for men, and archery.

Each team will enter two members in each of these events. Two members will also participate in the carnival games for winner's points. Eight members will participate in the relays which are scheduled to begin at 8:20 p. m.

As a grand finale, there will be a cake walk and a turkey walk. Each team will enter a couple in this event. Several homemade cakes will be given away along with the turkey.

During this time the officials will add up the scores of the different teams to determine the winner of the plaque. The individual winners in each activity will receive a trophy.

Team members should report to the main floor of the gym promptly at 6:40 p. m. Competition will begin shortly thereafter.

The highlight of the evening will be the relay activity. Relays are button sewing, bean-straw, wedding ring, and potato.

Ritchie Smith, president of the Joint Intramural Council, will introduce Chancellor Aycock.

Council Will Review Cases

The Student Traffic Council, which deals with all court action pertaining to automobile registration and violations is expected to to hear several cases concerning students with multiple traffic tickets.

So far, 30 students have received from three to 10 tickets for parking violations. All those with three tickets receive warnings through the mail. Those with five or more must appear before the Council.

The Council has the power to penalize the student by depriving him of the right to have a car in Chapel Hill.

Ray Jefferies, assistant to the Dean of Student Affairs, reported yesterday on the 300 license numbers taken from cars without registration stickers and sent to Raleigh for identification.

Of these 300, 250 cars had been registered, but the students had failed to put the stickers on the vehicles.

Also, Jefferies said that only two cars were discovered to be operated by freshmen.

INDICATIONS FOR 1959

Faculty Salaries To Remain Low, Despite Raises

By ANN FRYE

Indications are that faculty salaries at UNC in 1959 will be comparatively low, despite the fact that the General Assembly of 1957 provided money for an increase in faculty pay this year.

The trend of the university as regards faculty salaries seems to be periodic gains but a long-run loss.

This information was presented to the Visiting Committee of the Board of Trustees last week in a report compiled by the Chancellor's Cabinet. The report contained a summary of action taken by the university on recommendations made by the Visiting Committee last spring.

According to recommendations concerning faculty pay, the university tok action in increasing salaries for all faculty personnel five per cent, in providing for a new salary scale, and in securing a pay increase for faculty based on merit.

The report stated that the five per cent increase for all faculty members was intended to offset, in part, the increased cost of living.

The new salary scale set up was said to be in a somewhat better competitive position with other universities though still not equal to many universities.

The selective salary increase was designed to enable the university to retain certain deserving faculty members from "raids" by other institutions that can offer a higher salary.

In spite of this pay increase the report said that "our position (regarding faculty salaries) in 1959 promises to be worse than it was in 1957."

In other areas pertaining to faculty matters, the Chancellor's Cabinet report to the Visiting Committee covered the following items:

(1) Funds for research. The report noted that the General Assembly in 1957 appropriated $20,000 a year for 1957-59 for research. While this amount is less than the $50,000 a year requested, this is the first time that unrestricted funds for faculty research grants have been appropriated by the State.

(2) Teaching techniques. A long-range planning study to discover practicable new methods and devices for teaching services is being carried on by Dr. James L. Godfrey, Dean of the Faculty. In the meantime, television extension courses are being continued, and recent models of visual and aural aid equipment are in use by several departments.

(3) Law School professors. Acting on a "high priority" recommendation, the university has secured two assistant professors in the law faculty who will begin work next year, according to the report.

(4) Faculty retirement. The report indicated that the retirement of faculty members is being carried out according to the retirement law.

World In Brief

Garbage Probe

WASHINGTON, Nov. 13. (AP)—A federal narcotics agent told Senate rackets probers today that the dread Mafia—the secret society of criminals also known as the Black Hand—dominates New York City's garbage collection industry.

The industry serves 122,000 businesses and half a million homes. It grosses 50 million dollars a year.

Agent Joseph Amato testified that Vincent J. Squillante, reputed overlord of the garbage racket, "is considered by me and my office as a major source of supply for narcotics.""

Manhunt

BALTIMORE, Nov. 13. (AP)—A 21-year-old man being held by Baltimore County police claimed today he had hitched a ride with a man who boasted of killing two North Carolina state police.

Capt. Elmer F. Adams, head of the County Detective Bureau, said the account was volunteered by a man picked up after a resident complained about a loiterer outside his home. The prisoner was not identified.

Fido's Future Black

MOSCOW, Nov. 13. (AP)—Izvestia said today the Soviet Union will shoot many more dogs into space before risking human life in such experiments.

The Soviet government newspaper said the first human space travelers would not be adventurers but "the best people to be found in Soviet society."

Scientific methods of protecting future pilots and passengers from harmful effects must be created beforehand by means of experiments with animals in space, the paper added. Simulated conditions on earth can only approximate the actual conditions in space, it added.

Turned Down

TUSKEGEE, Ala., Nov. 13. (AP)—Negroes who had asked the Tuskegee City Council to reannex territory cut out of the city limits last summer were turned down last night.

Mayor Phil Lightfut said the Council voted unanimously to deny a petition signed by more than 700 Negroes.

Cuban Revolt

HAVANA, Cuba, Nov. 13. (AP)—Fidel Castro's rebels with torches in their fists were reported today launching a widespread campaign of burning sugar cane fields in an effort to topple President Fulgencio Batista.

The scorched crops policy apparently was part of an economic offensive that also includes arson in the tobacco fields, appeals for a walkout of rice plantation workers and calls for a "general revolutionary strike" about Dec. 15.

Would Close Schools

AUSTIN, Tex., Nov. 13. (AP)—Gov. Price Daniel told the Legislature today Texas can maintain peace and order in its schools "without the use of military force."

Gov. Daniel's brief message opening the second session was read to the House and Senate.

Solons Will Be Sworn Tonight

Thirty-three new members of the Student Legislature will be sworn in tonight at the regularly-scheduled meeting in the Phi Hall in New East at 7:30.

Other business to be taken up tonight by the Legislature includes: the election of the speaker pro-tem, clerk, sergeant-at-arms, and chairmen of the finance, ways and means, and rules committees.

No old business is scheduled to come before the body, according to Don Furtado,v ice president of the Student Body and speaker of the Legislature.

In commenting on the newly elected members of the Legislature, Furtado said that the students have made "some excellent choices in selecting their representatives."

He said that the forthcoming session "promises to be one of the most productive this campus has yet seen."

Election Interest Poor; Yet Slate Seems Excellent

Yesterday's total vote—approximately 34 per cent—of the eligible student electorate was far from encouraging.

While the total voters—2,461 out of an electorate of some 7,000, according to figures computated by Daily Tar Heel election analysts—was not particularly unfavorable as compared to totals in other fall elections.

But it was extremely discouraging. Student self-government, as we have said and reiterated, is only as strong as student voters make it, only as strong as the voter participation on election day.

Dormitory districts, as is frequently the case, turned out more voters than did town districts.

The unusual and astounding fact about the election is that 1,843 dormitory voters elected only 17 representatives to the Student Legislature, while only 627 town district voters elected 16 student legislators.

A possible cure for the exceedingly low turn-out in town districts would be reapportionment of legislature seats after each election on the basis of voter participation in all districts. This action should definitely insure more voter participation on election day. It is an ultimatum, an alternative.

On the other hand, student voters should exercise their priceless voting privilege without any type of coercion or ultimatum from the Elections Board.

The Elections Board, under the chairmanship of Art Sobel, worked very effectively during the election and resulting vote tabulation. There have been no reports of voting irregularities which have plagued past elections and necessitated an inundating overflow of run-off elections.

Chairman Sobel, assistant John Minter and many other faithfuls on the board are to be heartily complimented for their conduct of the election.

The most discouraging and disturbing fact surrounding the election was the conduct of the polls in Town Men's IV District, Victory Village.

Last year's reapportionment of legislative seats and relocation of elective districts resulted in the creation of a separate district for Victory Village voters. Village dwellers were allocated two student representatives, and rightly so.

But Tuesday's election, in which two village candidates were disqualified due to failure to submit expense accounts to the Elections Board, and in which village dwellers failed to supply necessary poll tenders so that only eight voters were allowed the privilege of ballot casting, demonstrates a most irresponsible attitude of the part of Victory Village voters.

The district is definitely entitled to legislative representatives. But the district should be reapportioned to lessen representatives if Victory Village voters can not offer more participation than was demonstrated during yesterday's election.

And if town district voters continue their dismal participation at the polls, some of their representatives should be reapportioned to districts where more voter enthusiasm is evident.

We shall look forward to spring elections with a fervent hope that students will respond more enthusiastically at the polls.

Officials elected appear capable and should advance student government far.

But voters should definitely demonstrate more effort and participation in all coming elections.

The Loss Of Coach Casey And Stifling Parsimony

The loss of Coach Leslie Ralph Casey has far more significance than meets the eye.

Popular Coach Casey, director of th University's outstanding swimming teams, will, of course, be much missed by his athletes and by students who admired him all over the campus. His loss to the Dept. of Physical Education will also be felt. Coach Casey was an assistant professor there.

But Coach Casey's justifiable reasons for resignation are strikingly significant. He leaves the University to accept a position at Southern Illinois University at a third higher pay.

The Daily Tar Heel has voiced sentiment over and over concerning the "intellectual migration" of professors from the campus.

The situation became more conspicuous than ever last year when numerous professors migrated from the campus to accept posts paying 50 per cent more salary—and even higher figures—at other colleges and universities. A case in point is outstanding and admired Dr. Bill Poteat of the Philosophy Dept. —Dr. Poteat was mentioned prominenrly for the chancellorship and supported and recommended by a large number of students—who resigned to accept another teaching post with much more salary.

The problem is acute. The five per cent raise in state employee's salaries which went into effect this year is wholly inadequate. And additional salary kick-ups, awarded on individual merit basis, is again wholly inadequate.

Additional salary increases is imperative if the University is to continue and perpetuate its academic reputation, its outstanding record of scholastic achievement.

The intellectual migration from the University's classrooms must be halted.

Higher—10 per cent or more—salaries awarded by the state General Assembly in 1959 would eradicate part of the deplorable situation.

But more immediate remedies should be sought.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Constitution & Individualism Anathema's Rt.

By Curtis Gans

On June 17, the Supreme Court of the United States handed down four decisions which produced considerable outcry, and threatened to tear down much of the "legislation" related to the security of the United States. They also took the first step in a very long time towards the protection of individual rights under the first, fifth and sixth amendments of the Constitution.

These individual rights are central to any democracy, and are of utmost importance to American democracy.

Perhaps the most far reaching decision of the court was the action taken on the Smith Act. Here the right of individuals to espouse and teach communism and to assemble as a group was upheld. The condition was made, of course, that individuals or groups must not preach or incite to practice violent overthrow of the U. S. government.

In any democracy, if the government wants to protect the rights of all individuals, it must take the good with the bad. If America wants to preserve free speech, then it must let those speak whose views are anathema to democracy, for freedom of speech for all is not freedom of speech for the few who preach the line of the government currently in power. Moreover it is to the good of the United States to have the Communist line exposed to the critical scrutiny of the press, the politicians, and last but most important, the voters.

The right of people not to conform in thought and speech with the majority is one of the basic and little used rights of America, but if this right is not upheld, then the day may come when freedom of speech for only those who speak as the members of the government speak will be allowed. It would indeed be a sad state of affairs if this were to happen.

The right to join a group whose members espouse similar ideals is also a fundamental precept in American democracy, and is protected by Article One of the Bill of Rights. However, until the Supreme Court decision of June 17, the post-war Communist party was subject to the censorship of local laws.

Again America must take the good with the bad if it is to preserve its democratic ideals. The day may well come when either the Democratic or Republican party can set itself up, and with the censorship of the Communist party as a precedent, censor its rival. The result would be disastrous.

Perhaps the next important decision was the Jenck's verdict, which opened the testimony of two witnesses within the files of the FBI to the scrutiny of the defendant.

It is well known that the sixth amendment to the Constitution of the United States contains a clause whereby the individual has the right to face his accusers. Clearly if testimony of two witnesses is brought out in trial to the detriment of the accused without the accused being able to take recourse in cross examination, he is denied the right of facing his accusers.

The Supreme Court in upholding this right might have wrought a little havoc with the secrecy of FBI files, but it protected the necessary legal rights of all individuals.

The other two decisions of June 17, upheld the rights of individuals under the fifth amendment. It vindicated two men who refused to answer questions in Congress and the New Hampshire State Legislature.

It has been a strange misconception in American judical and political circles as of late to view any man who resorts to the fifth amendment as guilty. This is contrary to the spirit and letter of the law.

The law is set up for the protecion of individuals in order that they may not say something that may tend to incriminate themselves. This does not mean that these people are guilty or the statements that they would make are confessions of guilt. It means that they are able to protect themselves from being misconstrued and having their own words used against them.

The Supreme Court in handing down the June 17, decisions upheld the right of refusal to testify against one's self, and tore at the modern edifice of implied guilt which is coupled with the utilization of the fifth amendment.

Moreover, it set limits upon the field of investigation by congressional and state boards of inquiry, in saying that the questions that the two individuals in question refused to answer were far afield from the topic of investigation.

Although no definite limits of Congressional investigations were set, there was a step made toward protecting the privacy of the individual. This was a step in the right direction.

The Supreme Court, after a lapse of several years of Congressional witch-hunting due to security scares, his again become the leading weapon in the struggle for the preservation of individual rights. It it is a change to be hailed.

"I Think We've Managed To Save His Face"

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Christmas Buddies Pale At Pastel Pistols

Gail Godwin

Today, we shall decide what to give to our Christmas buddies to make their masculine hearts jump for joy.

We have already left cufflinks, fountain pens, wallets, and linen handerchiefs to the more conservative present-givers. Now we shall be original.

The type of man your Christmas buddy is dictates the type of gift you want to buy.

I thumbed through several magazines to get an idea of what is being offered this year, and I found that opportunities are better than ever for shocking your C. B. with your extreme originality.

For the man you "Cain't help lovin', even though they tell you he's lazy," delightful Eastern type pajamas with kimono sleeves and oriental sandals to match will hit the spot. If, however, your mamma does not like the idea of giving your lazy C. B. such intimate apparel, substitute with a foam rubber pillow covered with material on which your name is printed in gay colors.

If your buddy likes his liquids, surprise him with an ice crusher with matching ice bucket - adjustable for coarse or fine ice.

If he is the continental cassanova who roams the earth in search of adventure, slip a leather passport case under his Christmas Tree.

If you have been blessed with the outdoor type of Buddy, opportunities are unlimited. Three possibilites are: .22 caliber handguns in pastel colors, a smart looking leather-trimmed barometer, or deerskin gloves with knit inserts and slit palms for greater agility.

If he is always go, go, going, buy him an electric shaver that plugs into any automobile cigarette lighter. Then he can drive and shave at the same time.

Has your C. B. always got his nose in politics? Then your search is over. Give him a jigger made like a gavel.

If he is one of this handsome, big, Viking type males with ruddy cheeks and muscles of steel, he would undobutedly look even bigger in your Chirstmas present - a bulky-knit ski sweater in bold designs and colors. Several Vikings on campus are wearing them and they certainly turn the eye - or else blind it.

If he has everything and you want to give him something frivolous, manufacturers are now making Men's Jewel cases with fleur du lis designs and inlaid with bronze. Tiffany's has come out with a cute litte pen and pencil set in solid gold for only $175.

Whatever you decide upon, be sure and think hard before you decide, because it's the thought that counts, so they say.

Staffers Speak On Edit Freedom

EDITOR:

I write this letter not necessarily in defense of your editorial policies, but rather to assert your right to have them.

You were elected last year in a campus-wide election. You were selected to run at the discretion of a bi-partisan board for the position you now hold and reached the pinnacle of your present success by virtue of true democratic practices.

A recall has been an integral part of the system of checks and balances of our system of government for over 40 years.

However, there are times when our checks and balances are badly abused. We believe that this is one of those times. We do not mean to accuse those who are connected with the recall of sour grapes or of motives designed for personal gain, but rather we are somewhat afraid of the precedent this action will establish.

Under Amendment 1 of the Constitution there is a guarantee of freedom of the press. If the recall is successful in your removal from office, Mr. Editor, we think that from that day on there will be a cloud of fear in the office of the DTH. The paper will be afraid to speak out on pertinent issues concerning the student body.

Nobody can doubt your right to take sides on an issue, Mr. Editor, for it's not only your job, but your obligation to those who elected you. Are the voters to seek a new editor merely because they disagree with the personal opinions of the man whom they elected a few months ago?

This is certainly not consistent to us, for it does not personify the Carolina way of life. In Chapel Hill we have a great tradition of the voice of the students. Student organizations have long expressed their opinions without fear of persecution.

However, these other organizations cannot give the campus that which The Daily Tar Heel can. The Daily Tar Heel is the only effective means of communication that reaches the students as a group. This certainly does not mean, though, that it must only speak on popular issues.

Editorials are the voice of the ELECTED EDITOR. Page two is his, while pages one, three and four belong to the students. The only obligation which The Daily Tar Heel has to the student body is to present a fair and representative coverage of campus news.

Mr. Editor, those of us who have worked in close conjunction with you realize that you agree with us that The Daily Tar Heel is the most important and potentially powerful single function on campus. However much we may disagree with some of your editorials, we will not deny your right to print them.

The following members of The Daily Tar Heel staff have signed this letter and pledge that they shall not support your recall.

Selection Board Method Upheld

EDITOR:

As a member of the Selections Board for the State Student Legislature I question the wisdom of choosing delegates by election as Mr. Braxton proposed in Tuesday's Tar Heel. The Selections Board, which is composed of past delegates to the S.S.L., interviews people who try out and considers their qualifications and interests. These candidates are given a test on currents events. The selections Board tries to pick people who have a certain amount of poise, who speak well, who are well informed, interested in the job, and willing to work. In my opinion, a fine group of delegates was chosen this year.

With all due respect for Mr. Braxton I feel that popular election would not insure the same high type of delegation. The individual student cannot possibly know personally all the candidates and their qualifications. The average student has not worked closely with the S.S.L. and could not have a thorough knowledge of what being a delegate entails. I submit that popular election is not feasible. I also think it would be a mistake to stop sending delegates to the S.S.L. because the University of North Carolina is a state-supported school and is widely known and respected throughout the state. The University should take part in such a program as this.

Mr. Braxton said that students who do not reflect the campus views should not be sent as campus representatives. This is quite correct in theory but how can you find out the campus views? The delegation has always been made up of some of the most outstanding leaders on campus. Student leaders are the best spokesmen for student opinion that I can think of because the students have entrusted them with this function.

It is unfortunate that most of the state newspapers have ignored a great deal of commendable action done by the S.S.L. and have played up two rather sensational bills which were introduced by two other schools and voted down by the Carolina delegation. I would like to thank the Editor for mentioning the inadequate coverage of the S.S.L. by these newspapers.

Art League Picks Officers

The new University Art League held its first regularly scheduled meeting Monday night. At the meeting, the League formed a constitution, elected officers and made plans for the balance of the year.

The newly elected officers are as follows: Duane Lowder, President; Marguerite Kirschner, vice-president; Mary Louise Davis, secretary; and William Cummingham, treasurer. Professor Kenneth Ness, acting chairman of the Art Dept., is faculty adviser for the group.

The League made plans for the coming year which include one monthly lecture on art of related subjects, open to the public; round table discussions with faculty moderators from various departments; art movies; and social activities.

At this charter meeting, many new members joined the league. Any other students interested in art have been invited to join.

Stocking Fund Donors Wanted

An estimated 1,600 persons in Orange County are up for "adoption" during the Christmas season.

The Christmas for these 1,600 will be handled again this year by the Empty Stocking Campaign of the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill.

During the campaign, which officially begins Monday, members of the Junior Service League will collect food, toys and money.

Anyone so desiring may adopt a person or a whole family and provide certain needs for the Christmas of that person or family.

Donations to the Empty Stocking Campaign should be sent to the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill.

DUkathon Race Set Saturday

The Fourth Annual DUkathon, a foot race sponsored by Delta Upsilon Fraternity, will be held Saturday at 1: 30 p.m.

The crowning of a DUkathon Queen will take place immediately before the race begins.

The DUkathon, which covers 13.6 miles, begins at the Carolina Theater in Chapel Hill and ends at the Durham Post Office. About 75 runners have entered the race so far.

Runners will follow Franklin St. and the Durham Highway into the city limits of Durham, and will then follow the main streets to Five Points in the middle of town. The post office is three blocks from Five Points.

Delta Upsilon will award special trophies to first, second and third place winners. All others who finish the race will receive survivor's medals.

Godwin Added To Symposium

Sonny Hallford announced yesterday the appointment of Herman Godwin as executive secretary of the Carolina Symposium. Godwin replaces Jerry Openheimer, who will become vice-chairman of the symposium. Godwin will assist the chairman of the symposium.

"I look forward to working with the new executive secretary during the coming months," Halford said.

In other symposium action, Jimmy Wallace was appointed advisor to the program committee. Announcing this appointment, Program Committee Chairman Jerry Openheimer said: "I am indeed delighted to have a man of Mr. Wallace's caliber and integrity join us in this capacity."

Election

well done. We are looking forward to the spring elections."

Harry Braxton, UP Chairman, said, "The University Party is extremely pleased with the outcome of yesterday's elections. We feel that by returning a UP majority to the legislature, the students have affirmed their faith in the policies of the University Party.

We are, furthermore, quite pleased at the outcome of the class officer elections. We would like to thank those students who supported our candidates and we feel assured that these officers will serve in good faith and to the best interest of their constituents."

CAROLINA CARAVAN

Injured Quigg Will Be Hard To Replace

By JAKE WADE

The Carolina athletic front was hard hit last week by that old foe of sports prosperity, the injury jinx.

The first full-scale scrimmage of the basketball Tar Heels, undefeated national champions of 1956-57, was a gala event. The sophomores, battling to break into the starting lineup, were picture-pretty. A large crowd was on hand. It was a rousing contest, in which the lettermen barely won out by 83-82.

But three minutes before it was over, big Joe Quigg got bumped, went sprawling and emerged with a broken leg that finished him for the season before he saw a game of action in the new year.

IN FOOTBALL, TOO—The football Tar Heels played their best of the season in triumphing over South Carolina by 28-6. It was a memorable win for many reasons.

But there was a damper on that, too. Junior quarterback Curtis Hathaway, who turned in an especially pleasing performance, with rare artistry in running the option play, broke his right arm. He will not be able to play in the last two games of the season, against Duke at Durham on Nov. 23 and against Virginia here on Nov. 30.

Tar Heel quarterbacking is now entirely in the hands of sophomores, Jack Cummings and Nelson Lowe. With Jerry Amos, the Charlotte boy, in reserve. Fortunately, all these lads are equipped with fine talent and skills. They can run, pass and kick. And they have good heads on their shoulders.

NICE FELLOWS, TOO—It is doubtful that the University infirmary ever had more popular patients than Quigg and Hathaway.

Here are two athletes of exceptionable class. They are quiet, fine mannered young men who are credits to the school they have represented in athletic warfare.

Quigg, who tossed in the third-overtime points that beat Kansas for the national championship last winter, captivated the place. He plans to study dentistry.

Hathaway has always been an exemplary student.

The bad injuries couldn't have happened to nicer fellows, as the old saying goes. They will be missed.

Ron Koes Is Ready At Center

Carolina's Tar Heels returned to the practice field today after a two-day vacation and started preparations for their Nov. 23 game with Duke's Blue Devils.

Center Ronnie Koes, who has missed action for two weeks because of sinus trouble and a knee injury, joined the squad for the workout.

The Tar Heels, working primarily on fundamentals after their improved physical condition. Coach two-day layoff, returned in an Jim Tatum indicated that light work will be the program for the squad the remainder of this week.

Rested Tar Heels Are Back At Hard Work

No game this week, but Carolina's Tar Heels are back at hard work, following a couple of days of vacation, getting ready for the year's biggest of all, the annual contest with Duke, this one scheduled at Durham.

Number one item is preparing the quarterback department. The Tar Heels' fine 26-6 conquest of South Carolina last week cost them the services of alternating quarterback Curtis Hathaway. The blond junior from Norfolk, who played one of his finest games against the Gamecocks, is on the sidelines with a broken right arm and is out for the season.

His replacement is Nelson Lowe, sturdy 200-pound sophomore, from North Wilkesboro, who was called on for the first time this year Saturday when Hathaway was hurt. Coach Jim Tatum and his aides had been hopeful that Lowe wouldn't have to used until next season, but Hathaway's injury changed that.

The squad first came up short in quarterbacks when Dave Reed was dropped from the squad in a disciplinary action. Before that, Ron Marquette had been moved from quarterback to halfback and has done so well at his new job there is little likelihood he will go back to his old post.

Cummings Took Over

Jack Cummings, 188-pound sophomore from Lower Merion, Pa., was moved into Reed's place with Hathaway continuing as the field general of the alternating unit.

Nelson Lowe is not without training. He has been practicing daily and as diligently as his playing brothers since the pre-season training period. But thus far his game experience is limited to the brief action he saw against the Gamecocks when he rushed the ball six times for 24 yards and a 4.0 average. He did not throw a pass against the Birds, but he is regarded as a fine passer, as he has shown in practices.

It's an unusual situation for a team to have sophomores for its two top quarterbacks, but that's the way it will be when the Tar Heels journey over to Durham on Saturday, Nov. 23, to face the power-laden once-beaten Duke team.

Pairings Set In Charlotte Holiday Meet

CHARLOTTE, Nov. 13 (AP)—First round pairings for the third annual Carrousel basketball tournament at the Charlotte Coliseum Dec. 19-21 were announced today.

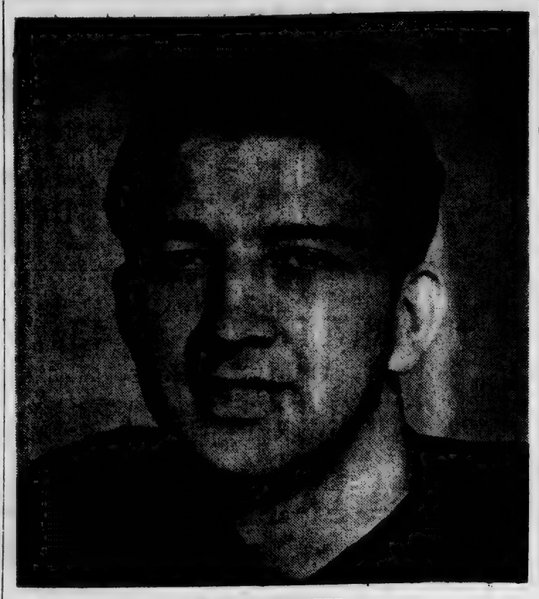
Afternoon and night doubleheaders will be played each of the three days starting with this Dec. 19 schedule.

2 p.m. EST — Tennessee — Bucknell

3:30 p.m. — Clemson-Alabama.

7:30 p.m.—Davidson - Louisiana Tech

9 p.m.—Louisiana State-Lafayette



Winners of the 2 and 7:30o'clock games will meet in a semifinal game at 7:30 p.m. Dec. 20, with the other first round victors playing at 9 o'clock.

First round losers will drop into consolation play which calls for afternoon doubleheaders on Dec. 20 and 21.

Wake Forest, winner of the first two Carrousel tournaments, was unable to arrange a schedule to permit play in the event this season.

Women's Tennis Club To Meet This Afternoon

The Women's Tennis Club will meet today in the Women's Gym at 3 p. m. All girls interested in tennis are invited to attend this meeting.

RON MARQUETTE
Quarterback Is Not For him

Halfback Marquette Is Happy At That Position

By WAYNE THOMPSON

Being the quarterback of a football team has the same popularity as being a pitcher in baseball. Just about everyone wants to play those positions. Carolina's Ron Marquette is the exception. He doesn't want any part of quarterback and he has proved why.

The handsome, 6-2, 195-pound Tar Heel gridder has come into his own this year as a senior and he's made the grade at halfback. It took three years of experimentation at the quarterback slot to finally convince Tar Heelia that Marquette's talents were ideal for a halfback post.

Ron, who makes home at Pennsville, N. J., likes to play football. But he likes it even better at halfback. "I couldn't do my best at quarterback. Too much responsibility, I guess." Marquette says modestly. "The best thing that ever happened to me this year was when Coach Tatum moved me to halfback."

All-Star Performer

An All-star's all-star performer in high school at Salem, N. J., Ron had what was probably his best day at Miami this year. But if the fans watched closely enough in last week's regional televised Carolina-South Carolina game, they saw a star of hidden talents—that is, a defensive specialist.

Marquette plays a whale of sideback for the Tar Heels. Just ask UNC Coach Jim Tatum and he'll tell you the same thing. Last Saturday, for example, Ron was the first player down the field after a punt to the Gamecock. He was blocked out, however, and South Carolina halfback Frank Destino broke loose for what appeared to be an 80-yard homer. But Marquette recovered and made tackle on the North Carolina 37-yard line, stopping a potential Gamecock tally.

Another Desperation Tackle

On the very next play ,the Gamecocks set up their only score on a lateral pass, but again it was Marquette who made a last-ditch tackle on the six-yard line to prevent a long score. Finally the South Carolinians were able to avoid Ron and went over on the third play from the five.

In the Miami game, Marquette was an offensive star, snagging four passes for 72 yards and pitching a 33-yard TD strike to halfback Emil DeCantis to sew up the ball game. Tatum had high praise for the New Jersey youth in that game saying, "Most good receivers would have caught two of these passers, a few great ones could have handled three, but it took a phenomenal effort to catch all four of them."

Carolina-Virginia Booters Battle To 4-4 Deadlock In 2 Overtimes

CHARLOTTESVILLE- Carolina's varsity soccer team was stimied in its at tempt to gain win number three here yesterday afternoon and had to settle for a 4-4 tie with the Cavaliers of Virginia.

Two five minute overtimes were played, but neither team could put in the goal that would have broken the tie.

Virginia's Bob Woirhe opened the scoring battle early in the first quarter.

Carolina tied the score two minutes before the end of the first quarter when Mike Thompson, the Tar Heels leading scorer, booted his seventh goal of the season to knot the count at 1-1.

During the opening period Carolina goalie Jim Rattay sustained a possible cheek bone fracture. He was taken from the field and placed in the hospital where he will remain for several days.

Mike Thompson scoed his second goal of the game to give Carolina a 2-1 lead shortly after the second period got underway.

Virginia came back with two quick tallies, however, to take a 3-2 halftime lead. Sherry Snyder, Virginia's leading scorer, accounted for the Cavaliers second and third goals.

About halfway throuh the third quarter John Ghanim put the Tar Heel back into a tie when he kicked the ball past the Virginia goalie.

Virginia went ahead again when Bob Chamberlein tallied to make the score 4-3.

Carolina's left-winger, Rick Grausman, closed out the scoring for the day when he tied the game for the fourth time at 4:04 of the final period. Both teams had to settle for a tie since neither one could score during the remaining regulation time or in the overtimes.

Probing Committee To Omit Editor's Viewpoint

By ANN FRYE

The newly-appointed committee to study areas surrounding the office of editor of college newspapers decided to steer clear of any consideration of editorial viewpoint.

The five-man committee, headed by Pat Adams, made this decision at its initial meeting yesterday.

The major business taken up at the meeting included naming the commitee and stating its purpose.

This legislative committee, appointed by Student Body President Sonny Evans, will be known as the "Newspaper Research Committee."

Its purpose, as stated by its members, involves a study of methods of selection of editor of the newspaper on other college campuses and internal organization of the paper, in order to obtain recommendations to be reported to Student Legislature.

To implement this purpose, the committee will follow this general procedure: 1) write letters to all college daily papers and certain professional groups. 2) find out about the management policies of

Governor Adds To Controversy Over SSL

Hodges' Comment Praised, Attacked By Political Leaders At Carolina

Election Gaining Momentum

A move to oust the present editor of the Daily Tar Heel took a new tack today with announcement by Paul Rule of South Norfolk, Va., that he will be a candidate in the recall election slated for November 26.

Rule's announcement put three candidates in the field, including the present editor, Neil Bass.

Previously, Wally Kuralt—whose petitions initiated the movement—announced that only one candidate would oppose the present editor.

Apparently this candidate was Barry Winston of Chapel Hill, whose candidacy was announced late yesterday.

In announcing his intention to run, Rule said he was not connected with the group that circulated the recall petition or with the present administration of the paper.

"I am entering this campaign as a completely independent candidate," he said.

He pointed out that his campaign would be based on two major points: economy and neutrality in news coverage.

"However," he added, "my personal editorial policy would be one of moderation with a Southern point of view."

Turning to economy, he pointed out that the Daily Tar Heel represents an investment of several thousand dollars of student funds. "Through economy measures and expanded coverage I believe a much beter paper can be produced for less expense," he said.

PAUL RULE

A 20-year-old junior and journalism major, Rule has been editor and publisher of the weekly South Norfolk (Va.) News since the spring of this year. In addition, he is United Press correspondent for the South Norfolk area.

Currently he is wire editor of the Daily Tar Heel and in the past has worked for a number of papers in the Norfolk-Portsmouth, Va. area.

Rule announced that Grayson Mills, a junior and former Daily Tar Heel staffer, will be his campaign manager.

Deadline Extended In Recall Election

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

A bill "to postpone the deadline for nominations to be in for The Daily Tar Heel recall election until 6 p.m., Nov. 19, 1957" was passed last night by the Student Legislature.

The bill was introduced jointly by John Brooks (SP) and Al Goldsmith (UP). The bill was passed by special orders with an almost unanimous voice vote.

Goldsmith said the bill was not meant to indicate any particular stand on the recall election but was to give the political parties a chance to back candidates if they desired.

Brooks introduced a bill "to establish the North Carolina State Student Legislature Delegation of the University of North Carolina as an independent organization with its officers and members subject to the approval of the Student Legislature.

The bill will go to the ways and means committee.

Leo Wardrup (UP) was elected speaker pro tem over Harold O'Tuel (SP) by a vote of 25-23; the vote was on party lines.

Tog Sanders (UP) was re-elected clerk over Caleb White (SP) by a vote of 28-20. Neal Boden (UP) won the position of sergeant-of-arms over Tom Kearns (SP) by a vote of 24-23.

By acclaimation Jack Lawing (UP) was re-elected chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Jeff Hare (UP), chairman of the Finance Committee; and Lucy Forsyth (UP), chairman of the Rules Committee.

John Brooks (SP) was appointed parliamentarian. This office was formerly elective, but it was felt

Inter-Race Marriage Bill Talked

By DOUGLAS EISELE

Gov. Luther Hodges's charges that State Student Legislature action in Raleigh last week was "immature and irresponsible" drew contrasting and fiery comments from political leaders here Thursday.

UP Chairman Harry Braxton, defending the Governor's comments surrounding a resolution on inter-racial marriages, said Hodges "was exactly right in most everything he said."

At the same time, however, SP Chairman Whit Whitfield said Hodges' comments were "quite provincial to hay the least," and proposed that SSL in the future could "rent a barn in some other county" for its session.

His remark was in answer to the Governor's proposal that future SSL delegations requesting use of the Capitol Building should be asked "who they (the students) represented."

The Governor said Wednesday he "certainly" did not agree with SSL action adopting a resolution urging repeal of state law which prohibits inter-racial marriage. He said he considered the action "somewhat immature and somewhat irresponsible."

Commenting on the inter-racial marriage bill, Whitfield said he does not condone racial inter-marriages, nor do I think that any student delegation does."

"But the fact is," he added, "that many people would like to exercise their own judgement on the matter."

He said that if to obtain use of the Capitol Building the SSL delegates must pass resolutions favorable to state political leaders, "then the usefulness of SSL is ended."

"If the students no longer have a place to present their honest opinions in the state Capitol, then it might be a wise idea to rent a barn in some other county," Whitfield added.

Braxton took an almost opposite stand. When asked for comment on Hodges' proposal that students be questioned before using the Capitol again, he said:

'Character, Scholarship, Leadership' Recognized

Pre-Dawn Rites Tap Seven Carolina Coeds Into Woman's Honorary Society

Seven senior coeds received Carolina's highest honor for women early this morning when they were tapped into the Valkyries, Women's honorary organizaton.

In the secret pre-dawn ceremonies traditional to Valkyrie tappings, these women were recognized for their development of the Valkyrie ideals of character, scholarship, leadership, sound judgement, creativity, service and inspiration to others.

Those recognized were Misses Katherine Keith Coe, art major from Washington, D. C.; Belle Hamilton Corey, sociology major from Atlanta, Ga.; Elizabeth Lloyd Dougherty, religion major from Cincinnati, Ohio; Phyllis Elliot Krafft, religion major from River Forest, Ill.; Edith Ann Morgan, sociology major from Charleston, W. Va.; Marjorie Carol Staub, nursing student from Westfield, N. J.; and Mildred Hoge Whitehurst, math major from Danville, Va.

Citations read to the tappees were:

MISS COE " . . . one who has shown an unusual capacity to realize the needs of others in her campus activities. As a person, her genuiness, human interest, alterness and tireless energy have made her influence felt on the Honor Council, in her sorority and in her associations with her fellow students. Her outstanding work in these fields has warranted such a recognition."

MISS COREY " . . . one who has displayed outstanding executive ability in her positions as president of the YWCA and on the campus orientation committee. Her gracious manner and deep concern for the welfare of others has inspired leadership in her fellow students. As a person, her thoughfulness is a source of comfort to others. Her character and past accomplishment are indicative of the caliber of service which will continue throughout the year."

MISS DOUGHERTY " . . . one who has a keenly inquiring mind and a sincere devotion to her fellow students. Her influence has been felt through her work in the YWCA, the Symposium and the Episcopal student congregation. Here is the capacity to inspire others and to instill in them a measure of her own faith. Her warmth and friendliness have been recognized and are reflected not only in her campus activities but in her daily living."

MISS KRAFFT " . . . one who has exhibited an unusual depth of faith and dedication to the spiritual enrichment of student life at Carolina. She possesses a degree of sensitivity that has enabled her to be aware of the many pressures and problems of a college student and has strived unceasingly for the betterment of these conditions. Miss Krafft has inspired many persons with whom she has worked. She has given to others a sense of dedication as program chairman in the Y, has been a source for zeal among students in Christian student groups, has done much to develop a 'closeness' within her sorority. In all phases of Carolina life she has done much to propagate the high ideals for which she stands."

MISS MORGAN " . . . who has reflected a sincere interest in her fellow students by her vivacious and efficient leadership in her dormitory. A sincerity of purpose and a genuine spirit of helpfulness are radiated in her active participation in Presbyterian student groups and YWCA acivities. Her dedicated spirit and cheerfulness are a source of inspiration to all who come in contact with her.

MISS STAUB " . . . one has contributed much to the program for student nurses by her untiring and unselfish concern for others. By her leadership in her dormitory and through the local and state student nurses associaton, she has exemplified sincerity, courage, and a constant striving for those high ideals in which she believes."

MISS WHITEHURST " . . . one who has exemplified in her field outstanding leadership in her willingness to serve both the campus and the individual. As chairman of Women's Honor Council, she has shown a basic understanding of the rules and with tact and preserverance followed through in their administration. With her deep concern and high sense of judgment, Miss Whitehurst has led exceptionally this very important phase of Carolina life.

Fat, Sleek Americanism Or Freedom From Tyranny

"Nothing has occurred in the international situation during the past year which would indicate the necessity for any major change in (our defense) policies and concepts."—Former Republican Secretary of Defense Charles E. Wilson.

We have often hit at the complacent attitude which prevails among jingoes and smug advocates of "undefeatable Americanism."

There are obviously too many Americans who propound fat, sleek, invincable Americanism, Americans who are so optimistic they glaze over the entire threat of Communist tyranny and Soviet technological achievement by remaining smug and complacent and "undefeatable.

We have tremendous faith in Americanism and the American way of life—particularly as opposed to Godless Communism. But we definitely feel that, ridiculous Soviet propaganda discounted, America's world leadership is severely threatened.

For complacent Americans throughout the nation, George R. Price, fellow off the American Association for the Advancement of Science, had these startling remarks to make in this week's Life magazine:

"Let us think back to 1945. At that time the U.S. enjoyed power, prestige and security far surpassing any other nation's. Russia was a war-ravaged land with no atomic bomb and an air force vastly inferior to ours. Today the two nations are almost equal. It is true that we are still a little ahead, but that is not what is important. What is important is the rate at which the Soviets have been gaining on us. For 12 years we have watched them increase in military power with a swiftness that is without parallel in the entire record of history—and yet this has meant no more to us than rumors of barbarian unrest in the provinces must have meant to some fat Roman lolling in the baths of Caracalla shortly before the Visigoths sacked his city."

Concerning standard American platitudes and complacent tone, Price answered these with caustic and perceptive statements:

Attitude — "This country has been around for a long time. We have been through a lot of close scrapes and have always won out in the end."

Answer — But the citizen of Rome at the end of the Fifth Century A.D. could look back over a peril-filled history of more than a thousand years. Yet the end was soon to come.

Attitude — "Most of the things one worries about never happen anyway. There is always somebody warning that the end of the world is coming. But it pays to be an optimist."

Answer—Always? The pessimistic Jews who fled Germany as Hitler rose to power still live, but the optimists are turned to ashes and vapor, and there are many former optimists in the slave camps of Siberia.

Attitude—"We should have faith in our leaders. After all, they are in a position to know far more about things than you can know."

Answer — All nations that have perished have had leaders who were in a position to know more about things than we can know."

Price has ejected a note of pessimism into the issue of international supremacy.

Perhaps if more Americans, including President Eisenhower, adopted a bit of this pessimistic outlook and actually implemented far-reaching decisions and policies, our smugly complacent attitude would vanish to darkest oblivion.

Televisionitis and Cadillacism or freedom?

Americans must decide.

Now.

Political Party Stands Offer Refreshing Change

Regardless of specific stands, it is indeed admirable to see University political party leaders speaking their minds on the legislation promulgated during sessions of the State Student Legislature.

In the past, there has been a dominant trend toward political endorsement of "God, country and motherhood," and political censuring of "Communism, atheism and bastardy." Party heads — University Party and Student Party—have always been reticent to speak on anything unless it promised sure-fire political capital.

Concerning the SSL's passage of a resolution removing all legal impediments to racial intermarriage, state newspapers have had presses running at pandemonium pace—and they have often misconstrued the measure's intent.

On the local campus, University Party Chairman Harry Braxton so opposed the actions of SSL delegates that he advocated the open election of delegates, or complete abolition of the University's delegation to the same.

Student Party Chairman Whit Whitfield offered his rebuttal to this argument by saying that delegates are chosen on a non-partisan, merit basis; and that the State Student Legislature offered an excellent opportunity for students from state colleges and universities to mingle and propose legislation without fear of political intimidation.

Perhaps there will be vital differences and policies at stake when spring elections roll around.

This will indeed be refreshing. In past elections, there have been the customary promises — but no vital differences at stake.

Courage to speak convictions is admirable in any segment of the campus, nation or world.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Golfclub Goofs & Wall Street Pendulum Pull

Whit Whitfield

The fate of a nation, maybe even a world, hinges on a stroke of a golfclub. This sounds a little farfetched, but is it?

In a capitalistic society such as ours, the going concern is business, and the heartline of business is Wall Street, USA. What happens when Ike goofs? The market falls.

When he makes a popular play for the masses (such as a speaking tour) the market rises. Any time a golfer gives up a golfing vacation such as he is doing next month just to inform the people is assured a popularity boost.

It would seem that Wall Street is a giant pendulum coordinated with the moods of our chief executive. When he is up, they are up. And when he is down, they are way down. Nuff said?

A birdie probably wouldn't cause a great stir, but what effect would a double bogey have? Too many in one day might just cause the president to be in a bad mood, and people in bad moods don't always make the proper decisions, especially when they are poorly informed by incompetent assistants. Who knows? Maybe he would authorize troops to enforce integration in New York restaurants where lip service is paid to equality, and where the negro is accepted as a race but not as an individual. Ridiculous assumption? Specious argument? Sure it is.

We see where the Student Legislature defeated a bill calling for wastebaskets on campus? This is the only right thing to do in our opinion. Why put wastebaskets around campus? Tradition has it that paper or other refuse should be thrown around indiscriminately, not in containers. Some students might not know what they are, not having seen any before on campus. Besides this—just think how many groundskeepers this move would put out of work. If the students obliged by not littering the campus, what would they do.

Surely the Groundskeepers' Local 647 is behind this recent manuever. It might be a good idea for the Student Legislature to subpoena the officers of this organization and see what the true facts are now in order to avert a scandal later.

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Of Flu And Trembling And Hypos; SSL And Freedom Of Expression . .

EDITOR:

We have it straight from the horse's mouth—the Asian Flu vaccine shot is a cinch! Paying a visit to the infirmary yesterday to have some football-banged ribs checked, we tremblingly decided while there to "get it over with," and thenceforward marched to the reception desk, picked up a card, and shakingly walked (very slowly) to the treatment room off to the side and at the rear of the long corridor. A white blur appeared to take the card and half audible words trickled to our brain—something like, "follow me."

Standing in the room with sleeve rolled up, the foot-long hypodermic was awaited along with the pint of vaccine supposed to go into one's arm. Weaving there in a state of semiconsciousness, we seemed to be sliding down a spiral banister bedecked in colors of red, yellow and their combinations. But just before keeling over, other words seeped through, "Okay, that's it."

And that was it. Reviving, a very small needle was noted which couldn't possibly have held that pint. On inquiry, though, it was found that, indeed, we were now fairly assured of safety from long weeks of battling the Asian Flu, and that the similarity between this and the polio shot was simply that the two were identical.

So, Mr. Editor, the point is this: Tell the people to go on down and get their shots. Dr. Hedgepeth says there is plenty of free vaccine now, but that it will be taken elsewhere in about a week. The good students have had their polio injection and this is the same thing. It isn't a painful ordeal at all—it's a cinch . . . (No fool'n, fellas)

EDITOR:

In Wednesday's Raleigh Times I read that Gov. Hodges accused the State Student Legislature of taking advantage of the state's hospitality last weekend. He classed the assembly's action as "immature," the story said.

Perhaps so. College students, even those of the caliber attending the SSL, do occasionally make mistakes due to the lack of the experience of years.

Yet, because I was a delegate to the Legislature last year, I know all are conscientious, hard working individuals who have the best interests of the state and nation at heart. Hodges asked, the Times reported, "Who do they (the delegates) represent?"

The answer to that is: no one but themselves. They stand for thousands of young people over the state, however, just as the representatives in the General Assembly stand for 4.5 million citizens. We all know that even our elder lawmakers act immaturely, as in inaction on reapportionment and action of obscentity statutes indicates.

At Carolina the delegates are selected by an interim committee on the basis of speaking ability, knowledge of parliamentary procedure and current events. I doubt if many elected state officials could score highly on portions of the quiz administered. And because the students officially represent no one, they are free to speak out on issues of the day that politicians will not touch.

This freedom of expression of the youth of North Carolina colleges should not be bridled in any manner. The State wants to do it, by possibly supervising the agenda, and UNC wants to do it, by popular election of delegates.

Both "censorship" ideas should be discarded for the good of the state. As the situation today is, only youth is free from entanglements enough to speak freely. Let them keep that privilege.

A lot of you missed a great get-together held over at Cobb Dormitory the other afternoon.

The music, furnished by the Bobby Hans Band, was out of this world and thoroughly enjoyed by everyone.

PRESIDENTIAL MEMO:

President Speaks On SSL Dispute . .

SONNY EVANS

The storm of controversy which has raged on the editorial pages of the state newspapers over the actions of the State Student Legislature this past weekend is due in large measure to misreporting, misstatements, and misinterpretation. Over the course of the last twelve years, the State Student Legislature has done a great deal of good in both giving students the experience of meeting with students from other colleges to discuss the issues of the day and in teaching these students the responsibilities that go along with government. It has become a body unique in the United States and one of which the State of North Carolina can well be proud.

The University of North Carolina has a great tradition of respecting the rights of students to vote various convictions regardless of whether or not they anger, criticize, or disagree. Though they were not elected specifically for this meeting, many of the students here who went were responsible leaders in other positions on the campus, and they split on many of the votes just as the student body would split if a vote were taken.

When a newspaper, such as the Raleigh News and Observer, does not report the truth from an assembly such as this, then we students are virtually powerless. Contrary to the newspaper account, the highly talked about legalized prostitution bill failed by an overwhelming majority in both the House and the Senate; in fact, it was not even on the official agenda, but came up from an individual on the floor of the assembly. The bill to delete all laws preventing intermarriage of races, introduced by Duke University and debated for several hours, was an effort by the students not to either condemn or condone but to protect the civil liberties of the individual. The obscenity bill denied the unwise censorship rights of sheriffs in the individual counties to arbitrarily determine what was obscene and did not abolish all obscenity laws in the State, an impression which many people received.

It is a shame that much of the good done by the students who conducted themselves responsibly has been lost in the shuffle of an unjustified controversy. SSL condemned Governor Faubus for his flaunting of the court order and his disregard for the law of the land and thus became one of the few official voices in the South to speak out for the people of Little Rock who elected their Board of Education and sided with the judge.

It is our hope that the people of North Carolina understand that the sensationalism surrounding the State Student Legislature is unjustified and is a product of newspaper irresponsibility. There is nothing to be ashamed of when students conduct themselves sensibly and with conviction, believing in the freedom of expression for which this University and the state have always stood.

FROM OLD GOLD AND BLACK:

Tribble Rumors Are Nebulous . .

Once again there are rumors of a move among alumni to put Dr. Harold W. Tribble out of office as president of the College. And, as usual, the reasons of his opponents are strangely nebulous.

For two years, a certain faction of old grads has threatened to organize a move that would take the presidency away from Dr. Tribble and, supposedly, place in office someone in whom the College and its friends can exhibit more confidence.

Since the fall of 1955, Wake Forest has made the headlines innumerable times with stories of investigations, votes of confidence and violent clashes among the trustees regarding the school's administration. The publicity has been anything but favorable, and the rumblings within the College's framework added noticeably to the troubles of the move to Winston-Salem.

An investigation begun by the trustees into Dr Tribble's administration back in the infamous fall of '55 was cut off before it was completed. Or so the Board claims. At any rate, the findings of this so-called investigation were never released. But the groans of protest continued and some came even louder.

A few critics of the president have been forthright enough to offer a few reasonably valid reasons for their attitudes. Still, these were at best shallow statements that in most cases could be refuted as readily as they were contrived.

The average student knows little of the workings of the administration; most care even less. And yet sentiment for both sides in this issue runs rather high in the student body.

Perhaps there are purposes in the evasive tactics employed by those opposing the administration when they are faced—point blank—with a request for concrete reasons. We realize that, out of courtesy to all concerned, no specific information has been released publicly.

Still, we feel that any matter of controversy can be settled best in the open air of fact. Many times, a lack of information can prove more damaging than the truth.

If those who allegedly have strong reason to wish Dr. Tribble removed can back up their claims, there's no time like the present. Otherwise, they should swallow whatever petty grudges they may hold and quit throwing darts at the administration of a man whose achievements speak well for him.

The College can scarcely afford to stay in the unfavorable rays of the public spotlight any longer.

A big question remains to be answered.

Why?

that the office would be better filled if it was removed from politics.

Hussein Naser, former President of the Student Body of Cairo University, told the legislators there would be a student from UNC invited to Cairo next year.

Naser is presently on a $1,000 scholarship provided by the UNC Student Government. After his talk he received a standing ovation.

The new SP Floorleader is Pat Adams from Asheboro, N. C. He replaces Tom Long.

The new UP assistant Floorleader is David Biren of Arlington, Va.; he replaces Charlie Huntington.

As this meeting was the first session of the twenty-fourth assembly of the legislature, there was no old business to come before the body. There was 100 per cent attendance.

The UP legislators were Charlie Gray, Dick Robinson, Dave Biren, Graham Claytor, Blake LaMar, Charlie Pittman, Tim Stevens, Bob Turner, Neal Boden, Jerry Oppenheimer, Leo Wardrup and Fred Harris.

Other UP's included Craven Brewer, Misses Linda Chappell, Lucy Forsyth, Diana Johnson, Ann Harvey and Martha Wilkinson.

Other SP's included Misses Jeannie M. Meador, Paddy Wall and Connie Bernstein.

Party, Party—A La Phi Kap

More Germans weekend news—This time we travel over to the Phi Kap House for a look at last weekend's fun. Friday after attending the concert and dance, Phi Kaps and their dates partied at the House.

Saturday found them after the game enjoying a buffet lunch at the House, followed by a party that night. For a finishing touch Sunday, the Jack Victor Combo played at a combo party at the House.

DU Weekending

DUs also spent the weekend partying. After the concert and dance Friday night, they had a combo over to furnish music for their party. And Saturday, after attending the game en masse they partied together at the house on into the night.

Pi Kap Masquerade

Pika Parties

A party Saturday after the game at the Pika House got things underway after they cheered for the Tar Heels en masse out at Kenan Stadium. That night the scene changed as they journeyed out to "The Shack" to party. But the weather began playing such a big role in the party, that Pikas and their dates moved the fun back to the House to avoid a big freeze. A Sunday brunch ended the fun.

Lambda Chi Fun

As a sidelight to the big weekend, the Lambda Chis and their dates attended the game together Saturday and continued the fun that evening when they had a cabin party on the Hillsboro Road.

With The Phi Delts

Music played a big role in the Phi Delts' weekending. After the concert, Phi Delts and their dates were entertained by a combo at the house later that day.

Then on Saturday, after going to the game together, the Doug Clark Combo was on the social calendar with more music. Sunday, they ended the weekend with another combo party at the House.

Alexander Entertains

A touch of beauty was added to Alexander Dorm yesterday afternoon when dorm residents entertained three campus beauties in their social room.

All three coeds have been chosen recently to represent the dorm in beauty contest. Honored at the event were Judith Rock, Alexander representative in the homecoming queen contest, and Claire Pike and Mary Moore Mason—who are Alexander candidates in the Yack Beauty Contest.

Pi Phi Pledges

Recently elected officers of the Pi Phi Pledge class are Nancy Adams of Miami, Fla., president; Libbie Gregory of Halifax, vice president; Joyce King Strickland of Smithfield, secretary; Jane Duncan of Sparta, treasurer; Ginny Pearce of Sparks, Md., scholarship chairman; Jean McCauley of Bluefield, W. Va., activities chairman; Bea Hunger of Montclair, N.J., social chairman; Jane Hatchett, historian; and Mop Wilkinson of Beckley, W. Va., censor.

Political Leaders Say

"It serves the SSL right."

He maintained that SSL should not meet unless it represented UNC students, and denied charges by Whitfield that UP's proposal for a new method of selection of delegates was a "political maneuver."

"His accusations concerning 'political motivations' of my attack on the SSL are a brave attempt to hide the facts of the case," Braxton said of Whitfield .

"Because it (the UNC SSL delegation) is supported by Student Government funds, I believe the Student Government should have a say-so-in choosing the delegates,' he added.

Braxton proposed that if delegates to the mock assembly were not elected by popular ballot in the future, the Student Legislature could be asked to approve delegates to SSL.

Whitfield, recalling action last year which called for repeal of the Pearsall Plan, noted that Governor Hodges made "no comments of a derogatory nature" in an address to SSL following the action.

He said the State Student Legislature "is not now, nor has it ever been, a mouthpiece for the state politicians."

"It is merely a voice of student opinion which invariably is more liberal than that of state politicians," Whitfield added.

Whitfield said that Hodges' comments followng the SSL action on the interracial marriage bill "demonstrates a lack of understanding for the reasons behind passage of the bill."

Bodies Sighted In Air Tragedy

HONOLULU, Nov. 14 (AP) —Nine bodies from the lost airliner "Romance Of The Skies"—one of them still strapped in a seat—were sighted floating amid debris in the Pacific Ocean today 830 miles northeast of Honolulu.

The Pan American stratocruiser, with 44 persons aboard, vanished silently and mysteriouly last Friday afternoon on a routine flight from San Franscisco for Honolulu.

Today's sighting, first tangible clue to its fate was made by a plane from the Aircraft Carrier Philippine Sea, spearhead of a 6-day-long sea and air search that was the greatest in peacetime history of the Pacific.

The Navy, in announcing the sighting, at 8:40 a. m. (1:40 p. m. EST) reported the carrier was about 75 miles from the scene and should reach it within three hours.

A protracted further search was indicated to determine what happened to all of the 36 passengers and 8 crew members who were aboard the stratocruiser. Pan American Airways headquarters in San Francisco withheld comment pending further word.

Marketing quotas have been in effect continuously for peanuts since 1949.

More Applicants Are Wanted For United Nations Trip

The United Nations Seminar to New York City, sponsored jointly by the YW-YMCA, has been scheduled for Nov. 21-24. The group will travel to New York in cars provided by seminar participants.

The seminar, a study of "Human Rights," will open on Thursday night, Nov. 21, with a speaker.

Friday's schedule includes morning meetings, a special briefing on "Human Rights" at 1 p. m., a luncheon at 2 p. m. in the Delegate Dining Room of the U. N. Building and visits with representatives from several delegations to discuss human rights in their countries as related to the provision for human rights in U. N. charter.

An evaluation of the day's meetings will be held Friday evening.

with Dr. Frank Graham, first president of the Consolidated University, as speaker.

The time from Saturday noon until the group returns to Chapel Hill on Sunday is free.

The group will leave for the seminar after classes on Wednesday, Nov. 20. The trip will cost approximately $30, which includes transportation, room at the Woodstock Hotel and an estimate on meals and registration.

The UN Seminar has accomodation for 25 people. Ten have signed up so far.

Anyone who is inerested in attending the seminar has been asked to sign up in the Y-building information office.

The committee will make out a form letter at its next meeting on Tuesday to send out to college dailies and other professional newspapers and organizations.

The letter will request information pertaining to editorial selection and staff organization and training, the physical plant, budget and salaries, advertising and circulation, editorial responsibility and the relationship of the paper to student government.

Committee Chairman Adams said yesterday that he was satisfied with the initial meeting of the Newspaper Research Committee.

"I feel that this committee will bring forth many worthwhile suggestions if today's meeting was an indication of its interest and sincerity," he said.

Under the Student Legislative act providing for the committee, the bill specifies that the committee submit its findings and any recommendations to the Legislature by Feb. 1, 1958.

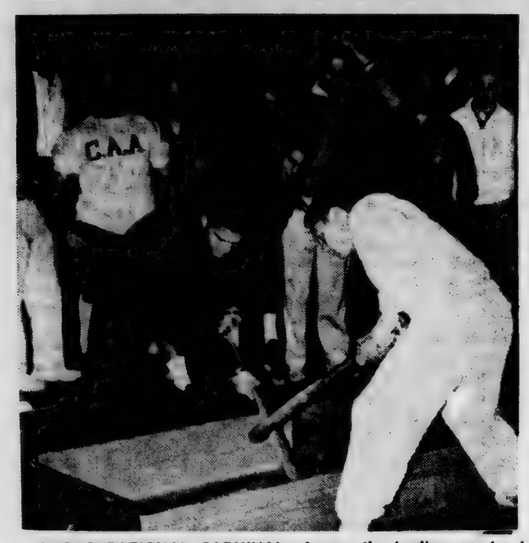
HOW "WEASELS" REPLACE DOGS TO UNLOCK ANTARCTICA'S SECRETS

ARE the mountains of Antarctica really higher than Everest? Will its melting ice eventually flood our cities? Do its frigid 200-mph winds create the world's weather? Do its gigantic coal deposits mean there's gold, oil, uranium too?

For 137 years men couldn't stay in Antarctica long enough to find out. All they had were dogs —and courage. Today, machines do the muscle work so teams of American scientists can stay the year around to unlock Antarctica's secrets. Jeep-like weasels use electronic "dish-pans" (see illustration) to probe for crevasses that can swallow 20-story buildings. Bulldozers carve roads across frozen seas so giant tractors can haul in 60-ton supply loads.

It's all the result of Better-ness—the American conviction that nothing's impossible. And the machines that give you Better-ness depend on Timken® tapered roller bearings. They roll the load—and they're tapered to take the crunching impact from all directions.



You'll find Timken bearings virtually eliminating friction, reducing maintenance and keeping machines on the go wherever America's wheels and shafts turn. By pioneering new markets and uses, we've become the world's biggest manufacturer of tapered roller bearings—and we're still growing fast.

WANT TO HELP CREATE BETTER-ness? Creating and selling Better-ness offers great rewards. To get full details, send for your free copy of "Career Opportunities at the Timken Company". Write The Timken Roller Bearing Company, Canton 6, Ohio.

IDC Penalizes Students For Dorm Actions

Two students were tried at the official meting of the Interdormitory Council Court for violating rules governing university residence halls.

Patrick Leonard, clerk, reported that one student was found guilty of attaching a pencil sharpener to his desk with screws, which constituted damage of university property. The court repremanded him and fined him $2.50.

The other student was charged with violating quiet hours and breaking a soft drink bottle in the hall of the dormitory. The student was removed from his present dormitory residence and was placed on indefinite probation during the period of removal.

Athletic Head At N.C .State Is Charged

RALEIGH, Nov. 14 (AP) — Roy B. Clogston, director of athletics at North Carolina State College, was charged with assault on a minor today as the result of an incident that allegedly occurred at Reynolds Coliseum last night.

Police Lt. O. C. Jordan said the warant was sworn out by Mrs. Elizabeth McGhee of Raleigh and charged Clogston with an assault on her son, Jimmy, 14.

Mrs. McGhee told police that her son sat down to watch the Harlem Globetrotters after selling peanuts and drinks at the Coliseum and that Clogston asked the boy to move.

According to the police report, Mrs. McGhee said that as Jimmy was walking away, Clogston took him by the neck and escorted him to an entrance. There, she said, Clogston gave the boy a kick and told him never to return to the Coliseum.

Jordan said the warrant was served on Clogston today and that he was cited to appear in domestic relations court for trial of the charge.

Clogston was out of the city and was not available for comment.

QUIGG THIRD IN SCORING

Carolina basketball star Joe Quigg, who sustained a leg injury in an intra-squad scrimmage which all incapacitate him for the season, was third in scoring last year. Quigg scored 319 points in 31 games for a 10.3 average per game. The 6' 9" center threw in the tying and winning free throws to defeat Kansas for the National title last year.

Carolina's only undefeated team of the fall is Dale Ranson's cross country runners. Tar Heel runners have won two dual and two triangular meets.

Meet Duke Here At 3 O'Clock

By JIM PURKS

With only a day's rest following a rough tie game with Virginia in Charlottesville, the Carolina soccer team will face arch-rival Duke here today at 3 p.m. on Fetzer Field.

It will be the sixth game for the hard-luck Tar Heels, who have a 2-2-1 record for the season.

The Duke game marks the third straight conference game for the Carolina squad, which lost to Maryland, 4-2, last week and tied Virginia this Wednesday, 4-4.

Out For Revenge

Carolina will be out for revenge today as it was humbled last year in Durham, 3-0, by the Blue Devils.

Coach Marvin Allen's talented squad will be without the services of two key first stringers in today's game. Goalie Jim Rattay was lost to the team for the remainder of the season in the Virginia game when he was struck under the left eye by a player's knee and suffered a fractured cheekbone.

Reserve goalie Nick Zlotnicki, who did a creditable job of guarding the Carolina goal against the Cavaliers during the second half, will be in the goal again for the Tar Heels.

Another key defenseman, right fullback Dave Corkey, won't be in the Carolina lineup due to a reoccurrence of a stomach ailment which has plagued him all season.

On the forward line, a man to watch will be fleet-footed Mike Thompson, now being called "twinkle toes" because of his phenomenal scoring pace for the Tar Heels at the center forward position.

Thompson Top Scorer

In the five games played so far this year, Thompson has scored 8 of Carolina's total of 14 goals. His biggest day was in the Tar Heels' loss to Lynchburg College when he scored all three goals.

Ted Smith and Tom Rand will work with Thompson at the inside positions. Rick Grausman will be at left wing with Coleman Barks at the right wing slot.

Today's game will mark the last home game for three of Coach Allen's veterans. Defensemen Ted Youhanna and Bill Blair will play their last game at Fetzer Field, while left inside Ted Smith will also be playing his last home game.

BEAT DOOK

Cagers Open Season Dec. 7

By BILL KNG

The basketball season is fast coming upon us.

On December 7, the nation's number one basketball team will make its first appearance in Woollen Gym (probably to the tune of "Sweet Georgia Brown") as it begins defense of its national championship against Clemson.

Yes, pretty soon football 1957 will be only a memory and Carolina students and fans will begin a familiar trek to Woollen Gym and other nearby cities to watch Carolina's tall and talented cagers attempt to continue to ride a winning skein that now reads 32 in a row.

The Tar Heels have had their noses to the grindstone since October 21 as they prepare for another tough slate in 1957-58—this time bearing the label "the best in the land." This is, frankly, an unenvious label because it means that everybody will be shooting to knock the props from under the high-riding Tar Heels.

Outstanding Returnees

But the 1956-57 'Coach of The Year' Frank McGuire has another talented assemblage similar to and consisting largely of members of that great squad which captured all honors last season.

Gone, of course ,is the big gun, Carolina's great All-American, Lennie Rosenbluth. But returning is a steller group of Sophomores and the crux of the team which, along with Rosenbluth, went through the best teams in the country to cop the National Collegiate Athletic Association title last year.

Lost for the season also is big Joe Quigg, the center who dropped in two free throws against Kansas last March to give the Tar Heels the NCAA title; and here lies the Tar Heel's biggest problem.

Quigg, injured in an intra-squad scrimmage last week, will be a tough man to replace. It has thrown the matter of a starting lineup, previously considered relatively easy, into a tither.

Commenting on the loss of Quigg yesterday, McGuire had this to say:

Lineup Changes

"Losing Joe is a tremendous blow to us. His absence will probably leave us with an indefinite lineup until around the first of January. We'll have to do a lot of experimenting to find a man to take his place and the only way we can do it is to give the boys some game experience. A boy can look great in practice, but he can't be actually tested until he plays."

Otherwise, according to McGuire, things are going along fine for the Tar Heels. "The boys are hustling and really looking fine," he commented. "Everybody really wants to play."

At present, McGuire has fourteen men on the practice floor, although only twelve of them will be able to dress for games.

The Tar Heels practice every afternoon from four until six and occasionally McGuire will call an extra session at night. The Tar Heel coach stressed the fact that these practice sessions are open to the public. "The only time we will have a closed session," he said, "is when he have some special defense or play pattern which we want to work on for an upcoming opponent."

No Gain For Fullmer In Fight Tonight

NEW YORK, Nov. 14 (AP) — Gene Fullmer has everything to lose and little to gain in tomorrow night's middleweight match with Neal Rivers, a rough customer from Las Vegas.

The 10 - rounder at Madison Square Garden will be the third start for Fullmer since he was knocked out By Sugar Ray Robinson in Chicago, May 1. Robinson's left hook ended Fullmer's short reign as Middleweight champ. He had beaten Robinson in 15 rounds Jan. 2 for the title.

Although Marv Jenson, Fullmer's manager, is flashing a copy of a letter from Jim Norris, president of the International Boxing Club, to prove Fullmer has been promised the next title shot, he still is waiting.

Carmen Basilio, who in turn dethroned Robinson Sept. 23, hasn't made a move, pending a decision by Robinson on their agreement for a rematch.

University Changes Tests For Entrance

By ANN FRYE

The Consolidated University is now acting under a new policy of entrance examinations for students applying for admission in September, 1958.

For the past two years the University has operated under selective admissions tests administered by the University.

The policy now requires that candidates for the 1958 freshman class make satisfactory scores on the scholastic aptitude tests of the College Entrance Examination Board.

College Board exams were acceptable substitutes for the University's admissions tests in 1956 and 1957.

Approval of this policy came this fall by the Board of Trustees.

However, before the change-over to College Board exams could be activated, the University waited for some assurance from the State Budget Commission that financial losses from the exams would be reimbursed.

Under the plan to give the aptitude tests, anyone taking the tests pays a $7 fee to the College Entrance Board of New Jersey, which administers the exams. And the University has said that any North Carloina resident admitted to the freshman class would have the $7 test fee credited toward his tuition payments.

Financial losses by the three units of the University, because of incurring the $7 fee for each of its North Carolina freshmen, was estimated to be $27,000 each year.

This financial voss by the University neared elimination Saturday when the State Budget Commission said it would recommend to the Governor and Council of State that the University be reimbursed from Contingency and Emergency funds.

The reasoning behind the University's state policy of deducting the $7 from a freshman's tuition is that the University bore the expense of the admissions test it administered in 1956 and 1957.

The State Budget Commission Saturday also urged the State Board of Higher Education to draw up a plan under which aptitude tests would be given to all high school graduates in the state.

Unlike the selective admissions tests given by the University in 1956 and this year, the aptitude tests are designed to find any hidden or undeveloped talent and not merely to test the knowledge of a student.

If the aptitude tests are given to all high school graduates, better vocational guidance and determination of qualifications for admission to college are expected results.

Recommendation of introducing College Board exams as one criteria for admission to the University came from the University Testing Committee after a study of the selective admissions tests and aptitude tests.

An information sheet containing the dates and places of College Board exams in North Carolina was sent out this week by the Admissions office to high school prinvipals and applicants in North Carolina.

The first date the exams will be given is December 7. Other exams will be given in January, February, March, May and August, 1958.

Manhunt Seeks Killer

RALEIGH, Nov. 15 (AP) — Grim-faced lawmen across the nation watched today for some sign of a 36-year-old ex-convict who bragged that he would be his brother's keeper - and who allegedly slew two North Carolina highway patrolmen he thought would keep him from his mission.

The watch was especially tense in the Southeast. For the fugitive, Frank Edward Wetzel - only a petty criminal when he escaped Oct. 21 from a New York State mental hospital - had boasted to fellow hospital inmates that he was going to Mississippi to free his brother from the death house.

State patrolmen in Mississippi, where National Guardsmen have been patrolling the penitentiary that holds William Wetzel, 37, were warned today not to take any chances with Frank Wetzel.

William is under death sentence for the April, 1953 slaying of a fellow prisoner. No execution date has been set because William's lawyers plan to appeal the sentence to the U .S. Supreme Court.

Private citizens were asked to be on the lookout for Frank Wetzel, and thousands of "Wanted" circulars were distributed to post offices. The hunted man was described as 5-10, weighing 160 pounds, brown hair, and a scar on the upper lip.

The fugitive had been in and out of New York State jails since he was 12, mostly for such convictions as assault and larceny. He was sent to the mental hospital at Willard, N. Y. last September for observation. There, before his escape, he bragged that he would go to Mississippi and free his brother.

Talent Tryouts Slated Monday

Tryouts for the Carolina Cavalcade Talent show will be held in the afternoon and evening of Monday, November 18, in Memorial Hall, Mrs. Eleanor Riggins Brawley, director, announced today.

The show is scheduled to take place in Memorial Hall at 8 p. m. on November 26. The producer of the show will be G. C. Pridgen.

The director announced Bob Fox as stage manager, Jack Mitchell assistant stage manager and Ed Crow as set designer. The Embers Orchestra will furnish music between acts and for a background for the master of ceremonies.

This year's program will not be competitive, but will be presented for entertainment only, according to Mrs. Brawley.

Any person interested in participating in the show is urged to register for a try-out time at the information office of the YWCA, or contact Mrs. Brawley in Graham Memorial Building.

The Embers Orchestra is directed by Cal Huber. It is made up of former professional musicians of name bands who are now employed in other vocations in the Chapel Hill area.

The Y-Nite Committee and GMAB will sponsor the talent show.

Some old talent which will appear is Les Sutorius and combo, Nick Kernes with his rock and roll piano, Jerry Farber, piano comedian, Pee Wee Batten ,and Hoke Simpson.

World In Brief

Space Boss

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—(AP) —Secretary of Defense McElroy said today he will appoint a single boss to manage such space programs as satellites and anti-missile missiles.

McElroy said that within a month the Defense Department hopes to name a new officer to be the "single manager" of what he termed "upstream" type projects such as the anti-missile missile and military application of outer space vehicles.

The job will be separate from one held by William M. Holaday, McElroy's guided missile aide. Holaday will continue to have supervision over the perfection of intermediate range and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

He said this country will be hard pushed to meet its timetable for launching a fully instrumented satellite into orbit by next March.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15 — Vincent Jimmy Squillante, reputed boss of New York's garbage hauling rackets, refused today to tell Senate investigators whether he is in the Mafia Black Hand mob, a secret Society of criminals.

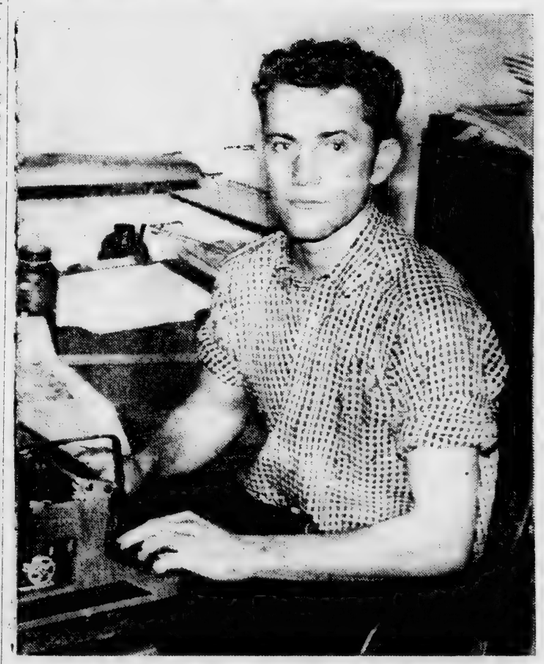
McGuire To Get Notice Of Contract Extension

A letter to Athletic Director Chuck Erickson officially notifying him of the extension of Coach Frank Mcguire's contract here was in the mail today.

Chancellor William Aycock said Erickson's office will turn the letter over to McGuire, notifying him that the Executive Committee of the Board of Trustees has extended the contract for a five-year period at an undisclosed salary.

Meanwhile, however, McGuire declined comment on the contract which world retain him as the Tar Heel basketball coach. It would become effective July 1, 1958.

Chancellor Aycock said in a report released Tuesday that he requested approval of a renewed contract for McGuire on the recommendation of the Athletic Council.



The Executive Committee of the trustees then passed the recommendation, although complete terms of the contract have not yet been worked out.

Public Debate Among Recall Candidates Set For Monday

NEIL BASS

Editor Predicts Voters To Uphold 'Free Expression'

By BILL CHESHIRE

Plans got underway today for a public debate among the contestants in the recall race for editor of the Daily Tar Heel. Sponsored by GMAB, UP and SP, the debate will be held in conjunction with informal meetings of both campus political parties and is scheduled for 7 p.m. in Gerrard Hall Monday.

All three candidates—Barry Winston, Paul Rule and Editor Neil Bass—expressed their willingness to participate in this meeting. Benny Thomas, president of GMAB, will serve as moderator.

Following the discussion in Gerrard Hall, the two political parties will hold regular meetings at which they will decide whether to endorse a particular candidate for the office of editor, and if so, which one.

Commenting on the proposed debate, Editor Bass expressed the hope that as many students as possible would attend.

"I feel the open forum is an excellent idea,' he said. "The entire student body should definitely have the opportunity 'to hear all sides of the present recall movement."

Bass also urged "a strong vote" in the "recall" election, which is slated for November 26. "A strong vote will definitely negate the votes of the organized recall minority," he said.

"I sincerely feel," he added, "that the students will support free editorial expression, regardless of disagreement on particular issues."

"The student body does not want a non-controversial student newspaper—a paper in which only pat platitudes are expounded upon—agreeable, pat platitudes." He also implied that the movement to unseat him was the work of a "political clique." He predicted, however, that their efforts would meet with little success.

"The student body wants a free student newspaper," he said, "not one dominated by a political clique—not one severely hamstrung by periodical threats of recall."

He also indicated that the recall movement will not coerce him into modifying his editorial policy. "I may be removed," he said, "but I will not be intimidated."

Barry Winston, one of the two candidates opposing Bass, likewise urged as many students as possible to attend the candidates' debate Monday night.

"I feel that this will be an ideal opportunity for the clarification of all the issues involved," he said.

Business, Economics Will Have Closer Link

An increased practical application of economics to business operation was predicted by Princeton economist Oskar Morgenstern this week in a UNC seminar talk.

Dr. Morgenstern, addressing the U N C Business Administration School's seminar in economics and business, said that the current "breaking with tradition" may prove to be the biggest development in economics in over a century.

"Economics is becoming more abstract, technical and abstruse," he said, "but, simultaneously, it is becoming more practical and useful."

The director of Princeton University's economics research project noted that the new trend is bringing about a "blurring in the sharp distinction between 'economics' and 'business economics.' This merging would be healthful for both the theoretical and empirical fields.

"It is remarkable that economists have paid so little attention to decision-making by big businessmen." Dr. Morgenstern said. Careful calculation goes into each component part of the decision, he commented, but the final choice often rests almost solely on intuition.

In discussing problem solving through application of economic theory, Dr. Morgenstern commented that the electronic computer is the greatest tool ever devised for the social scientist.

"What the microscope has been to the natural scientist, the computer can be for the social scientist—opening new worlds," he continued.

Born and educated in Austria, Dr. Morgenstern directed business cycle research at the University of Vienna before coming to America during the 1930's. Now professor of economics at Princeton, he is well known for his book, "The Theory of Games and Economic Behavior," which he co-authored with the late John von Neuman, noted developer of electronic computers.

CLUES UNCOVERED

HONOLULU, Nov. 15 — (AP) — Fire-scarred wreckage and broken bodies provided grim clues today to the mystery as to why Pan American's "Romance of the Skies" plunged 10,000 feet into the Pacific a week ago without one radioed word of trouble.

Eternal injuries and broken bones of the 17 bodies recovered made clear the big stratocruiser hit the sea with terrific force.

The fact most of the bodies were shoeless and clad in life jackets suggested the 44 plane occupants were aware a ditching was being attempted.

Whether fire broke out before or after the big plane hit was not clear. But the Navy said there was evidence of fire in the floating mail, cushions and other bouyant parts.

Tommy Kearns: Athlete And Legislator At UNC

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

The day when the captain of the football team is president of the student body may be passed, but Tommy Kearns, a first string guard of UNC number one basketball team, is a Student Party representative in the Student Legislature.

This fall he ran in Dorm Men's III. Alexander, Winston and Conner, and won a one-year seat.

TOMMY KEARNS

"I think his primary purpose (in running) was to present the views of the athletes, and I think it is a good idea," said Whit Whitfield, SP party chairman.

"It is time athletes got a voice in legislature," Whitfield continued. He pointed out that athletes are a sizable group of students who previously did not have any of its rank in the legislature.

Speaking of Kearns, Bill King, Sports Editor of The Daily Tar Heel, said, "He is the man expected to take up where Lennie Rosenbluth left off."

King pointed out that Kearns had been chosen for several All-American basketball teams of different sports magazines.

Last year he played a vital role in the Tar Heels' success. He was one of the high scorers of the team and is noted for his hustle and drive on the court.

The SP ran Tom for sergeant-of-arms of the legislature at the last meeting. Kearns lost by only one vote to Neal Boden (UP).

Tom, who lives in Bergenfield, N.J., is a senior and is majoring in history.

Fanaticism Runs Rampant; Not Confined To Dixie . .

"But now I am cabin'd, cribb'd, bound in to saucy doubts and fears." —Shakespeare

Fanaticism is running rampant in America primarily as a result of the May 1954 Supreme Court Decision outlawing educational segregation in public schools.

Contrary to reports which have filtered across the nation, reports promulgated by rabble-rousing Northern journalists, this fanaticism is as prevailing as that propounded by southern extremists. The case in mind which substantiates such a charge against Yankeeland is the episode involving George Lichner of Chicago. Here are details of the ignominious fiasco:

Lichner, an 18-year-old junior at Thomas Kelly High School in Chicago, wrote a petition against racial integration in Kelly High School and got 13 of his classmates to sign it. As a result of Lichner's "prank," as he termed it, he was suspended from high school, arrested, charged with disorderly conduct, given a psychiatric test and placed under court supervision for one year.

Yes, fanaticism is not a provincial matter. It is not confined to Dixie. It is as evident in Northern states as it is down South.

And we are made extremely tired by journalists who contantly harp on the "racial extremists" in Dixie.

Racially integrated schools are inevitable—and rightly so. But we would very definitely advocate a Period of Relaxation. The nation has bcome so race conscious that literary masterpieces like Huckleberry Finn are banned from New York libraries because Twain's rich dialogue includes frequent usage of the word "nigger."

The NAACP is as violent and intolerable as the Patriots of North Carolina—a refined version of the Ku Klux Klan. Yet it is sometimes necessary to resort to extremes to dispel deep seated bias and prejudice from provincial minds.

Fanaticism is no solution. There should definitely be a Period of Relaxation. Educational integration is upon us, and it is gradually being accepted, gradually being accepted.

Taut minds should be given a chance to relax.

FROM CONNECTICUT DAILY CAMPUS:

Party Within A Party: Soviet Bolshevik Ball

Last week marked the fortieth anniversary of the November days of the Russian Revolution, and Communist leaders from all over the world went to Moscow for the celebration.

With the removal of Marshal Zhukov as Defense Minister three weeks ago and the announcement that he has been expelled from the Communist Party Presidium and Central Committee last week, the non-Communist world will focus its attention on the struggle within the Kremlin for complete control of the party and state.

Zhukov had been criticized for "violating Leninist party principles," displaying "inadequate party spirit" and losing his "party modesty." The statement said that he had "flagrantly violated" the principle of Communist Party leadership of the armed forces.

Western observers seem to think that Zhukov's purge was just Nikita Khrushchev's decision to eliminate one more of his possible rivals that he considered a threat to his position. The fate of Marshal Zhukov, regarded as the second most powerful man in the Soviet Union, resembles strongly the ousting of Malenkov, Molotov, and Kaganovich from the Presidium in July of this year.

In the instances it has been the army which has caused the shakeups in the Russian hierarchy. The army since Stalin's death in 1955 has been a great instrument of political power and has always been an ever present threat to Soviet rulers. In the purges in July it was the army that decided the fate of Malenkov, Molotov and Kaganovich. As Defense Minister, Zhukov wielded tremendous power which party boss Khrushchev didn't want to have to contend with.

The revolution of forty years ago was a Bolshevik coup d'etate to overthrow the absolute regime and to start the Russian state on the socialistic path to eventual Communism. The leader of the revolution, Vladimir Lenin, conceived dialectic materialism as a means to an end which would create the material conditions for a better and happier life.

The revolution was instituted to create a state in which the proletariate of the working class would rule and eventually the state would disappear to make way for a classless, statcless society. Out of the revolution emerged an undisputed ruler of the new Russia, Joseph Stalin. By eliminating rival groups and individuals, he finally liquidated all opposition to his power.

Recent events in the Kremlin seem to point to this same tendency four years after Stalin's death. Indeed Khrushchev is doing the very same thing that Stalin did to obtain power. Here is where the revolution got out of the revolutionaries' hands and headed in unexpected directions.

While trying to control its political crisis, the Russian state has advanced at a rapid rate industrially and technologically to become the second most highly developed technological state in the modern world. Indeed, the Russians have surpassed even the United States in some scientific fields with the launching of two earth satellites. So this fortieth year celebration seems to emphasize the advanced Russian technology and at the same time reveal an immature political state. As New York Times correspondent, Harrison Salisbury put it, "Russia's proud hour thus serves to emphasize the disparity between the capabilities of Soviet technology and the minimal improvement which that technology has effected in the lives of the Soviet people."

SSL Merits

The Student Legislature will debate next week the merits of State Student Legislature delegations.

The bill concerning the SSL also contains a passage which would make it mandatory for local lawmakers to approve SSL delgations appointed by a selections committee.

The bill should pass.

And the University should definitely preserve its reputation as the leading SSL participant—largest and leading participant.

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Subversives & Repression: Democracy?

By Curtis Gans

Sputnik and Muttnik may have done the cause of individual rights in America more service than anything that has happened within the last fifteen years.

It will ultimately call into account the entire loyalty-security system of the United States. It may even recall from enforced academic hibernation such important figures as Dr. Robert Oppenheimer, top atomic scientist, and Owen Lattimore, expert on Chinese affairs.

As it stands now the loyalty program is a blight on democracy.

The initial step of the loyalty program, the loyalty oath, caused considerable debate and furor several years ago, but it has been largely taken as matter of course now. This type of invasion of individual privacy should never be taken as a matter of course at any time.

Not only is the oath an invasion of privacy, but more important it discourages competent men of integrity from pursuing their profession. For it is only the man of integrity who will refuse to take the oath, as an invasion of privacy or because the oath contains phraseology which will bind them from acting and thinking freely. The true Communist who is out to wreck government by force will see nothing against signing an oath inorder to get into the inner-workings of whatever organization he wants to pervert to his purpose.

To discourage the thinkers among the American people is bad, to hide the real subersive influence is worse.

The second and perhaps most odious part of the system is the loyalty-security boards set up under the Truman Administration and carried to excess under the Eisenhower regime.

No one denies the right of the government to hire and fire its employees. What is denied is the right of the government to tag individuals with the stigma of "subversive" or "security risk", and prohibiting their employment in private companies and agencies contracting with the government.

Not only are they tagged "security risk", but they are assumed guity of this, and to vindicate themselves they must prove beyond a shadow of a doubt that they are innocent or they will be working as laborers or as professors or researching assistants in extremely liberal universities.

Moreover, these men, in order to have the stigma of "subversive" not connected with their names, must appear, before boards who think of the individual as guilty first, and pry into his private affairs to such an extent that the process represents an inquisition in form rather than the concept of a jury trial.

The employee is denied the right to face his accuser; is questioned about events happening twenty years ago, longer by 14 years than the statute of limitation; and is denied the right to know his judge.

This is distinctly foreign from any democratic concept of judicial procedure.

Moreover the executive department of the government has taken charge of ruling on the guilt or innocence of these employees. This contitutes a bill of attainder which is specifically prohibited by the Constitution.

The process has met with little success, besides. Not a single real subversive has been uncovered, but at least one instance of subversion was uncovered after the loyalty boards passed on the "loyalty" of this subversive.

What the process is doing is keeping good, clear thinking men of integrity out of the government, and substituting for them, people who are willing to subject their thought to control. The program is at the heart of the U. S. lag in the technological and armaments races.

An efficient counter-espionage system should be created in its stead, whereby true subversives could be thrown out of government and the process handled through the courts of law, as they were intended, and where the democratic rights of facing one's accuser, being innocent until proved guilty, knowing the identity of one's judge and having credible witnesses make their accusations still obtain.

Someone said not too many years ago, "The seeds of revolution are in repression." In a democracy, repression is anathema.

"Think You've Got Enough Control To Hold 'Em?"

Complacency Danger In The Recall Election

Gail Godwin

With recall just around the corner, there may be a tendency for supporters to become complacent, dute to the fact that they have only been subjected to the hopeful predications of "theirside."

They may be complacent if they are supporting the editor now in office because he is already editor and has the freedom of the press on his side. They may be complacent, on the other hand, if they are supporting another candidate because he is running against this controversial figure who is called "incompetent" by his opponents.

On Nov. 26, when you just can't seem to find time to go vote, when you've discovered you left your I. D. card back at the dorm, think twice before you ignore your voting responsibility.

Remember the Dewey-Truman race in '48. One man was so sure his candidate was going to win that he wrote a book entitled DEWEY - OUR PRESIDENT!

One of the country's top newspapers went ahead and made up its front page on election eve. The result was ridiculous. We are still seeing pictures in sociology books and history books of newly-elected President Truman gleefully holding up a paper whose headlines are screaming "Dewey elected president."

Why this unpredictible phenomena? Simply because Dewey supporters were so complacent they stayed home in bed while the pushing, plodding little groups that were scared their man might lose went out and faithfully marked their ballot.

So don't go to bed too sure on election ee. The next morning you may be in for a shock. And you will not be able to complain if you didn't vote.

At present, Chapel Hill weather is going from one extreme to the other. One day it is piercing cold and dry.

The next day it rains. The next it is humid and sticky and if you are a girl, your hair falls in ugly little pieces.

If you are bewildered about all these weather changes, I want to make a suggestion. There is a delightful little course called geography 38 in which you learn why some rain is hard and some is soft, and why some clouds are puffy and others are thin and anaemic looking, and even why rainfall in Singapore is greater than that in east Alaska.

Then when it is cold one day and then it gets warm, you can reasonably be sure it will rain, and you can cancel that barbecue for two.

This knowledge of climate caperings and careenings is most beneficial for those unfortunates who don't know "what makes weather run."

ERIC THE RED:

Gen. Chowhound & Heartbreak Inn

Harry Kirschner

News Item: The White House, Nov. 15. Today the President and Air Force 1st Lieutenant Oswald D. Chowhound had breakfast with the crew of Intergalaxy Saucer X-9.

Lieutenant Chowhound was until recently a four-star General with the Air Force. He was demoted yesterday for conduct unbecoming an officer which was itemized as: using profanity before members of a foreign delegation, and allowing himself to be captured and brainwashed. Setting a precedent, the president invited him to breakfast in spite of his demotion because he is the only earthman at all familiar with the saucer crew.

Inter-galaxy Saucer X-8 comes from a planet which is 4,500,000,000 light years from earth, the saucer's commander told the president. They commute between earth and their home, he said, by travelling at a speed many times the speed of light. The trip takes them a month.

The saucer-men's skin is colored green, and their facial structure is that of a broad nose and a full, protruding jaw. USIS photographers were on hand to take color pictures of the president having breakfast with the green men. Copies are being sent to the next UNESCO session to demonstrate our nation's encouraging attitude to the universal civil rights program.

The president had scrambled eggs, lightly salted, three strips of bacon, toast and coffee with cream and sugar. Lieutenant Chowhound had creamed beef on toast and black coffee. The saucer-men each had one pin-head sized protein-energy-carbohydrate-vitamin pill which, they said, they ate only to be polite as they had all had previously had their pill for the week.

The saucer-men told of learning English by listening to the radio regularly during the ten years that they have been observing earth from their space ship. They demonstrated their command of the language by singing their rendition of "Heartbreak Hotel" for the president.

When asked if they had any weapons comparable to ours of the modern Nuclear Age, the saucer's commander replied that they only carried survival weapons which consist of a hand grenade worn in the belt by every crewman. It has the force of two of our super-hydrogen bombs.

At this point in the interview the surgeon-general happened by to check on the president. He gave him a double sedative and four tranquilizers, and declared him "sound as a dollar."

It was noted that the saucer-men were quite affable and friendly, and laughed at everything the president said.

Lieutenant Chowhound told of his experiences when he was taken into the saucer. He said that he got a very close up view of the Russian Sputnik II as the saucer followed it around in its orbit for a few minutes. He mentioned that the saucer-men told him that they "liked to come up and look at it" every so often because they had never seen one before. They had only heard of them through their planet's ancient history. When they were children, they told him, they had been told of their planet's sending up experimental satellites, but that was over a million years ago.

Chowhound said that the saucer flew up to the moon and stayed behind it for 12 hours, so as to avoid being seen from earth, while he was interrogated. He said that it was only because of his demonstrations of our government's friendliness to foreign delegates that the breakfast with the president came about.

After the breakfast the president gave a statement to the press which said that there is no need for the general public to be alarmed by the visit from the saucer-men. They had come to see the president about getting a foreign-aid grant for their planet from the State Dept. The president said reassuringly that they are believers in democracy, freedom and capitalism, and have little use for other forms of government and/or economic systems.

Electorate And Poor Response

Nancy Hill

The Carolina student electorate made a poor showing in Tuesday's balloting. A 35 per cent vote, especially here, where students are traditionally interested in political issues, indicates a definite lack on the part of students.

In the case of this week's election the lack may have been of information. An unusual number of candidates vied for offices, particularly coed offices. The coeds adopted the usual campaign procedures. They visited each room in girls dorms and left printed cards with their picture. They exhibited posters in all available space. But not one that stopped by in our room stated what she stood for or what she felt her election to office would mean.

When coeds went to the polls Tuesday, most of them voted for the names that stuck in their minds. Some may have voted along strict party lines. But very few were able to make accurate judgements on the basis of knowledge of a candidate's past experience, motives for running, or plans if elected.

An informed student electorate would be an interested one, and would make a better than 34 per cent turn out at the polls. The fault lies with both voter and candidate, but candidates always face disinterest on the part of voters in running for certain more or less routine offices. The candidate should offer information on himself in these cases.

The student electorate should make a better than average turnout for the forthcoming recall election. The issues are controversial, and confused, and the election is being held at a time when elections are not normally held. Something other than information will be lacking on the part of students if they allow a minority to decide one of the most crucial issues that will arise this year.

Annual DUkathon Race To Durham Set Today

The fourth annual DUkathon will be run today from the Chapel Hill post office to the Durham post office. The distance covered is 13.6 miles.

Over 60 entires have been received by Jim Menzel at the Delta Upsilon House for the event, including several of the pledges at the Kappa Delta Sorority. Last year there were 56 running and 26 finishing the grind.

Last year's race was won by Dick MacFadden, who set an all time record of one hour 14 minutes, 29.2 seconds. Complete co-operation is expected from local and state police to make the event as safe as possible.

The DUkathon Queen will ride in the pace car which will stick with the leading runner throughout the afternoon. She will reward the first finisher with a kiss at the termination of the race.

The event is being sponsored by the Delta Upsilon fraternity, which will supply a handsome trophy to the winner and survivors medals to all those finishing the grind.

HI SCHOOL CROSS-COUNTRY

The North Carolina High School cross-country championships will be run here today at Finley Golf Course at 2 p.m.

Teams representing Asheville, Durham, East Mecklenburg, Myers Park, Asheboro, Jamestown, and New Bern will compete over a two-mile course.

CAPER, ANYONE?

My name is Cornell Jackson, private eye. Two days ago I was sitting in my office dictating, when suddenly a tall blonde passed my window. I knew she was tall because my office is on the tenth floor.

"Hello," she said, "I need help, Rutgers."

"The name's Cornell."

"Yes. I'm worried about my husband. Every night he stays out till six in the morning. He comes home with his hair mussed, lipstick all over his face. What's up?"

"The butler did it."

"Oh come, come, Yale."

"Cornell, dearie."

"Yes. I think my husband is unfaithful."

I exercised my think-tank. "The butler did it." I blurted.

"Look, Oklahoma Aggies tell me what to do?"

"Find out the secret of his success with the femmes—then proceed from there. What brand of shirts does he wear?"

"Van Heusen."

"What brand of underwear and pajamas?"

"Van Heusen."

I threw up my hands—and watched them loft lazily up to the ceiling. "Babe," I said, "you can't fight Van Heusen. There's only one thing you can do. Marry the butler!"

Moral? No ladies worth their salt can resist Van Heusen merchandise. If you want to be popular . . . if you want to walk down the street and have people say, "There goes Jim, he's had more girls on his lap than napkins," here's what to do. First change your name to Jim then buy Van Heusen merchandise. You can't miss.

Yesterday's Answer

The Daily Tar Heel SOCIETY

Mary Alys Voorhees, Editor

Dekes—Parties & Football

Football and parties took up the majority of the Dekes' time this weekend. On the social agenda after the Germans concert and dance was a party at the house Friday night. Then on Saturday thoughts turned to football as Dekes and their dates joined other students at Kenan to cheer for the Tar Heels.

Saturday night they celebrated with a party at the Chapel Hill Country Club. Football stepped back into the limelight Sunday when DKEs and their dates cheered for the DKE tag football team—who met the Delta Psi team from U. Va.—afterwards going over to the House for a party.

Chi Phi Partyland

A jukebox party at the Chi Phi House Friday night added to the weekend fun after the Germans concert and dance. Saturday was again a full day for Chi Phis and their dates. Following the game, a luncheon was held at the House, and that night the evening was enlivened with the music of "The Downbeats" from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. and Doug Clark and "The Tops" from 1 to 5 a.m.

Sunday dinner at the House brought the weekend activities to an end.

The Chi Phi pledge class stepped into the party spotlight Wednesday night when they entertained the ADPi pledges at Jack's in Durham.

ADPi Social Agenda

Big items on the ADPis' social calendar this week and next include the party the Chi Phi pledges gave for the pledges Wednesday night at Jack's plus another party at which the Sigma Nu's will entertain both actives and pledges at the Sigma Nu House Tuesday.

ADPi pledge class officers are Marion Hayes of Durham, president; Barbara Thomas of Asheboro, secretary; and Edna Faye Pugh of Asheboro, social chairman.

Sig Ep Fun

It was party, party for the Sig Eps this past weekend as they crammed their social calendar full. Following the Germans dance and concert, SPEs and their dates continued the fun with a party at the House. Saturday for the game the brothers and pledges presented their dates with corsages decorated with the SPE insignia.

That night they entertained again with a combo party at the House, ending the weekend Sunday with an informal get-together.

Phi Gam Parties

Friday night after the concert and dance the Phi Gams partied over at the House. And Saturday, to celebrate Carolina's victory, they feted their dates at a cabin party out at the "Schoolhouse." As a finale Sunday they joined the Kappa Sigs, KA's and Zetes on the Phi Gam patio for a party.

Kappa Sig Doings

A visit by Les Elgart and his band Friday night to the Kappa Sig House highlighted weekend activities for brothers, pledges and their dates. The musicians arrived shortly after playing for the Germans dance.

Saturday, following the game, the House took on a Dixieland atmosphere while the "Devils of Dixieland" presented music from 5 to 8 p.m. That evening Kappa Sigs and their dates continued the fun with a cabin party at Larry's with the "Downbeats" presenting music. Sunday they closed out the weekend partying with the Zetes, KAs and Phi Gams on the Phi Gam patio.

Harry A. Usher Cadet Of Month

Harry A. Usher, AFROTC Cadet of the Month for October, has honored in ceremonies during drill Thursday afternoon at Emerson Field.

Usher was selected for the honor from a field of six freshman. A board of five cadet officers made the selection on the basis of the cadet's outstanding work in UNC's AFROTC program this fall.

Cadet Usher is a member of the AFROTC Drill Team, has a straight "A" average in Air Science and has earned more merits than any of the other candidates. He plans to make the Air Force his career.

Brass Will See Parade-Review

A parade-review ceremony by the UNC AFROTC unit will be given Thursday, December 5, for the liason team from Headquarters AFROTC, Maxwell Air Base, Alabama.

The parade review on the UNC campus, to given by the entire cadet corps here, will mark the climax of the federal visitation on December 5 and 6.

While here, the inspecting officers will interview detachment and cadet personnel, monitor air science classes, and inspect other features of the local cadet program.

Purpose of the federal inspection is to develop and exchange ideas to improve the AFROTC program.

OBJECTS "HOAX"

WASHINGTON, Nov. 15—(AP)—The Air Force said today it has looked into five recent reports of mysterious lights and strange objects from the sky—and there isn't a flying saucer in the lot.

The Air Force report gave the most severe description—"hoax"—to the most vivid of the stories that began circulating after Soviet satellites turned the attention of Americans skyward. This was a Kearney, Neb., man's account of being shown around the interior of a spaceship by its German-speaking crew.

Job Interviews Set Next Week

Jobs will be plentiful for coeds who start looking early, according to the Placement Service. Almost every day this coming week coeds will have opportunities to interview prospective employers.

Four companies will be seeking chemistry majors for laboratory work and for technical research, and another company will be talking with math and physics majors.

Liberal arts students will be busy, too, the service said. Those with a desire to travel can talk to Delta Air Lines representative about requirements for stewardesses.

On Thursday and Friday the YWCA will be interviewing for teenage program directors, young adult program directors, health education directors and college YMCA assistant directors.

On Nov. 25, representatives from Girl Scouts National Headquarters will interview women in an effort to find executive ability and women with an interest in Scouting. These interviewees will be registered with headquarters for positions as district directors.

All senior women have been urged to register with the Placement Service for appointments with some of these organizations.

CORRECTION

There has been a correction in the legislative election results for Town Men's III: Ken Friedman, SP, was elected to a one-year and Jim Pittman, SP, was elected to a six-months seat.

Empty Stocking Drive Starts Mon.

Monday officially starts the Empty Stocking Campaign of the Junior Service League of Chapel Hill. Some 450 families or 1,600 persons, are on file for adoption.

Mrs. Mark Hanna, Empty Stocking campaign chairman, made the following suggestions for food to be given:

Foods such as flour, sugar, dried beans or peas, canned fruit, rice or corn meal, oatmeal, lard, crackers or cookies, peanut butter, jelly, dried fruit, jello, evaporated milk for children, candy, marshallows and cereal.

Extra foods which could be included if a group is fixing a box for a large family are canned meats, coffee, tea, soups and canned vegetables.

Mrs. Hanna asked that any item of a perishable nature not be included in gifts to the fund. The fund will furnish fresh fruits to the families at the time that they pick up their boxes.

In addition to food, fund officials have suggested including used toys or new ones, gift wrapped, if possible. They would also like each adult in the needy family to have one small or any other item of personal adornment.

Mrs. Hanna said, "Let us share our Chirstmas with those less fortunate. The wonderful part of Chirstmas is the oneness we feel with all mankind. Christmas is to give."

Donations of money may be sent to the Empty Stocking Fund, Box 374, Chapel Hill or may be taken to the booth which will be on Franklin Street, Dec. 9-13. All checks should be made payable to the Empty Stocking Fund.

Further information may be obtained by contacting Mrs. Charles Dixon at 80955..

Booters Stage Rally For 5-5 Tie With Duke

Deadlock Is 2nd In Row For UNC

The Carolina varsity soccer team played its second straight tie game here yesterday, and had to come from behind again to do it,as it tied the Duke Blue Devils, 5-5.

Coach Marvin Allen's hustling squad had to bounce back from two-goal deficits twice to gain the tie. At the half, the Tar Heels were behind, 3-1, and roared back to tie the game at 3 all early in the third quarter.

But Duke jumped ahead again by two goals, and it was a tough road back for the Tar Heels. With about seven minutes to go in the game, right wing Charlie Whitfield scored his first game of the season to put Carolina within one goal of a tie.

Thompson Scores

Then, with 30 seconds remaining in the regulation game ,center forward Mike Thompson came to the rescue, and scored to deadlock the game at 5-5.

Two five-minute overtimes were played, but neither team could break the tie, although Carolina once came within an inch of scoring the winning goal.

Duke jumped to the lead early in the first quarter when Duke's leading scorer, center forward Ed Gauld blasted the ball into the Carolina goal.

Carolina bounced right back to tie it up, 1-1 ,when Rick Grausman scored his third goal of the year. But Duke was too hot to be denied, and goals by Gunner Schull and Ed Gauld put the Blue Devils ahead at the half, 3-1.

Game Tied

In the second, half the Tar Heels thrilled the crowd with a thrilling come back as John Ghanim and Coleman Barks scored within a few minutes of each other to deadlock the game at 3-3.

Duke then scored twice in the seewas battle, on goals by Bill Power and Ed Gauld. Gaulds goal was his third of the game.

The tie marks the second time the Tar Heels have tied a conference opponent. Coach Allen's squad barely gained a 4-4 tie with Virginia's Cavaliers Wednesday. Carolina's next game will be with N. C. State next Wednesday.

Joe Quigg Will Probably Play Again

By BILL KING

Contrary to published reports, Joe Quigg, veteran Carolina basketball center is "getting along fine" and is expected to be able to continue his basketball career after this season.

Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth, university physician, reported on Quigg's condition yesterday and said: "We hope and believe that Joe will be able to continue his basketball career after this season."

Quigg was injured November 7 in an intra-squad scrimmage in Woollen Gym and underwent a knee operation on November 8. Since that time, he has been convalescing in the university infirmary. No visitors are being allowed as yet.

The loss of Quigg was a tremendous blow to the Tar Heel cagers. He was one of the sparkplugs of last year's national championship team and it was he who dropped in the two free throws which beat Kansas in the NCAA finals last March.

Hathaway Improving

Veteran quarterback Curt Hathaway, who sustained a broken arm against South Carolina last weekend, is still confined to the infirmary but doctors say he is resting well and hope that he will be able to leave in the near future.

Curt broke both bones in his right arm late in the third quarter of the SC game and will have to sit out the rest of the season. The Norfolk, Va., junior is, however, being counted on for action next season.

Lineberger, Rattay Out

Another football casualty, guard Jack Lineberger has also been declared "out for the season" due to a pinched nerve in his neck. Lineberger is out of the infirmary but is wearing a neck brace. It was thought at first that he might possibly see action in the final game of the season against Virginia, but was declared out earlier this week.

Soccer goalie Jim Rattay is still in a Charlottesville, Va., hospital recovering from a fractured cheekbone suffered against the Virginia Cavaliers Wednesday. Rattay will probably be back in Chapel Hill by Monday.

Tri-Delt And Delta Sig Win Co-Rec Carnival

By DAVE WIBLE

Delta Delta Delta No. 1 sorority and Delta Sigma Pi business fraternity combined their masculine and feminine skills in everything from button sewing to box hockey and emerged as the team champion in the action packed eleventh annual Co-Recreation Sports Carnival held Thursday night in Woollen Gym.

The SAE No. 1—Chi Omega No. 1 team carried off second place honors while SAE No. 2 Chi Omega No. 2, Grimes-Alderman No. 4, and Law School-Alderman No. 2 tied for third place.

Successful Carnival

Termed "the most successful carnival we have had" by officials of the Intramural Department and the Woman's Athletic Association who co-sponsored the affair, over 600 students representing 65 teams participated in the eight well organized events with an enthusiasm and team spirit never before seen on this campus.

Boys met their master in the button sewing relay and girls theirs in the baseball throw. The coed's faces reddened when the ballon wouldn't break as they sat on it, and men's egos went to a new low when their female partner made the better showing in the carnival games.

Aycock Presents

When the dust settled and the points tabulated Chancellor Aycock made the presentation of trophys. Winners were: John Jester (DKE)-Box Hockey, Sally Armfield (Chi O No. 1) Tether Ball, Mallary McGurk and Henery McInnis (Law Sch-Alderma No. 2) Ping Pog; Don Vinnik nad Mary Montgomery (TEP-Alderman No. 3) Badminton.

Gail Willingham and Fred Daniel (Delta Sigma Pi-Tri Delt No. 1) Volleyball; Day McGavran and Charlie Covell (SAH-Town Girls) Archery; Bobbie Madison and Dick Cashwell (Pi-Ka-Pi Phi No. 3) Carnival Games.

The relay winners were: Delta Sig Pi and Tri Delt-1.

It was an evening full of fun and entertainment for participators and spectators alike, many of whom were heard to say, "we should do this more often."

Big Game In Durham This Afternoon

Saturday and no Carolina football. Seems a little odd doesn't it? But there is football in the immediate area, and a very important game it is. An Orange Bowl bid could easily be riding on the outcome of the Duke-Clemson game in Durham this afternoon.

The Durham fray, in fact, is perhaps the most important game of the year thus far in the Atlantic Coast Conference. It involves not only the Devils and Tigers, but the Tar Heels also. A Clemson victory today would put Jim Tatum's club in the thick of the Orange Bowl scramble.

Tatum said earlier in the week that he was not encouraging his club to attend the game, but most of the players with whom we've talked in the past couple of days are planning to take it in.

A good many other students are also making plans to watch the fireworks, thus we should have a pretty good delegation in Duke Stadium by two o'clock kickoff time.

Murals Department, A Functioning Organization

It is our opinion that the most underrated organization on the Carolina campus is the intramurals department.

Those students who attended and/or participated in the co-rec carnival Thursday night saw the competence of the murals department at its best. The program went off without a hitch and it was quite evident that a tremendous amount of time had been spent preparing everything to perfection. It was an interesting evening of entertainment—one of several big events which the intramural department sponsors each year.

Coach Walter Rabb has done a magnificent job as head of the intramurals department and his assistants have carried on the organization's functions in a praiseworthy fashion.

We Predict: Clemson To Win; State, Va. Also

We're almost ashamed to play "pick the winners" this week after blundering through our prognostications last weekend, but since we've vowed to try our power of prediction each week, we'll give it another twirl.

Right away we're confronted with Duke vs. Clemson and that's enough to make anybody want to go bury his head. The stakes could be the Orange Bowl representation, consequently both clubs will be up for this one. It should be a terrific battle and one touchdown could easily be the difference. We'll play the upset card this time and say: Clemson 20, Duke 14.

N. C. State goes out of the ACC and into the hot Southern Conference where it suffered its first loss of the season last week against William and Mary. The Wolfpack takes on Virginia Tech, a talented ball club. But State should have its guard up in this one. N. C. State 27, Virginia Tech 7.

Wake Forest also goes against a Southern Conference team, West Virginia. The Deacs are due to win after nine straight losses but it looks like another black Saturday for the Deacs. West Virginia 20, Wake Forest 7.

South Carolina and Virginia should have quite a tussle up at Charlotesville. This one ought to be close. We'll take the Cavaliers by a touchdown; something like 14-7. Maryland played Miami last night.

Tar Heel Runners Defend Title Tomorrow

Monday is a big day for the Carolina cross-country team, for it is then that the thinclads defend their Atlantic Coast Conference title in Winston-Salem.

The Tar Heels will be favored but will encounter some stiff opposition. Several of the other ACC schools have some fine individual runners and the going will not be easy for Coach Dale Ranson's crew. Ranson, incidentally, has won 17 titles in 34 years.

The undefeated Tar Heels (6-0) will be paced by Wayne Bishop, Dave Scurlock, Ev Whatley and Cowles Liipfert. Liipfert is a sophomore, Bishop and Scurlock are juniors and Whatley is a senior and captain of the runners.

Duke Tickets Purchase Urged

The ticket office has urged all students who have not bought tickets to the Duke game to do so immediately in order that they might take advantage of the ticket cut price.

Ticket officials appear concerned at the small number of students who have bought tickets and remind students that the half-price (& $2.00) deadline is Wednesday afternoon at four o'clock. After that the price of tickets will be the regular four dollars.

Under the student ticket plan, Carolina students may purchase tickets at two dollars with their student passbooks. Date tickets, however, are four dollars.

Last 'Teahouse' Showing Today

The final presentation of the Carolina Playmakers' production of "Teahouse of the August Moon" will be held tonight at 8:30 in Memorial Hall.

The teahouse is an institution for the orientals, an enchanted place in which the worries of the world may be lost in the beauty of a Geisha dance, the calculation of a wrestling match, and the age and wisdom of an August moon.

Since its opening on Broadway in 1953, "Teahouse of the August Moon" has delighted audiences all over the world with its quiet philosophy of acceptance and its spoof of military red tape.

Good seats for the production are still available, according to John W. Parker, Business Manager of the Playmakers. Since the show is in Memorial Hall, tickets will be available there at 7:30 each performance evening.

Tuesday Evening Series Offers Chamber Music

The fourth concert given this fall on the popular Tuesday Evening Series sponsored by the UNC Music Department will feature an unusual program of chamber music.

The program, which is free and open to the general public, will be held Tuesday at 8 p.m. in Hill Hall.

The string players who will perform have appeared in numerous concerts. Edgar Alden, violinist; Dorothy Alden, violist; and Mary Gray Clarke, violoncellist, are members of the University String Quartet. Equally well known is the pianist Wilton Mason, a UNC faculty member and director of the University chorus.

The harpists, Suzann Davids and Emily Kellam, have made many solo appearances; both have studied under Salzedo whose works they will be playing. Earl Slocum, director of the University Orchestra, will be the featured flutist.

Besides the music for strings and piano generally expected in a concert of chamber music, seldom performed compositions involving harps and flutes will be heard.

Joining Slocum in a Beethoven Trio will be two members of the University Orchestra, Dorothy Hickok and Tish Harrer. The Beethoven Trio in C Major, Op. 87, to be played by the flutists will open the Tuesday evening program. Two arrangements by Salzedo and several of his original works will be presented.

Compositions for the unusual medium of two harps will comprise the second group of numbers. The third movement of a Quintet for harp, flute, violin, viola and violoncello by Jean Cras, a French composer of the 20th century, will conclude the first half of the program. Works by Reger and Schumann will be presented after intermission.

news brief

Benson Blasted

PARSONS, Kan., Nov. 16 (AP)-Democratic National Chairman Paul Butler tonight predicted Secretary of Agriculture Benson would be "ditched by the Eisenhower administration as a political liability."

"But farmers can expect no relief since the Eisenhower farm program for which Benson has been to a large extent blamed will continue in operation no matter who is named to replace him," Butler said.

Butler, in a speech prepared for a third district Democratic fund-raising dinner, termed the Eisenhower farm program "a study in failure."

Shoot Sputniks

BALTIMORE, Nov. 16 (AP)—Sen. John M. Butler (RMD) believes the United States should shoot down Russia's satellites as quickly as they are launched.

"I would like to see our armed forces shoot down Sputnik II," He said. "I think it is possible of accomplishment. We just say to them, you put them up and we'll shoot them down. I think we'll come to that some day, and it's not too far off."

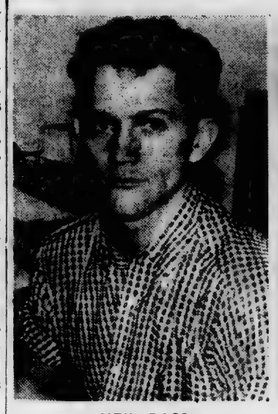
Butler made the statement during a panel discussion which was recorded yesterday for broadcast tomorrow at 9 a.m. (EST) over radio station WFBR, Baltimore.

Toll Hits 44

Newport, Isle of Wight, Nov. 16 (AP)-The death toll of the flaming crash of a big flying boat on this English island rose tonight to 44. One of the 15 survivors, an Englishwoman, died in a hospital of her injuries.

Forty-three of the 58 persons aboard, including the eight-member crew, were killed outright when the four-engine Solent smashed into a timbered chalk cliff last night and burned.

All the 50 passengers were British.



Faces Issues

RALEIGH, No. 16 —AP— Several issues, headed by the controversy over dancing at Baptist colleges, are on the agenda for the Baptist State Convention's 127th annual session which opens here Tuesday.

A new move to oust Dr. Harold W. Tribble as president of Wake Forest College may come up when the convention takes up the selection of Wake Forest College trustees.

Candidates Make Final Plea For Big Turnout At Debate

Rule Silent About Plans For Election

Both Editor Neil Bass and candidate Barry Winston yesterday urged students to take advantage of the opportunity to hear the issues involved in the recall movement debated at the candidates' meeting scheduled for 7 o'clock Monday night in Gerrard Hall.

The third candidate in the race for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, Paul Rule, declined to ellaborate on the meeting ahead of time. He said, however, that he welcomed the opportunity to present his views and would gladly attend the Monday night parley for that purpose.

In a statement issued yesterday, Winston gave a preview of the issues he may bring up at the three-way discussion.

He said that, if elected, he would work toward the following goals: 1) a free, but responsible press, 2) objective news coverage, 3) unrestricted freedom of student expression, 4) intelligent editorial treatment of all issues and 5) technical competence.

He added that he was "wholeheartedly in favor" of the debate among candidates. "I feel that this will be an ideal opportunity for the clarification of all the issues involved," he added.

Editor Bass, however, expressed assurance that he will be re-elected in the recall vote November 26.

"It seems more apparent as time passes," he said, "that students who "impulsively" signed the recall petition because they disagreed with editorial stands on professional football and the Asian influenza epidemic are now beginning to realize the dangers to free press of the recall election.

He also re-emphasized his belief that the recall movement was initiated by what he termed "a small political clique." He added that their plan to "ramrod the recall election through" had collapsed.

"The greatest advantage remaining for the recall clique," he continued, "is the possibility that a small percentage of voters will turn out on election day. The clique will vote 100 per cent.

"Student upholders of free expression must vote in mass to counteract the votes cast by the recall minority," he said.

The debate Monday night will be held in conjunction with informal meetings of both campus political parties. Following the discussion, the two parties will hold formal meetings at which time they will decide whether to endorse a particular candidate and, if so, which one.

Benny Thomas, GMAB president, will preside over the debate among contestants for the top newspaper post.

MIXED COUPLES IN STATESVILLE

Race Tension On Edge After White Girls, Negroes In Car

STATESVILLE, N. C., Nov. 16 (AP) — Negro and white citizens broadcast an appeal for calmness here tonight in the wake of a demonstration in front of the home of two white sisters who officers said they found in a car with two Negro men.

The girls and their mother were escorted from town at 8 p.m. last night, about an hour before a demonstration was staged at their home. Police Chief W. T. Ivey said Mrs. R. B. Lambeth and her daughters, Judith, 17, and Martha, 15, were taken to U. S. 70 west. He said they left the county, but would not give their destination.

While the demonstration was in progress, officers arrested 14 Negroes ranging in age from 15 to 22. Police said they were charged with disorderly conduct and were throwing rocks, shouting obscene remarks to white women and pushing white people off sidewalks.

Another group of Negroes, armed with rocks, were searched and sent home later in the night, Ivey said.

The appeal, broadcast from Radio Station WFIC, was by a white minister and a white educator and a Negro minister and a Negro funeral director.

All pleaded with parents to keep their children at home tonight as a precaution against mobs forming.

Ivey said in his opinion if nothing happened during the night, the incident would blow over.

Ivey said the two girls were found in a car with Alfred James Smith, 22, of Rt. 1, Hamptonville, and John Franklin Bruner, 20, of Rt. 1, Statesville, at 2:30 a.m. Thursday morning. Both men are Negroes.

Smith was charged with driving without an operator's license and with having an improper muffler which Ivey said caused officers to stop the car. Smith later was released under $200 bond and will face a hearing in City Court Monday. Bruner and the girls were released, the sisters to their mother.

Thursday night a cross was burned on the lawn of the Lambeth residence and a rock was thrown through a window of the house.

Ivey said the family was escorted from the city last night, about an hour before the demonstration which swelled to between 500 and 600 persons.

This Was Action As Boles Captured Annual DUkathon Race Saturday

By DAVIS YOUNG

In an extremely close and exciting finish John Boles won the DUkathon race from Chapel Hill to Durham yesterday, finishing the 13.6 mile grind in 82 minutes, 10 seconds, just one minute ahead of Ray Bagwell.

Driving rains narrowed entries from an expected 95 to some 40 participants in the annual event which got underway at 1:30 p.m. in front of the Chapel Hill Post Office.

Immediately preceding the race, Pretty Elanor Williamson of Delta Delta Delta Sorority was crowned DUkathon Queen by Jim Menzel and Charlie Green of the Delta Upsilon Fraternity, the sponsoring organization.

She was presented an arrangement of flowers and a large silver cup and then was escorted to the pace car to ride in front of the lead runners the rest of the way.

The pace car was supplied by Crowell Little Motor Co. of Chapel Hill.

As the initial gun sounded, the runners scattered and set the pace according to their physical conditions. Many of the entrants had crews riding along side, giving encouragement and such staples as oranges, chocolate bars and towels to their favorites.

As the race progressed towards the destination the scattering of runners became more pronounced. When Boles and Bagwell entered the city limits of Durham the last runners behind them were over four miles away.

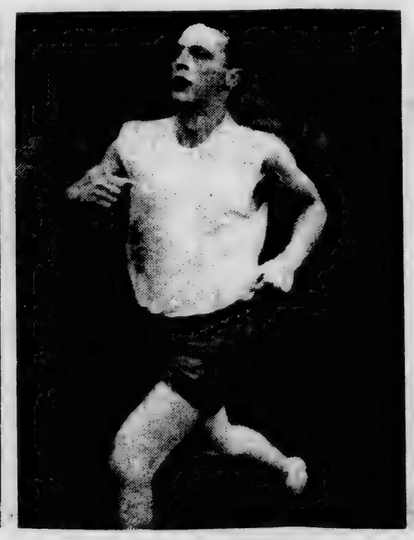
A large reception committee was on hand in Durham to welcome Boles as he crossed the finish line, closely pursued by Bagwell. Both boys looked fresh and in good condition.

Boles was given a trophy, and Bagwell and third place finisher, Ronnie McNeill, were given smaller tokens of their achievments in the form of cups. All finishers were given survivors medals.

Boles had this to say at the finish line: "I mainly ran for the trophy and was confident all the way although anything could have happened. I ran the first 13 miles with Bagwell and then we split. We had decided to run this way before the race, saying that the one who had it at the end would take it.

"We did considerable training for the race over the past week running from eight to ten miles a day. As for next year, we'll just have to wait and see."

Chairman Menzel called today's event highly succesful, stating that if the weather had been more favorable, he would have expected even more entrants.



He said of the winner and second place finisher: 'I watched both boys from the pace car and they never broke stride all the way. It was certainly a great achievement for them."

NROTC Leader Here Honored By Dinner

QMC C. E. Napier, departing member of the NROTC staff at UNC, was honored Friday at an appreciation dinner given by the Senior Line class for his personal and professional interest in each midshipman.

Chief Napier, after three years here, leaves Chapel Hill on December 5 for duty on the U. S. S. Grayback, a new guided missle submarine at San Fransisco, Calif.

The chief was presented with an engraved lighter as a token of respect for his work by the NROTC seniors.

Education For The Many And Entrance Examinations

The Consolidated University's new entrance examinations' policy is definitely an improvement. But we should like to suggest an even greater improvement:

Abolish them entirely.

According to a report released Friday by CU officials, new entrance examinations will test the aptitude, natural, innate aptitude, of prospective students—rather than cumulative knowledge.

Such examination will definitely give prospective students from rural schools and high schools without college preparatory-inclined curricula a more equal opportunity to further their education.

But we do not believe that restrictive entrance examinations are conducive to education for the many, upon which the American educational system has always depended heavily—and rightly so.

And we are inclined to believe that entrance examinations were instituded primarily to discourage Negro students from enrolling in the Consolidated University branches.

Many contend that the inundating tide of increasing enrollment must be curtailed through entrance examinations. We propose, diametrically in opposition, that the tide be adequately handled through extended educational facilities.

and we would again like to quote from Progressive Chancellor William (Bill) Aycock's Installation Address:

"Some propose freezing enrollment at or near the present level. Those who do so forget that our leaders, over the years, have taken our people—rich and poor alike—to the top of the mountain and promised that every child shall have an equal opportunity through education to develop his leadership qualities."

Chancellor Aycock demonstrates an admirable knowledge and understanding of what keeps America strong—education for the many, unshackled by restrictive entrance examinations.

The University's freshman class this year is some 50 students under the enrollment last year. There seems to be little danger that the University will be swamped by a colossal tide of students. But all agree that enrollments will continue to swell and swell.

Increased enrollments should be handled through increased facilities—not through restrictive entrance examinations.

GUEST EDITORIAL:

LSU Reveille Comments On NATO Solidarity . .

Last week's conference between President Eisenhower and Britain's Prime Minister Harold Macmillan may have been a positive start toward what Secretary of State John Foster Dulles called "irving the free world together."

Held against the world background of missile competition and Russian satellite-inspired propoganda, the meeting promised the pooling of every moral and material resource of 50 free nations to combat despotism.

More Than Mere Show

Dulles insisted from the first that this conference be more than a mere show of Anglo-American solidarity. He wanted it to tie together not just these two nations, but all free nations.

The talks began with the President telling Macmillan about a cruise he made last summer on the Saratoga, our newest aircraft carrier. Its angled deck, steam catapult and mirror landing system which have added so much to flight safety were all British inventions.

Did Not Stop

But the talks did not stop there. They went on to include the agreement that the full resources of the free nations must be marshaled against communism. Enthusiasm rose high toward making the total alliance a reality.

The U. S. and United Kingdom NATO representatives agreed to "urge an enlarged Atlantic effort in scientific research and development in support of greater collective security." Eisenhower promised to ask Congress to amend the Atomic Energy Act so as to permit "close and faithful" sharing of nuclear information between the U. S., Great Britain and "other friendly countries."

Probably Impressed Soviets

This meeting probably impressed the Soviets more than the launching of an American satellite. It promises of future collaboration of the vast resources, moral as well as technical, which the free world possesses. This is enough to scare any despot.

We believe that time will vindicate our faith in a free society. What we are gambling on is time. If there is enough of that precious commodity, the free world will win in the present struggle.

Peasant Boy & Oral Abyss

Soviet Communist Party Chief Nikita Khrushchev is definitely feeling his "Snap, Crackle and Sput-nik" oats.

Friday, he told the United Press that Soviet superiority in the missiles field was definite, and he egotistically challenged the United States to a rocket-range "shooting match" to, prove it.

The pudgy, snaggle-toothed peasant boy—Russia's version of a blood-smeared Horatio Alger—further asserted that future wars would be fought on the American continent.

It is entirely possible that N. K. made his ranting assertions while in a rather inebriated state—his bibulous nature taken into consideration-but he definitely sounds more ominious that he would have a few months ago, in the light of Russian technological achievements.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Spit On Me Or I On Thee: Judgement . . .

Gail Godwin

". . . Our faces are dirty, and we wipe one another's noses. All dunces, all punished, let's all spit on one another . . . Each tries to spit first, that's all. I'll tell you a big secret, mon cher. Don't wait for the last judgement. It takes place every day."

—Albert Camus, from The Fall

Undoubtedly, this year's Nobel Prize winner in Literature has unveiled the ugly truth when he allows his narrator in The Fall to discover in a sudden moment that no man is innocent, and therefore no man can judge other men from a standpoint of righteousness.

How can we call someone else selfish, immoral, hot-headed, stupid or anything? From what standards are we judging? The idealist says, "why by the perfect standards, of course."

But it usually turns out that our judgement is based on a comparison of said horrible person with ourselves. Or on a comparison with someone we may think is above reproach.

Actually this is all a farce. We have set perfect standards upon an imperfect foundation. How can we hope to reap a fair conclusion as to the worth of someone else from such false premises?

Yet we do. Eevry day the spitting game continues. Spit, spit, spit. But try to dodge the spitting aimed at us. That kind of spit—coming in our direction—is not true, of course, or fair.

No one ever wins in this game. The spitfire rages fast and hard. But nobody emerges the victor.

We are all omnipotent judges in a courtroom with no impartial jury—no justice.

Children are the most cruel in the spitting game. They turn viciously on a playmate maybe because he has yellow skin or his family lives on the other side of the tracks or he stutters or has big elephant ears.

Semi-adults, the category in which most college students fall, conceal their cruelty a little better than do the children who dance around the excluded Johnny singing: "Johnny is an odd ball!"

Yes, we semi-adults say very discreetly of an unaccepted one: "Well, he's just not our kind. He doesn't fit in."

Or, "She means well, but she is a tad too forward with the boys."

With these crucifying statements, the excluded one is automatically discarded from the files of "People we associate with."

To be seen with these Discards means certain social death.

The game goes on. The spitting and judging continues and nobody tries to understand why they or their victims are the way they are.

In occasional moments of joy, we meet someone who accepts us even with all our imperfections. This is rare, but worth living for.

"Wherefore," says Camus through his enlightened narrator, "since we are all judges, we are all guilty before one another, all Christs in our mean manner, one by one crucified, always without knowing."

I once knew an Episcopal minister. He was admired by his entire congregation partly because of his short sermons and partly because of his terrific insight into their problems.

He gave me this little gem of advice:

"Watch out, young lady, when you start judging people. Usually the thing about them that you find most unbearable is your own besetting sin."

This is most disturbing.

Faint Smell Of Repudiation; Poignant Sniff Of Domination . . .

EDITOR:

I would like to offer rebuttal to one of Mr. Braxton's statements in his condemnation of the delegation from the University of North Carolina to the 21st Session of the State Student Legislature at Raleigh.

I wholeheartly agree with Mr. Braxton that we could not possibly express the views of the entire student body. I think Mr. Braxton will adhere to the fact that it would have been quite a difficult undertaking to have transported the entire student body to Raleigh for three days to accomplish this end.

I now question Mr. Braxton if a delegation composed of our able president of the student body, Sonny Evans; The vice-president of the student body, Don Furtado; the treasurer of the Student body, Bob Carter; the chairman of the student party, Whit Whitfield; outstanding student Legislators, Tom Long, John Brooks, Miss Connie Bernstein, and distinguished members of the University Party, leading Senator of the Di and Student Party floorleader, Pat Adams; four very capable law students, Joel Fleishman, Charlie Dean, Dave Reid, and Larry McElroy; plus other participants of numerous campus activities, might qualify to express an opinion. To enumerate one point further, the delegation was also composed of approximately one-half independents and one-half representatives of fraternities and sororities.

Now maybe Mr. Braxton has a solution—not yet handed down from his wise and self-imposed celestial pedestal—for the transportation of the whole student body to Raleigh? Maybe Mr. Braxton, if he has no answer to this problem, can find a more diverse and extremely well qualified group, chosen by a bi-partisan selection board, who tried to better represent the students of the University of North Carolina. Of course, Mr. Braxton must be included in any opinionated group.

I would only add that Kuralt's charge of "incompetency" is denied on every issue.

The action of Kuralt and Co. is disguised censorship. The signpost on the road to a controlled press reads "To Russia." If the University liberals can not speak out, then who can?

For some time various groups and individuals have been voicing protests against the noise problem in the mens' dorms. Giving all due credit to our legislative assemblies, I am sure some rational solution will be arrived at through democratic debate. Until such time, however, it seems some practical step could be taken such as the application of accoustical material to the overheads in the halls.

Rameses XXI

It seems apparent to the old Ram that the small recall clique includes more than just those minority malcontents. They are weakly reinforced by another clique known by many as the Graham Memorial Ring—a group of politicians and former politicians who make the Student Union their frequent meeting quarters.

The ring, the Ram thinks, is headed by a former prominent politician who refuses to give up his obsolete ship, E. A. Robinson said, paraphrasing, "He who walks too long walks alone."

Perhaps this politician should read the handwriting on the wall. Casting his lot with the recallers could only make detrimental political capital, Ram thinks.

TEAHOUSE PRODUCTION:

Reviewer Laurels Callender's Part

By HOWARD FOLWEILER

The Carolina Playmakers opened the second show of their season in Memorial Hall Friday night by offering John Patrick's hilarious satire of American military government, The Teahouse of the August Moon. The play is concerned with the not-too-successful attempts of American military government officers to bring "American democracy" to the natives of Okinawa after World War II.

Wainwright Purdy III, a stuffy Colonel, who hopes to become a general to please his wife, sends Captain Fisby, an ex-college professor, along with Sakini, a native interpreter, to take charge of a small Okinawan village. When Fisby builds a teahouse instead of a school "shaped like the pentagon" and rehabilitates the village's economy by selling home-made brandy, a sometimes farcical, sometimes satirical, but always entertaining situation develops.

Although the Playmaker's production was both impressive and enjoyable, it is unfortunate that their performance was not uniformly equal to their material. Owing, perhaps, to opening-night jitters, the first act seemed interminable. The pace of the suposedly fast-moving dialogue dragged along like a snail with arthritis. Happily, the actors, like their Okinawan brandy, seemed to grow better with age. By the third act, the cast was high-stepping assuredly through some first-rate comedy.

After a slow start, Ken Callender, as Colonel Purdy, turned in a performance nothing short of hilarious. Precise timing, coupled with alternate bellowing and frantic pleading to the seemingly insane Fisby produced a thoroughly enjoyable picture of the military stuffed shirt. Particularly memorable was his "I'm going to bring democracy to the citizens of this island if I have to shoot every one of them!"

Joe Dillard was disappointing as Captain Fisby. Obviously too young for the part, he became decidedly distracting, keeping up a continuously nervous movement as though he had a mild case of St. Vitus' dance. His gestures gave the impression of faltering inconclusion, while his speeches were all delivered at the same level of frantic intensity. He did, however, get through the evening without any obvious booboos, which is the main thing after all.

Sakini was amusingly portrayed by Bill Smith. Here again, his obvious youth was somewhat detrimental to the effect of the performance. His gestures were good, but it was too bad that he had only two or three of them. Smith was certainly funny — but not nearly so funny as Patrick's dialogue.

Bob Andrews, as Captain McLean, the psychiatrist, did a near-perfect job on his small role. His highly competent comic technique was beyond reproach — and funny too. His "When you kill a worm, you kill a friend!" brought the house down.

Probably the funniest single incident in the play was the beautiful pratfall by Jim Potter as Sergeant Gregovitch, the tipsy assistant to Colonel Purdy.

It is difficult to conceive how Lotus Blossom, "the first-class Geisha girl," could have been played better than it was by Sodsai Vanij-Vadhana. Although she spoke no words of English during the entire play, her performance, one of fragile grace and beauty, was the most compelling of the evening. She was like a dream — a dream from which we were sorry to wake up.

The crowds of Okinawan villagers were expertly handled. The very small parts of the natives were uniformly well done. Particularly outstanding was the exuberant and hilarious performance of Barbara Battle as Miss Higa Jiga, the president of the LADIES LEAGUE FOR DEMOCRATIC ACTION.

Presented with a difficult play to produce, technically, the Playmakers presented, on the whole, a highly commendable job from the production angle.

Taylor Williams' properties, which included such varied items as a jeep, cricket cages, and a brandy-drinking goat named Virginia, were awe-inspiring.

The costuming by Irene Rains was intelligently done and impressive. The costumes for the many Okinawan villagers seemed, at any rate, authentic and convincing while the ceremonial kimonos of Lotus Flower were breath-takingly gorgeous.

Tommy Rezzuto's settings were superb. Ingeniously functional, they suggested just the right amount of ephemeral oriental grace. The collapsible teahouse itself was a work of art.

The lighting by Jim Armacost left much to be desired. In the downstage areas, the players' faces were often indistinct — not for any apparent artistic reason — but simply because there didn't seem ever to be enough light used.

Urban Planning To Be Discussed

Carl Feiss, planning and urban renewal consultant of Washington, D. C., will be a visiting lecturer with the Department of City and Regional Planning of UNC this weekend.

A well known expert in city planning and urban renewal, Feiss will deliver lectures today at 11 a.m. in Alumni 407 and on Monday at 2 p.m. in the Morehead Faculty Lounge.

His Sunday topic is "New Horizons for Planning," and his Monday topic is "Urban Renewal in Practice."

Interested persons have been invited to attend the lecture series.

Feiss was Chief of Planning for the Division of Slum Clearance and Urban Redevelopment of the Housing and Home Finance Agency for four years.

His many and varied experiences include being Staff Advisor to the President's Committee on Housing Policies and Programs. In the latter capacity he was instrumental in the development of the Housing Act of 1954.

Service Group Is Organized

A new campus organization for town women has been formed to bring together women students who live off the campus.

At a recent meeting in McIver dormitory, a decision was made that the new Town Women's Association be a service organization. Its main function will be to serve the University and its members.

In this capacity, it will serve to bring the town women students into closer contact with the resident students, especially by participation in extracurricular activities.

The following officers have been elected:

President, Bryte Abernathy; vice president, Kay McGavran; secretary-treasurer, Beth Harris; WAA representative, Helen House; YWCA representative, Betty Harrell; and Independent Women's Association representative, Harriett Horney.

The organization will hold its third meeting Tuesday, Nov. 19, in Alderman dormitory at 7:30 p.m.

Petite Musicale Fetes Pianist

Miss Cara Kelson, pianist from New Zealand, now living in Durham, will be featured in the third Petite Musicale to be held in the main lounge of Graham Memorial Hall this evening at 8 o'clock.

Miss Kelson will perform the Schubert B Flat Sonata, Op. Post., the Mozart C Major Sonata, K. 330, and selections by Debussy, Lully, Dandrieu and Rameau.

Admission to this recital is free, and both students and townspeople have been cordially invited.

Petite Musicales are sponsored by the Graham Memorial Activities Board.

Colloquium To Hear Dr. J. Roy

A Fulbright Fellow from Calcutta, India, will be guest speaker at the UNC Statistics Colloquium meeting Monday afternoon (Nov. 18) at 4 o'clock in 206 Phillips Hall.

Dr. Jogabrata Roy will report on the results of recent research into the problem of choosing an efficient experimental design, which is applicable to experiments in medicine, industry and agriculture.

Statisticians and all others interested in experimental design have been invited to attend by Dr. Harold Hotelling, associate director of the UNC Institute of Statistics.

Formerly on the staff of the Indian Statistical Institute, Dr. Roy is spending the current academic year in Chapel Hill and collaborating in a research project with Prof. S. N. Roy, UNC professor of statistics.

English Tests To Be Offered

Sophomores who failed to take the English proficiency test when it was given last month and the first of this month will have another opportunity on November 25—but with a $2 fee for lateness.

General College Dean Cecil Johnson said yesterday that any sophomore who failed to take the test would not be permitted to register for the spring semester.

The only sophomores who will not be required to pay a $2 fine for failure to take the test earlier are those who have an excuse from Dean Johnson.

Proficiency tests will be given in 106 Hanes at 7 p.m. on November 25.

STUDENT - FACULTY DIRECTORIES

Student-faculty directories are now being sold in the Y building. The price is 35 cents. The directories may be secured from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. this week.

COED JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Several companies and organizations will be on campus this week to interview coeds for jobs.

Four companies will be seeking chemistry majors, and Delta Air Lines will send a representative to interview coeds interested in becoming stewardesses.

The YWCA will interview applicants for teenage program directors, young adult program directors, health education directors and college YWCA assistant directors.

Appointments with any company may be made through the University Placement Service.

PHARMACY WIVES

A meeting of the Pharmacy Wives organization will be held Thursday at 8 p.m. in the Institute of Pharmacy.

CANDIDATES DEBATE

There will be a debate among candidates for editor of the Daily Tar Heel in Gerrard Hall at 7 p.m. This discussion will be held in conjunction with informal meetings of both campus political parties. All students have been urged to attend this debate.

STUDENT PARTY AND UNIVERSITY PARTY

Both the SP and UP will hold formal meetings following the candidates' meeting in Gerrard Hall. During these meetings, the parties will decide which, if any, candidates to endorse for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

PHILOSOPHY LECTURES

The Philosophy Departments at UNC and Duke are sponsoring two lectures Thursday and Friday by Prof. Stephen Korner of the University of Bristol in England.

Korner will speak on "Logicism as a Philosophy of Mathematics" Thursday at 8 p.m. at Duke in the Seminar Room of West Duke Building.

On Friday, Korner will be here in Room 105 Caldwell at 8 p.m. to speak on "Philosophic Method."

LEADING TITLE DEFENDERS — These four Carolina cross-country runners are expected to lead the Tar Heels in defense of their Atlantic Coast Conference title tomorrow in Winston-Salem. Left to right are Cowles Liipfert, Wayne Bishop, Dave Scurlock and Captain Ev Whatley. Bishop has not been beaten in his college career.

UNC Favored To Retain ACC Cross-Country Title Monday

By RUSTY HAMMOND

Carolina's undefeated varsity cross-country team tomorrow enters its most important meet of the season when it journeys to Winston-Salem for the ACC Championships.

A total of 64 athletes are entered for the big race and it will get underway at 2:30 p.m. The course distance is four miles.

The Tar Heels swept the same event last year with Carolina's great Jim Beatty capturing the individual honors. Beatty won the meet for the last three years. This year Beatty is gone, but while nobody may fill his shoes for along time, there are several very fine runners representing different schools from around the conference.

Among the best are Dale Tuler and Gaylord Tinsley of Clemson, Cary Weisiger of Duke, Burr Grim and Charles Fleming from Maryland, Billy Inscoe and Joe Creazzo of N. C. State, Paul Farrier and David Bloor from Virginia, Bill Latham and Winfrey Gore of South Carolina, and Bob Medlin and Sam Jordan from Wake Forest.

UNC Represented

The Tar Heels will be very well represented in the meet by Wayne Bishop, Dave Scurlock, Captain Everette Whatley, Cowles Liipfert, and John Reaves. Bishop, cream of the crop, has won every meet in which he has been entered this year with the single exception of the triangle meet with Tennessee and South Carolina when he was injured during the race.

Bishop's stiffest competition will come from Grim, Latham, Medlin and Weisiger. Of these boys, Bishop has beaten all but Grim. The meet with Maryland was cancelled because of the flu.

Grim Tough

Grim has been beaten only once, by Latham, but in his last outing he set a track record at Navy. Though Bishop has been winning consistently, Dave Scurlock must not be overlooked. He won the triangle meet after Bishop was injured.

Duke Tops Tigers, 7-6 To Clinch Orange Bid

DURHAM, Nov. 16 —(AP)— Halfback Wray Carlton scored on a 35-yard pass and kicked the all-important extra point to provide the winning margin as Duke edged Clemson, 7-6, today in a thriller to virtually clinch a trip to the Orange Bowl.

A crowd of 22,000 saw the once-beaten Blue Devils score shortly before the half when quarterback Bob Brodhead whipped a perfect pass to Carlton for a touchdown from the Clemson 35.

Clemson, harrassed by fumbles, drove five times past the Duke 30, once to the 1, before finally scoring late in the fourth quarter. Fullback Bob Spooner crashed over from the 2 for the score, but quarterback Harvey White's placement attempt was wide to the right.

Clemson had driven to the Duke 28, 17, 5, 1, and 7, but three of the drives were halted by costly fumbles.

The Blue Devils, who now have a 6-1-2 season record, can win the Atlantic Coast Conference title and the Jan. 1 trip to Miami by defeating rival North Carolina next Saturday. If Duke should lose, and North Carolina State defeats South Carolina next Saturday, State would win the championship but the Wolfpack is inelegible to play in a bowl game because of an NCAA suspension.

Sooners Upset 7-0 By Irish

NORMAN, Okla., Nov. 16 —(AP)— Oklahoma's all-time record of 47 straight football victories was shattered today by an underdog Notre Dame team that marched 80-yards on the ground in the closing minutes for the all-important touchdown and a 7-0 triumph.

Oklahoma, ranked No. 2 in the nation and an 18-point favorite, couldn't move against the rock-wall Notre Dame line and the Sooners saw another of its national records broken—scoring in 123 consecutive games.

The defeat was only the 9th for Oklahoma Coach Bud Wilkinson since he became head coach at Oklahoma in 1947 and virtually ended any chance for the Sooners getting a third straight national championship.

Although the partisan, sellout crowd of 62,000 came out for a Roman holiday, they were stunned into silence as the Sooners were unable to pull their usual last-quarter winning touchdowns—a Wilkinson team trademark. . . . . .

As the game ended when Oklahoma's desperation passing drive was cutoff by an intercepted aerial, the crowd rose as one and suddenly gave the Notre Dame team a rousing cheer.

State Beats VPI, 12-0

ROANOKE, Va., Nov. 16 —(AP)— Wide awake North Carolina State parlayed Virginia Tech mistakes and a 58-yard touchdown run by Dick Hunter into a 12-0 football victory over the frustrated Techmen here today.

It was the sixth victory of the season against only one defeat and two ties for the Wolfpack. State now has shut out five of its eight opponents.

Virginia Tech, plagued with fumbles, pass interceptions and untimely penalties as it has been all season, six times threatened the State goal. The Techmen advanced to the State one, the 33, the 15 and the 17 in the first half and got to the 24 and the 4 after intermission. But each time State managed to stave off the threat.

Myers Park Wins Cross Country Meet

Myers Park High School of Charlotte captured the state high school cross country meet here yesterday with a low score of 25 points, edging out East Mecklenburg High, also of Charlotte, and Durham High.

Held on the Finley Golf Course, the meet ended with East Mecklenburg's 31 points in second place and Durham High taking third place with 140 points.

A total of eight teams participated in the 2 2/10 mile run with 49 contestants running.

The top five were (1) David Gilmore of Myers Park, 11:35.8; (2) Charles Powell of Myers Park, 11:45; (3) Jerry Fincher of East Mecklenburg, 12:07; (4) Bill Carr of Myers Park; (5) Steve Henderson of East Mecklenburg.

CAVALCADE STAR — Hoke Simpson, famed for his record, "No. 1" will be one of the stars appearing in the "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent" next Tuesday in Memorial Hall.

Hoke 'No. 1' Simpson In Talent Calvalcade

By MARY MOORE MASON

Hoke Simpson, young man of renown in the world of "platter spinning," will be one of the star attractions of the "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent," annual talent show sponsored by the Y and GMAB, which this year will be Tuesday evening, Nov. 26, at 8 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Hoke, famous for his record "Number One," a calypso ballad about the achievements of the unbeaten Carolina basketball team, is now a sophomore at UNC. This week he is anxiously awaiting news of how successful his newest record released last Friday by ABC Paramount, is. The record has "Gigi," a rocking ballad on one side and "I've Finally Found You," a rock and roll piece on the other side.

Hoke wrote "Gigi" one afternoon this summer while he was lifeguarding at a pool near his home in Larchmont, N. Y. Although he has been kidded a lot about some fictional young lady named Gigi, he says that he actually wrote the song only using the name of the captain of the girls' swimming team at Larchment because he thought "Gigi" was such a catchy name.

"Hoke, how did you ever get your ABC Paramount" contract," I asked.

"Well it's like this," the tall slender young man said with a gleam in his eye, "When I was in New York, I went up to the ABC Paramount office. After trying to get by the secretary for some time and practically getting thrown out of the office on my ear, I finally told her that I was a very close friend of George Hamilton of "The Rose and the Baby Ruth" fame which of course was not quite the truth as I had never met George.

"I also told her that I had a very hot song that would sell a couple of million copies, and that every company in town was after it. I must have convinced her for I got an interview with Don Costa, head talent man, and then was offered a four-year contract with four one-year options."

When asked how he started on his road to fame, Hoke explained that he first got interested in singing and playing a string instrument when he was in the seventh grade. In one of the high school plays there was an Hawaiian scene calling for several uke players.

He was grabbed to be one of them. Since he didn't know how to play the instrument, Hoke took a few quick lessons back stage before the play, got interested and soon took guitar lessons.

Hoke, now a 19-year-old sophomore at Carolina, started recording last year. His break came after he told Roy Holsten, former Dean of Student Affairs, that his ambition was to record a few of his songs.

Holsten introduced him to Orville Campbell who told Hoke that one of his ambitions was to record a song which he had written about the basketball team. So, both realized their ambitions when Hoke with a calypso band of four other UNC Students who called themselves "Three Bums and a Drum" released "Number One."

Hoke came to UNC to school because he lived in Flat Rock at one time and had spent a lot of time during the summers in this state and liked it so much that he decided to come down from the North to go school. However, he hopes to go back up north after college and try to get into the entertainment field up there.

Federal Grant Will Go For New Laboratory

By ROBERT BARTHOLOMEW

A grant of $39,325 has been made to the UNC School of Medicine by the U. S. Public Health Service for the construction of a new research laboratory.

The new laboratory, which will be used by the Department of Pathology, will be located at Snipe's Farm north of Carrboro. This is University-owned property.

The total cost of the project, which is expected to get underway by the end of the year, is $78,650. The National Institutes of Health of the Public Health Service has granted half of this sum. The remaining funds will come from other sources, including the National Hemophilia Foundation.

The new research facility will be used for the study of hemophilia, a hereditary disease occurring in males but transmitted by females. The disease is characterized by the failure of blood to clot.

The project will be under the direction of Dr. K. M. Brinkhous, head of the Department of Pathology.

At the present time and for the past 10 years these studies of hemophilia have been carried on in the main building of the School of Medicine. Due to the expanded four year program in the School of Medicine and increasing research in the field of hemophilia, new quarters have been urgently needed for several years.

The Department of Pathology of the School of Medicine maintains a unique colony of dogs. These are the only dogs in the world known to have hemophilia.

This new research facility will provide increased kennel areas for these dogs which are so important in the study of bleeding diseases.

All of the dogs of the colony are descendents of Terry Bay, a female Irish Setter who was a transmitter of hemophilia. Terry Bay was brought to the School of Medicine 10 years ago.

Among Terry's numerous descendents there have been normal and hemophilic males, transmitters and normal females and the world's first female hemophilic dogs. These dogs have been kept alive by good care, food, constant attention and thousands of blood transfusions.

The bleeding trouble of the animals have been studied intensively to obtain a better understanding of hemophilia. Present methods of treatment of the disease in humans are based on information discovered while working with this colony of dogs.

Dook Queen Selection Set Tonight

Four Found Alive

Anchorage, Alaska, Nov. 16 —(AP)— Four crewmen were found alive and six dead today in the wreckage of an Air Force B29 that crashed into an Alaska mountainside during a snowstorm last night.

The four survivors, all injured, were airlifted here from the crash scene in the Talkeetna Range about 50 miles to the Northeast.

Chancellor Will Speak At Dialectic Installation

By DAVIS YOUNG

Chancellor William B. Aycock will be the main speaker at tonight's Dialectic Senate meeting starting at 8 o'clock in New West. He has been invited along with ex-Chancellor Robert B. House, who will introduce him.

The presence of Aycock and House is in conjunction with the inauguration of Di President Girard Boudreau. Aycock's speech will be on the subject "The Role of the Literary Societies at Carolina in the Future."

Former president of the Di, Larry McElroy, will swear in the new president. After the ceremony, Boudreau will address the assemblage on "The Challenge that the American College Youth Faces Today."

Boudreau has been active as president of Delta Upsilon Fraternity, vice president of Graham Memorial Board, chairman of the Carolina Mardi Gras and a member of the student body president's cabinet. He is currently reading for honors in history.

The Philanthropic Literary Society has suspended operations for tonight in honor of Boudreau's inauguration.

Boudreau gave the following statement to the Daily Tar Heel yesterday from his office: "I am honored by Chancellor Aycock and House's coming tonight. I am sure that their being in the historic Di Hall will enrich this traditional ceremony. I sincerely hope that the entire student body and faculty will come."

Tar Heel Pix

Yack pictures of the Daily Tar Heel staff will be taken Wednesday at 2:15 p.m. in the Tar Heel offices. All staff members have been urged to be present.

Air Views Before Students At Meet

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

Around 300 students heard the three editorial candidates in the recall election and their speakers talk and answer questions for about two and half hours.

Present Editor Neil Bass spoke first to say that the issue was "freedom of the press and freedom of expression." He then answered "nebulous charges" which were in a bill debated the Di and Phi.

He promised an "active and controversial newspaper;" he said that he hoped the students recognzied that "a recall would hamstring the editor."

He claimed that the recallers had tried to cloud the issue of freedom of the press by asserting that the present editor is "incompetent."

"If I did not honestly feel that I was competent, I would resign," Bass said.

Paul Rule said that it had been rumored that he had been influenced by the recallers or by Bass to run for editor, but he said that the truth was that he was running indepentdently.

He claimed that it was not just an issue of freedom of the press but that the quality of The Daily Tar Heel had fallen from its past standard.

He implied that, if he were elected editor he would cut the cost of the newspaper, and said that he would start a training program for the staff.

He criticized the editor's use of large words and the manner in which he expressed himself. He said he would take a moderate segregationalist's viewpoint on integration.

Barry Winston said his objectives in running were to have a free but responsible press, objective news coverage, unrestricted freedom of student expression, intelligent editorial of all issues and journalistic competence.

He alleged that some of the statements in Bass's editorials concerning the "flu epidemic" were "completely unbacked by fact."

He said that people had clamied he was being backed by a clique and he asked the accusers to name the clique. He said the number of candidates showed that a clique was not running the recall.

Pebley Barrow, speaking for Neil Bass, said he had known eight other editors of The Daily Tar Heel and that Bass's courage of conviction compared favorably with theirs.

He claimed that it was a logical absurdity for the editor to be expected to agree with all the students and asserted that Bass had a right to be wrong.

Grayson Mills, speaking for Paul Rule, said that freedom of the pres was not the issue, other wise there would be no recall. He stated that the newspaper had a debt "to general opinion."

Mills pointed out that Rule had had experience with newspapers. The speaker said "we are here to recall a man who is incompetent." If the recall is not successful the students to make the right choice in the spring.

Al Lowenstein, speaker for Barry Winston, said that all Bass's supporters could think to say in reply was "freedom of the press."

He charged that the editor had picked on individuals, and then he read headlines from the editorial page and parts of editorials to support his charge that the editor was incompetent.

He said did not think that without responsible editorials the paper could remain free or deserved to remain free. He read a letter from (Tar Heel co-editor during the last recall) Louis Krarr which said the issue was incompetency and not a matter of editorial freedom.

Dave Reid, student body attorney general during the last recall movement and backer of the recall, claimed that the editors were upheld only because there was no candidate running against them.

He charged that an organized clique was trying "to hang Neil Bass on a cross."

The University Party will meet tonight at seven o'clock in order to decide its stand on the matter of endorsement of a candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel in the recall election, Nov. 26.

The Party met last night to decide the issue but Chairman Harry Braxton decided that sufficient representation was not present. He added, however, that the issue would be settled tonight regardless of the turnout. Braxton further urged that all members of the party be on hand for this very important meeting.

The Student Party last night endorsed Doug Eisele as its candidate in the campus-wide recall election slated for next Tuesday.

Eisele, speaking before the group, refused the nomination by saying he didn't wish to enter the recall race. But the SP nominated him anyway. There is no confirmation as to whether Eisele planned to enter the race.

'Y' TV Series Features Camus "The Stranger"

A dramatic adaptation of Nobel Prize winner Albert Camus' novel, "The Stranger" will be presented tonight at 9:30 on WUNC-TV. Following the presentation a panel will discuss the work.

This show is one of a series of programs presented by WUNC-TV in cooperation with the YMCA. The series is entitled "Faith and the Fine Arts."

Other shows upcoming on succeeding Tuesday nights will be Arthur Miller's "A Memory of Two Mondays," Modern Sculpture, Religion and Politics, and The Nativity Theme in Art.

On tonight's program the panel which will discuss Camus' novel consists of Dr. Maurice Natanson of the Philosophy Dept., Jean-Pierre Boissavit and Jim Carse who has been acting as the moderator of the series.

Featured in the dramatic portion will be Bob Ross and Pete O'Sullivan. The producer-director of the series is Jim Studdiford of WUNC-TV.

Miss Eve McClatchey is chairman of the planning group which initiated the series and plans the programs in it.

The full schedule for the entire series will be announced soon following final plans to be made by her group for the rest of the year.

J. M. Morehead Made Honorary Phi Beta Kappa

John Motley Morehead was made an honorary member of Phi Beta Kappa at UNC, his alma mater, in ceremonies at his home in Rye, N. Y., Sunday.

Dr. Ernest Mackie, dean of awards, and Prof. Carydon P. Spruill inducted Morehead into Phi Beta Kappa.

A native of North Carolina, Morehead graduated from Carolina in 1891. He is an internationally-known industrialist, engineer, scientist, philanthropist and former minister to Sweden. He had been an executive with Union Carbide and Carbon Co.

He founded the Morehead Scholarships here, where at present there are 105 Morehead Scholars, each receiving $1,250 a year.

He gave the University the Morehead Building which houses the Zeiss Planetarium, the only one of its kind on a University campus.

Among his other gifts to the University are the Morehead Sun Dial and the Morehead-Patterson Bell Tower.

Music Series Slated Tonight

Tonight's Tuesday Evening Concert Series will feature seldom-performed compositions involving harps and flutes in addition to music for strings and piano. This marks the fourth fall concert sponsored by the UNC Music Department.

The program of chamber music, to be held at 8 o'clock tonight in Hill Hall, will be open to the public. There will be no admission charge.

Flutists will open the program with the Beethoven Trio in C Major, Opus 87. Two arrangements by Salzedo and several of his original works will also be presented.

The second group of selections be compositions for the two harps. The first half of the program will conclude with the third movement of a quintet for harp, flute, violin, viola and violoncello by Jean Cras, a 20th century French composer. Works by Reger and Schumann wil be presented after intermission.

String players in tonight's performance are Edgar Alden, violinist; Dorothy Alden, violist; and Mary Gray Clarke, cellist. At the piano will be Wilton Mason, director of the University Chorus.

Harpists are Suzanne Davids and Emily Kellam. Earl Slocum, director of the University Orchestra, will be the featured flutist.

Baptist Convention Should Be Controversial

Delegates to the State Baptist Convention in Raleigh this week will decide upon two highly controversial questions:

(1) The merits of allowing dancing on the campuses of Meredith and Wake Forest Colleges.

(2) The merits of arguments against the continuance of Dr. Harold Tribble as president of Wake Forest College.

The first question should be answered with an open-and-shut affirmative. There should be little doubt that dancing is a pleasurable and accepted social question. And trustees of the two institutions should immediately abolish the ban against dancing. Not to do so is an inexcusable and provincial anachronism.

Concerning the second question, we whould agree wholeheartedly with the Wake Forest College Old Gold and Black. Advocates of Dr. Tribble's resignation should put up or shut up. Charges against his administration have been nebulous and have failed to present, we feel, justifiable evidence to support their argument.

It has always been somewhat amazing to us that dancing has never been accepted by officials of Meredith and Wake Forest Colleges.

There have been numerous disagreements with the University of North Carolina's Board of Trustees. Many have asserted that open support of educational segregation is an anachronism and highly provincial.

But it may certainly be said that the University's trustees have enough modernism about them to endorse dancing as an accepted social institution.

Convention delegates should wholeheartedly endorse dancing at Meredith and Wake Forest. And they should clear up, once and for all, any questions concerning Wake Forest President Harold Tribble's administration.

Wake Forest has every opportunity in the world for immediate expansion and progression.

Such opportunity should not be minimized by haggling among trustees, alumni and the administration.

THE FLORIDA STATE ALLLIGATOR:

Editor Condemns Recall; South's Eyes Are On UNC

We on the staff of the Florida Alligator have been greatly interested at the move for a recall election for Editor of the Daily Tar Heel. A similar attempt began here on the Florida campus not long ago, and was beaten down by the student body for the same reason that the Daily Tar Heel recall should be defeated.

I do not know you personally, nor do I seek to defend or criticize the specific policies and editorials for which your enemies seek to unseat you from office.

But any editor elected to do his job, is bound to arouse some criticism. No conscientious editor who speaks and writes as he feels can help but alienate some segment of the student body. And certainly even if the editor stands alone—this is his prerogative—and none should seek to remove him from office because they disagree with his views.

If this recall election succeeds, and I pray that it does not, no future editor of the Daily Tar Heel wil be free from the threat of being removed from office because his policies are disagreed with. No matter how good a paper the editor publishes, he will be afraid to to speak his mind editorially as he conscientiously feels he ought to.

And mind you, for UNC students that know the reputation of the Tar Heel, let me stress that it is one of the outsanding college newspapers in the country. The Tar Heel's factual and interesting news stories and its well written and pointed editorial page are among the most outstanding anywhere. The UNC student body can well be proud of its student paper.

I earnestly hope that the student body will not take the chance of throwing away the editorial independence and integrity of the Tar Heel by approving this recall movement. The eyes of college newspapers all over the South will be on UNC student body this week to determine what happens.

Good luck, and we hope that the student body of your great school realizes that this week it is not just voting on whether to retain an editor. It is deciding the future of its University paper, and the standards and ethics by which it expects its editors to conform in future years.

Local Solons & The SSL..

The Student Legislature this Thursday night will approve or defeat a bill calling for continuance of the Carolina delegation to the State Student Legislature. The bill also outlines a more democratic process of delegate selection.

According to the bill's provisions, the selection of SSL delegates will be conducted by the same committee; but the University Student Legislature must approve the slate selected.

Such democratic selection should definitely be approved by local lawmakers. And the University's SSL delegation, always active and lively, should positively be continued.

The misconstrunings of state newspapers and disagreement with stands, courageous stands, should certainly not merit agreement with proposals to abolish the delegation.

Legislators should demonstrate admirable responsibility and approve the bill.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Provocation Of Thought & O. Faubus

Whit Whitfield

What we need on this campus is a newspaper calculated to make students think.

We submit that the Daily Tar Heel does just that. Take last Wednesday for instance. On the front page was a small article entitled "Game Tickets." This in itself isn't much of a thought provoker, but if you had read further you would have noticed that it reminded students that tickets to the Duke game on Nov. 16, were on sale in the Athletic Office for half price.

Three thousands tickets were available to those students who made application before Saturday noon, Nov. 9. If this doesn't cause you to think, nothing will. In the first place, we don't play a game on Saturday Nov. 16,—not Duke, not Sweetbriar, not anybody.

It is an open date. Even if we should find someone to play on the date, it would be difficult of not impossbile to secure the tickets before Saturday noon, Nov. 9, since the article appeared on Wednesday, Nov. 13. We don't doubt that this sort of thing can be promoted, since someone is obviously trying it, but the question is "who?" If he gets by with it, he would be awarded an honorary degree in advertising.

A brief item in the news a few days back quoted Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas as saying that he might be a candidate for president on a third party ticket in 1960. He even went so far as to say that he was receiving support from all over the nation, including, the north.

This, we submit as the laugh of the era. Mind you, not the laugh of the week, month, etc. He did not say exactly where his support several million people hospitalized with mental disorders in the United States. We don't know whether or not they are allowed to vote, not they are allowed to vote.

The Russkies don't even know what happened to their dog. One of the top Soviet Scientists, a gentleman named Skabeltisn, claims that the pooch has been dead for some time, while Bulganin is of the opinion that it is still alive. Since the latter outranks the former (at least when this was written), the former stands a good chance to get a new job somewhere in Siberia, maybe at a power station.

THE LAST WORD

A husband and wife were in sharp disagreeemnt over what suit he should purchase. Finally, the wife relented and said, "Well, go ahead and please yourself. After all, you're the one who will wear it."

The man replied, "Well, dear, I did figure that I'd probably be wearing the coat and vest anyway."

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

The Tyranny Of The Majority

Curtis Gans

There may be something to be said for the Supreme Court's keeping its "ear to the ground." But there isn't much.

The Supreme Court and the judicial system under the Constitution is the only place where the cause of individual rights may be upheld against the onslaughts of the legislative and executive departments. As such, it is the individual's only safeguard against persecution and infringement on his rights under a democracy.

However, it maybe noted that segregation was "right" in 1876, and wrong in 1954. The loyalty-security program was "right" in the early 1950's and tinged with wrong now.

The question then arises as to what is right, and whether the concept of right in a democracy and under democratic laws is dependent on sounding out the particular climate of opinion prevailing at the time.

The judicial system has operated under the philosophy that individual rights are relative to time and hence can be suspended when the court, in conjunction with the legislative and judicial branches of the government, deems fitting with the opinion of the times.

If this is a true conception of justice, then perhaps there is no justice.

If the prevalent opinion in America is anti-Catholic or anti-Hebrew, then it is conceivable to suppose that freedom of religion may be suspended. If the prevalent thought of the times is that delinquents and criminals should be dealt with summarily, then it is a possibility that rights to trial by jury will be suspended.

It would indeed be a sad state of affairs, if democracy would generate into this type of majority tyranny.

It has been said previously that he fundamental difference between mobocracy and democracy is in the protection of individual rights. If these rights under a democracy are relative to time and political climate, there evolves a system of rights that are not rights, but are just expressions of majority opinion.

It must be, as it is outlined in the Constitution of the United States and in the Bill of Rights, that there are certain fundamental rights of individuals that cannot be suspended by any branches of American government at any time. It is the duty of the courts, as the sole weapon in the arsenal of the individual in a democracy, to view these rights under a democracy as immutable.

This brings up a philosophic question of whether this is an absolute judicial system in which judgement is only a cognitive realization of a factual situation.

This is true, but only partly so. For the judgement depends on the framework, and after the U. S. took its framework as it legal premise. The laws and concepts of right are deducible from this. However, what is right in American democracy is not necessarily right in the framework of facism, communism, or even Bristish democracy. It is right only as it is consistent with the framework of American democracy.

Thus, there is a necessity for a court system to point out the inconsistencies between legislation and framework. And it must be remembered that if consistery with segregation is either right or wrong, and not right in 1876 and wrong in 1954.It is wrong at all times that the Constitution of America with its Fourteenth Amendment prevails.

Apprehension has been expressed as to the legislative function of the court, but as long as the court is not allowed to initiate positive legislation it cannot encroach on the powers of the other two branches of the government. It must then stand to negate any infringements of rights.

The only time right can change to wrong is when the frame work changes; i. e. a Constitutional Amendment. Otherwise Congress must be prohibited from infringing on the powers of the court, and thus it would be unnecessary for the courts to sound out popular opinion.

Only if justice is more than a bending to the popular will, can democracy be democracy.

NEWS AND OBSERVER:

Recall Election & Self-Kicking

Over at Chapel Hill for the second time in a couple of years, there is a movement to recall—that is to eject—the editor of the student newspaper —The Daily Tar Heel.

Apparently students, who find that they don't agree with the editor they elected, want to give him the gate. That was the motivation in the case of two other editors they tried to remove, one of whom is now a Rhodes Scholar and the other a brilliant reporter on the Wall Street Journal.

Maybe the present editor is a very different young man. The principle is the same in his case. If the students believe in the democracy by which this young man was elected, they better hold also to principle of free expression, too. They can recall him. But if they do they will be admitting both the failure of their own democracy and their unwillingness to tolerate opinions with which they disagree.

They can't kick the editor without kicking themselves.

GOETTINGEN LETTER:

Free Class Cuts And No Quizzes

(University student Dave Davis is currently on exchange with the University of Goettingen in Germany. This communique is the first of a series to be published on life in German universities.—The Editor)

Midst the gay atmosphere of autumn and a throng of bicycles, the students of Goettingen University came pouring into their university around the first week of November.

Since there are no dormitories at a German university, the students must find rooms in towns in which to live. The almost 7,000 students are, therefore, like the buildings of the university itself, spread completely over the town of almost 100,000 inhabitants.

Lectures began Nov. 2, but the students will visit various lectures until Nov. 26, at which time they must choose their classes. During this three-week shopping around period, the students attend many lectures, especially those of the more well-known professors, in order to see what is being offered.

The courses offered vary each semester; students attend various universities throughout Germany, depending on what is being offered at the time. It is not at all unusual to meet students who have studied at four or five different colleges.

Student freedom is quite treasured here. No class attendance is compulsory, and no particular schedule fo courses is required for a degree. There is no burden of weekly quizzes, but only one big examination at the end of four years, upon which the entire slate of university studies depends.

One chooses his curriculum and studies as he pleases, there being no pressure whatever on him.

The teacher-student relation at a German university is also quite different from that in the United States, being much more formal and respectful. The students applaud the professors before and after each lecture by tapping lightly on their desks. Some professors, however, are so popular that even standing room is often hard to obtain at their lectures.

A long winter's study will come soon. But as yet the students at Goettingen are quite occupied at both parties and dances, celebrating the opening of a new semester and their return to the beloved university.

Next Musicale Slated Sunday

Three faculty members from the Music Department will be featured in the fourth Petite Musicale at 8 o'clock Sunday evening, in Gerrard Hall.

They are Miss Mary Gray Clarke, cello; Miss Lillian Pruett, harpsichord, and Dr. Earl Slocum, flute.

Included in the program will be two Trios in A Flat and in D Major by Joseph Hayden. Miss Clarke and Miss Pruett will perform two sonatas for cellor and harpsichord—one in a A Flat by Giuseppe Valentini, and one in D Major by Pietro Locatelli.

Dr. Slocum, professor of music theory, is director of the University Symphony Orchestra. He is a pupil of John Wummer, solo flutist for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra.

Miss Clarke, instructor in cello, and Miss Pruett, instructor in piano, are both candidates for the Ph. D. in the Music Department.

Admission to this concert is free. The public has been invited.

MOONIK MANIK — Who is this little green man from the moon? Gail Godwin, participant in the fabulous "Operation Girlnik," admires one of the little green men who will enroll at UNC on the return of Girlnik, space ship leaving for the moon this Saturday from in front of the Planehead Moretorium.

SPACE SAFARI

'Operation Girlnik' To Moon Leaves Planehead Moretorium This Saturday

By MARY MOORE MASON

Attention, all you lucky Carolina people! Little did you know that in the deepest, darkest part of the night for the last three weeks the UNC science and physics departments have been hard at work perfecting a rocket which will be launched to the moon this Saturday.

The rocket would, of course, have been ready to launch from the playing field at Woollen Gym Saturday before last, if it had not been sabotaged by three football players disguised as mad Russians. According to Ivan Biteoflunch, spokesman for the group, "the coach said if one more thing happened on Saturday, they wouldn't have time for the game."

The trip, sponsored by GMAB, the Y, and the Daily Tar Heel, will begin at 3:36 p.m. on Saturday when the rocket is launched in front of the Morehead Planetarium. This is so the rocket can leave by sundial time which it will follow throughout its course.

Now, as for who can go on this little Safari through Space. Oh, you poor unlucky boys. . .only coeds can go on this operation known as "Operation Girlnik.' Why is this? Well, after weeks of seminars and discussion groups with the sociology dept., the biology dept., and the R.O.T.C. (Removal Organization for Them Coeds), the co-sponsors of the trip realized that the position of the coed on the campus is a tragic one.

The ratio is such that there are six girls to every one boy on the campus. Consequently, very few of the fair Carolina damsels ever are able to meet eligible young men.

Thus the purpose of Operation Girlnik is two-fold: first to send up fair and eligible demsels (each one of course sponsored by some local fraternity, sorority, dorm or kennel) to mingle with and marry the numerous illustrious and eligible young bachelors which, we have been assured by the IDC (Interplanetary Damsel Cumulation, exist on the moon; and secondly, to bring back the by-products of these marriages as exchange students to UNC. Thus Carolina will out-strip the University of Moscow in Interplanetary Relations.

The Daily Tar Heels is planning to renovate parts of Victory Village for the newly woeds whom it expects back by the end of this semester. All professors are giving coeds who participate a leave of absence and credit for a lab course in Interplanetary Relations.

The Daily Tar Heel is also sponsoring a new colossal contest in connection with this project. The first coed who becomes engaged to a Moonoker will have all wedding arrangements planned by Miss Mary Alys Voorhees, Coed and Fashion Editor of the paper and all wedding expenses paid for by the Student Legislature.

Her maid of honor will be the Dean of Women.

An all-expenses paid honeymoon to the outside ring of Saturn will be given, and when the happy couple return to UNC they will reside in the luxurious arboretum greenhouse which will be equipped with hot and cold running vodka just to spite the Russians.

The names of all lucky coeds sponsored are to be turned in immediately by their sponsors to the Y Information Office. Lenoir Hall, by the way, will prepare bag lunches for the coeds leaving on the Saturday rocket.

Boys, we know that you are disappointed, but your time will be next. And you should see the latest news releases on Marilyn Moonoker. The Moon's latest Astronomical Anatomical Asset.

Three Scholarships Available For Outstanding UNC Students

Three scholarships will be available this year to outstanding juniors and seniors at UNC through money granted the Department of Romance Languages by the Cultural Services of the French Embassy, it was announced today by Dr. Jacques Hardre, chairman of the Scholarship Selection Committee.

The money from the annual grant of the French Government to the UNC Department of Romance Languages will be used to encourage and reward outstanding students in French.

According to Dr. Harde, this is the first time that the UNC Department of Romance Languages has had this much money available for scholarships to undergraduates.

The French Government Scholarships will be awarded by a committee composed of staff members of the Department of Romance Languages.

Applicants should be in their juniors or senior years and must be French majors.

Regulation for the scholarships further state that preference will be given to students who intend to continue their studies in graduate school.

Applications for the scholarships should reach the committee not later than April 1 of each year. Recipients of the scholarships valued at $300 each will be notified by May 1 each year.

Application blanks are now available for interested scholarhip candidates. Any questions should be referred to Dr. Hardre.

INITIAL PRODUCTION

'Judith,' Petite Dramatique, Opens In GM Lounge Dec. 8

By CURTIS GANS

Carolyn Marsh, Karry Moore and Leon Rooke will star in the initial Petite Dramatique production. "Judith" by Jean Giradoux to be held in GM's Main Lounge, Dec. 8 and 9.

Mis Marsh, a graduate English student from Memphis, Tenn., will play the lead role of Judith, who in the course of the play is transformed from a girl, to a woman, to a saint.

A graduate of Christian College, Southwestern at Memphis, Miss Marsh won the Southwestern Design Award for her costuming of "Hamlet" at the Memphis Shakespeare Festival in 1956. She has acted with the Memphis Little Theatre, Christian College Theatre Southwestern Players and the Center Players, besides having tele vision and modeling experience.

Some of Miss Marsh's previous roles include: Salome, in the Oscar Wilde play of the same name; Lilly, in "Rope;" Elmire, in "Tartuffe;" and Sylvia, in "The Game of Love and Chance." She played Yolande in the Playmaker's production of "The Lark," earlier this season.

Holofernes, the barbarian king to whom Judith gives herself in order to save her people, will be portrayed by Harry Moore, graduate Art student, from Elizabethtown. A major in art with a minor in dramatic art as an undergraduate, Moore has been a part of several dramatic productions including "Medea" and "Joan of Lazraine."

Moore was the winner of first prize at the 1957 State Art Fair for sculpture. His work was also one of 60 accepted for the N. C. Artist's Show, and he is currently competing for $300 art scholarship. One of his main interests is painting.

Leon Rooke, a senior dramatic art major, will play the Grand Rabbi of Israel who persuades Judith of her duty to give herself to Holofernes and save Israel.

Rooke, author of over 20 plays, has had acting experience at Mars Hill College, and played one of the lead roles in the Petite Dramatique production of "Caligula" last year. He has won both the Betty Smith Playwriting Award and the Koch Playwriting Award.

Directing the production will be Nancy Green, graduate English student and former graduate of UNC with a major in dramatic art. Miss Green, a former Playmaker, has acted with the Barter Theatre of Virginia, Circle Theatre, Little Theatre of the Rockies, and in "Unto These Hills" and "Horn in the West."

She has taken part in several off-Broadway productions, and has directed and designed such plays as "The Taming of the Shrew," "Bell, Book, and Candle," and "Electra."

The play, taken from the story of Judith in the Apocrypha, relates the saving of the city of Israel by Judith, according to a prophecy. From her act of giving herself bodily to Holofernes, she finds her real self, and the conflict between herself, society and God, produces one of the major themes in the play.

Flaying the role of John, Judith's faithful boy friend and lieutenant in the Israeli Army, is Anthony Wolff.

The role of Susanna, the sympathetic prestitute who wants to go in Judith's place, will be played by Ann Bachman, senior European history major.

Betty Rhodes dramatic art major, will play the sadistic procuress who taunts Judith, and Jim Tyndall will portray Egon, Holofernes' slighty-less-than-masculine lieutenant.

Ben Clymer, graduate student from Wilmington, Del., will play Judith's Uncle Joseph. The part of the Cantor will be portrayed by Larry Anderson, sophomore Playmaker.

Hal Williamson, senior RTMVP major, will play the drunken guard, who becomes the voice of God. Williamson has acted previously with the Playmakers and Sound and Fury, and is a UNC cheerleader.

Others in the cast include: Mike Okun, as Little Jacob; John Hodgkins, as Uri; Lew Hardee, as Otta; Bill Ridenhour, as the servant; and Curtis Gans, as the Prophet.

Seamon Gottlieb, producer of the play and chairman of the GMAB Foreign Film and Petite Dramatique Committee, announced that the production will be free of charge and that students, faculty and townspeople are invited. Curtain time will be 8 p.m.

Lighting for the production will be handled by Rand Bailey, and property manager will be Glenna Meginnis. Stage manager for the play is Curtis Gans and assistant stage manager will be Bob Huffman.

Lefler Is Winner

Hamp Lefler (UP) won out over Danny Lotz (SP) in last week's election for president of the junior class, it was announced today by elections officials.

Scent Of Oranges; Duke Is In

Duke is going to the Orange Bowl by virtue of an extra point. Clemson made a gallant try but the scent of orange was too much for Frank Howard's youths as they developed a cronic case of fumbleitis at crucial moments. Carolina sat and watched and that was just as bad as being on the field for there was nothing that could be done from the stands.

No matter what may be said to the contrary, the Tar Heels definitely felt they were in the Orange Bowl race prior to the Duke-Clemson game. And even the most pessimistic Carolina fan must admit there was some outside chance for the Tar Heels.

But now its all over as far as the Orange Bowl is concerned; The Dooks have it. But that should not stain the perennial color of the Duke-Carolina affair in Durham this Saturday. This, supposedly is the big one for both schools.

Will Duke Win Hurt UNC Morale Saturday?

How much Duke's win over Clemson will affect the play of the Tar Heels is a matter of conjecture. In our opinion, it should have little if any affect for several reasons.

First, Carolina has bettered its most optimistic expectations this season. Nobody expected the Tar Heels to even have the Orange Bowl in mind by this time. The players should realize that they have done an excellent job all year long and that 1958 will put them strongly in the running for the New Year's Day extravaganza.

Secondly, any loss of efficiency by disappointment in the Tar Heel camp should be neutralized by the fact that Duke could easily suffer a psychological letdown after "sweating" through the past four weeks to get the bowl representation.

Finally, the strong rivalry between the two schools should serve as incentive for the Tar Heels, more so that the Blue Devils. Carolina has had a week's layoff and has not been subjected to the tedious pressure which Duke has. Also, Jim Tatum's club has had a long time to prepare for Duke and this could have a vital bearing on the outcome of the contest.

Thus, the Blue Devils should not go into their stadium Saturday expecting anything resembling a breather. The Tar Heels have two games remaining and need at least one win to assure them of a winning season.

How The Heck Did They Do It?

How the Blue Devils managed to squeeze by the inspired Tigers we'll never know. It was Clemson's ball game in everything but the score. Duke didn't even appear to belong on the same field, but it was down on those goal lines that the inexperience of the young Tigers proved costly.

There was not even the slightest resemblance between the Clemson team which appeared in Kenan Stadium for a sound trouncing Sept. 28 and the one which kept Duke with its back to the wall all afternoon Saturday. That the Tigers were fired up to a peak for Duke was obvious to everyone of the 22,000 fans who braved this sloppy weather to witness the contest.

It's no wonder the Blue Devils lauded Clemson as the toughest team they've played this season — it was indeed.

Ranson's Boys Did It Again Yesterday

Congratulations to Dave Ranson and his fine cross-country team. The thinclads did it again yesterday — captured the Atlantic Coast Conference cross-country title. It was just another in a tremendous collection of titles which Ranson teams have won since he came here 34 years ago.

The reoccurrence of an old knee injury to running ace Wayne Bishop was a sad blow to the occasion. Bishop promises to be one of the school's all-time great runners, but only if he can overcome the injury plague which kept him out during his sophomore season.

Greensboro's Dave Scurlock, whose real meat is track but who does a fine job on the cross-country cinders, finished second to Bill Latham, the fine South Carolina runner.

Larry Cheek Story Hits Basketball Mag

Sports briefs.

Larry Cheek, last year's Daily Tar Heel sports editor, has a couple of bylined stories in a pre-season basketball magazine, soon to hit the newsstands. One of them is a story on the magnificent Tar Heels of 1956-57 and the other is a shorter article on Tommy Kearns.

Wonder just how much demoralizing effect Notre Dame's 7-0 win over Oklahoma will have on the Sooners? Surely this is a tremendous letdown after winning 47 in a row, but true champions have a way of bouncing back.

Chances are that the recently announced plans to televise the Carolina-Duke game Saturday (regional tv) will cut the attendance considerably. We're still not so sure that television is the best thing for collegiate football.

Among the telegrams received by Notre Dame prior to and following its victory Saturday, one read: "God loves the Irish, and so do I."

Carlton Leads

GREENBORO, N. C., Nov. 18 (AP)—Duke halfback Wray Carlton -with eight touchdowns and 10 extra points for a total of 58 points - has regained the individual scoring lead in the Atlantic Coast Conference.

Carlton scored a touchdown and kicked the extra point that gave Duke its 7-6 victory over Clemson last Saturday.

Halfback Dick Christy - with nine touchdowns for 54 points—is in second place. He failed to score last Saturday against Virginia Tech. Carlton was in front for six weeks before Christy edged ahead two weeks ago.

Fullback Jim Bakhtiar of Virginia is third with 43 points on six touchdowns and seven conversions. He has two games left to play, while Carlton and Christy have only one.

Kashmir Affair

United Nations, N. Y., Nov. 16 — (AP)— Five countries moved today to send a U.N. negotiator back to India and Pakistan in a new effort to settle the dispute between the two over Kashmir.

Australia, Britain, Colombia, the Philippines and the United States turned in a resolution on the subject for the 11-nation Security Council, which is to continue its Kashmir debate Monday afternoon.

The resolution would authorize the U.N. representative for India and Pakistan, Frank P. Graham of the United States, to visit the Indian Subcontinent again to seek agreement on demilitarization procedures to be carried out within three months.

Wayne Bishop Injured Again

By DAVE WIBLE
Special To The Daily Tar Heel

WINSTON SALEM, Nov. 18 — Carolina undefeated cross-country team held on to the title of best in the ACC for the second straight year when they captured the ACC cross-country crown with a tremendous team effort here at Wake Forest this afternoon.

The boys in blue were led by junior speedster Dave Scurlock, who managed to pass Maryland's great runner Burr Grim in the final 100 yards of the 4.2 mile race to gain a second-place finish. Individual champion was South Carolina's Bill Latham, whose time was 22:21.6.

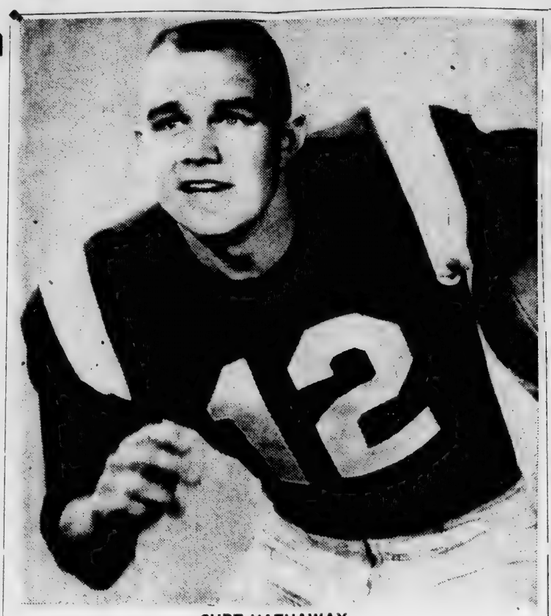
ing his college career and was favored to win today, slipped on the rain-swept course at the 3 and three-quarter mile mark and threw his troublesome right knee out of place. He owned a 125-yard lead over Latham at the time, and barring the accident would probably have taken the individual title. Bishop managed to run about 50 yards further after the accident, but the knee collapsed and he had to be carried from the course.

Great Team Effort



The Tar Heels, seeing their ace out of the race, took on new incentive and all moved up into competition. Team Captain Everrett Whatley called it, "the greatest team effort I have ever seen." Whatley and Coach Dale Ranson also praised highly the Carolina boys who finished down the line. "It was the spirit and the ability of these boys that gave us the victory" Ranson said.

Runaway Win

Carolina tabulated a total of 45 points, completely out of reach of second-place Clemson, which totaled 89. Maryland was third with 94; NSC, fourth with 97; Duke, fifth with 104; Virginia sixth with 109; and Wake Forest, seventh with 120. Although South Carolina had the meet's top individual performer, they did not have five finishers; and thus could not be officially counted in the team scoring.

A team trophy was awarded to the Carolina squad after the meet, and individual awards were given to the first fifteen finishers. In that category for the UNC harriers were Scurlock, second; Whatley, fifth; and John Reaves, eighth.

This meet terminates the cross-country competition for the Tar Heels for the season. It was also

Telegrams Pour Into Irish Camp After Win

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Nov. 18 (AP) —Terry Brennan waded through a stack of congratulatory telegrams and bent an ear to dozens of telegrams calls today in enjoying possibly his greatest moment as Notre Dame football coach.

The student body was given the day off from classes in celebration of the Irish' 7-0 victory which ended Oklahoma's sensational winning streak Saturday.

Campus Quiet

But all was quiet on the campus. There was talk of the triumph and of the Iowa game coming up this week, but aside from what might be impromptu rallies the campus had settled down to taking the Oklahoma victory in stride. The big hooraying came Saturday night when the team returned from its conquest to be greeted by about 5,000 at the airport and as many more swarming over the campus.

Brennan and his squad studied movies of the game today before he gave his players a rest. Then the young coach began reading over the telegrams. The athletic office received about 50 and Brennan got about as many personally at his home or office. Long distance telephone calls were backlogged with the coaching trying to answer as many as possible.

Thanks Everybody

"I just want to thank everybody concerned and all the friends who sent messages," said Terry. "The student body certainly is to be thanked. A lot of them attended practices during last week and were all keyed up. The whole school was up and it rubbed off on us. There was a rally every night -and that's something that has never happened before."

The telegrams came from all parts of the country as well as from such places abroad as Japan, Costa Rica and Bermuda. Mainly they were from alumni.

Last week a letter was received from an Al McGrane of Brooklyn saying that if Notre Dame defeated Oklahoma, Brennan would be remembered in his will. McGrane sent a telegram today reminding Brennan he will be remembered.

Everybody Congratulates

Other messages came from the athletic staffs of Purdue and Michigan State, the Associated Students of Santa Clara University, the Kansas City Tubercular Hospital, and Bill Coffman, director of the East-West game.

Brennan arose early to appear on a national TV show today and then huddled with his coaches.

"On a given day we knew Notre Dame could be as good as anybody," Brennan said. "We knew what Oklahoma could do and we did a fine job defensing against them. We studied at least two Oklahoma game movies and Bernie Crimmins did an execellent job of scouting."

Quigg Better; Hathaway Out

Few Visitors Allowed; Curt Left Sunday

Joe Quiggs is "getting along as well as could be expected," Dr. E. M. Hedgpeth of the University Infirmary said yesterday.

Quigg was injured two weeks ago in a varsity scrimmage and will be out of basketball action for the season.

Dr. Hedgpeth said very few visitors are allowed patients in the infirmary, adding that Quigg consequently sees almost no one but infirmary personnel.

Curtis Hathaway, who received a broken arm in the South Carolina football game 10 days ago, was released from the infirmary Sunday, Dr. Hedgpeth said. Hathaway will be wearing a cast on his arm "for a long time," Dr. Hedgpeth emphasized.

Regional TV For Duke Game

The Duke-UNC Atlantic Coast Conference clash Saturday in Durham will be televised regionally, it was announced yesterday by the ACC Director.

The telecast between the two Big Four neighbors will be the fourth and final regional telecast of ACC football this year. The network extends from Maryland to Florida.

Jim Simpson will handle the play-by-play and Charlie Harville will add the color commentary.

This is the second time in three years the Duke-Carolina game appeared on live television. In 1955 the clash in Durham was the NCAA Game of the Week. Duke won that one, 6-0.

Previous regional telecasts this year have featured both Duke and Carolina. Duke and N. C. State fought to a 14-14 tie and Carolina defeated South Carolina 28-6. The other telecast was the Wake Forest-Maryland contest.

News In Brief

Warheads

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19. (UP)—Secretary of State Dulles said today the United States has nuclear warheads stockpiled in Canada. Later in his news conference he said he only believed that was true. Afterward the State Department cut the flat statement entirely out of the record.

The revision of the transcript was made at about the time Canadian Prime Minister John Diefenbaker had said in Ottawa that Dulles must have been misinterpreted or misquoted.

Secrets

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19. (UP)—House investigators were told today the United States might be developing missiles faster if exchange of information weren't kept under such heavy restrictions.

The opinion was offered by Dr. Clifford C. Furnas, former assistant secretary of defense for research and development, to a House subcommittee investigating secrecy in government.

Missiles To Britain

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 19. (UP)—Secretary of Defense McElroy said today he is "extremely hopeful" the United States will meet on schedule a commitment to start delivering 1,500-mile range missiles to Britain by 1959.

The cabinet officer also told a news conference after a two-hour meeting with President Eisenhower that supplies of such intermediate (IRBM) missiles will be going to other North Atlantic Treaty nations—all within 1,500 miles of European Russia—"earlier than had been expected."

'Beat Dook' Week-end Plans Set

The Pika "Beat Dook" parade, a pep rally and an informal "Beat Dook" dance will highlight the UNC-Duke football weekend.

The Pika "Beat Dook" parade will begin at 3 p.m. Friday in front of Woollen Gym. The parade will include the Pika "Beta Dook" Queen and her court, 30 floats built by sororities, fraternities and dormitories, the UNC Marching Band, the Navy Drum and Bugle Corp, the Air Force Band and Drill Team and the UNC cheerleaders.

Judges for the floats will be Miss Katherine Carmichael, Dean of Women; Sam Magill, Director of Student Activities; Dr. A. E. Cameron, UNC Mathematics Professor and James H. Davis, University Florist manager.

A pep rally, sponsored by the University Club and GMAB, will be held at 6:45 p.m. Friday on the Intramural field east of the gym.

Speeches will be made at the rally by Coach Jim Tatum and football Captain Buddy Payne. The cheerleaders and cardboard department will perform.

An informal "Beat Dook" dance, also sponsored by the University Club and GMAB, will be held from 8-11 p.m. in Woollen Gymnasium. eVntriloquist Oliver Bloomer and his dummy, Jimmy Roscoe, will entertain.

Presentation of the Pika "Beat Dook" parade winners will be made by the Queen at the dance.

There will be four float winners, one each from a men and women's dormitory and one each from a fraternity and sorority.

Lone Bandit Escapes With $500,000 In Gems

DETROIT, Nov. 19. (UP)—A lone bandit fired tear gas into the face of a New York gem merchant today and escaped with a satchel which the merchant said contained cut and polished diamond worth $500,000 wholesale.

Max Mouderer, 47, the merchant, said the man missed another $50,000 worth of diamond he carried in a case in his over coat pocket.

EMPTY STOCKING FUND—The Daily Tar Heel yesterday officially launched Chapel Hill's Empty Stocking Fund when Editor Neil Bass presented his $10.20 weekly check toward the adoption of a needy family. Daily Tar Heel Opens Empty Stocking Drive

By RUTH WHITLEY

A family of five was adopted by the Daily Tar Heel yesterday when Editor Neil Bass officially launched Chapel Hill's Empty Stocking Fund Drive by pledging his $10.20 weekly check toward the adoption of a needy family.

The Empty Stocking Fund is sponsored by the Junior Service League. Mrs. Mark Hanna, chairman of the Fund, received the check and assigned to the Daily Tar Heel a family including two boys, age seven and nine, and three girls, age five, six and eleven.

The Tar Heel staff will prepare Christmas boxes of unperishable food, candy, toys and a gift wrapped package for each member of the family.

The family adopted by the Daily Tar Heel is only one of the many families which the Empty Stocking Fund is seeking to provide for this Christmas.

Any campus organization or group interested in adopting a family to provide Christmas boxes for may do so through the Empty Stocking Fund by contacting Mrs. Charles Dixon at 8-0955.

Card Winners Are Named

Visiting Duke students coupled three and one-half master points in Monday night's mammoth 31 couple, monthly master point tournament.

Duke students winning one master point apiece were Pete Schaefer, Bill Reister and Bill Barnhardt. Winning one-half master point was Narvel Crawford.

Carolina's Yackety-Yack editor, Gene Whitehead was the only UNC student to win a master point.

Other UNC student winners were Bill Fyfe and John Gwynn, second place, north-south (section A); Dick Potthoff and Jap Memory, third place north-south (Section A); and Dana Dixon and Bill Caison, third-place east west (Section A).

Doug Eisele Announces Candidacy

Joins Three Others In Editorship Race

Doug Eisele, former managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel, has filed his candidacy for the editorship in Tuesday's recall election.

Eisele is the fourth candidate to enter the race for editor. Other candidates are incumbent Neil Bass, Barry Winston and Paul Rule.

In a statement to the Daily Tar Heel concerning his candidacy, Eisele said, "Although I concur in the opinion that improvements could be made on the publication, I have not actively sought the support of any political group and agreed to be a candidate only after two weeks of insistance by my personal friends and various campus leaders."

Eisele said that his candidacy should not be construed as an attack on the current editor.

"It is rather the realization of the desire which I have possessed for the past three years to some day direct my efforts toward the publication of a finer and more professional-like campus newspaper," he said.

Eisele was endorsed by Student Party as its candidate Monday night after the public debate between Candidates Bass, Rule and Winston. Eisele's name was entered in the nominations for endorsement by several SP members who felt that none of the other three candidates was as well qualified as Eisele.

At the SP meeting, however, Eisele told the SP that he did not want the nomination. When he was drafted at the meeting despite his objections, he declined comment on his possible candidacy until yesterday when he announced that he was definitely in the running.

Eisele's journalistic background includes: two years work on his hometown daily, the Statesville Record and Landmark; "stringer" work for the Charlotte Observer, the Greensboro Daily News and the Winston-Salem Journal.

In addition, he was formerly the United Press representative in and around the Statesville area.

Last year, Eisele worked as a reporter and feature writer for the UNC News Bureau.

As Daily Tar Heel managing editor, Eisele was responsible for the make-up of the front and run-over pages. He wrote heads for the same and was in overall charge of the news staff.

Eisele received 43 votes; Editor Neil Bass received 3 and Candidate Paul Rlue received none. Candidate Winston announced at the meeting that he was withdrawing from the race.

Eisele also received the Student Party's endorsement at their meeting Monday night.

During the course of the meeting, both Eisele and Bass were allowed to assume the floor for the purpose of answering question posed by party members.

Eisele was the first to address the group. Asked why he had decided to enter the race for editor, he told the UP members that he had been approached "more than three weeks ago" and asked to run against the present editor. At the time, he said, he was not willing to enter the race.

Later, he added, he was approached again by pepole who impressed upon him that it was his duty to the students to run.

"When I, as a person, don't want to run—what can I tell these people?" he said. "You just can't tell these pepole that you will not run for a job that you feel you can do well."

He explained that at first he refused to accept the nomination but had a change of heart after consulation with several people. One of these he identified as Jimmy Wallace, member of the UNC Dept. of Social Science.

Eisele denied, however, that there had been a meeting of campus political figures at Wallace's house early Tuesday morning following the SP meeting. He admitted that he had gone to Wallace's house to consult him on whether to run for editor but denied that anyone else met with them there.

Bribe Offer Aired; SP Hit By Intrigue?

By BILL CHESHIRE

Charges of attempted political collusion were leveled today at Barry Winston, candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, and several of his associates. The accusation was made by candidate Paul Rule, who said Wally Kuralt visited his room last Friday night and attempted to make an election deal with him in behalf of candidate Winston.

It was Kuralt who initiated the recall movement by circulating petitions calling for removal of the present editor, Neil Bass.

"Kuralt came to my room Friday night and said that I did not have a chance to win the election for editor because Winston's forces had a large campaign planned and that all available spots on campus for publicity were sewed up," Rule said.

Rule said that Kuralt further stated that if Winston dropped out of the race, his supporters would probably back Rule. In exchange for this consideration, Rule said, he was to appoint Charlie Sloan, who opposed Bass in the spring elections for editor, and former DTH columnist Frank Crowther to the staff of the paper.

According to Rule, Kuralt told him that he would only have to write editorials and that "others would take care of the management of the paper."

Rule said he told petitioner Kuralt that he would be willing to talk to Winston about the campaign but "could not make any premises o favors nor could I compromise my campaign platform."

He added that he spoke to Kuralt after the candidates' debate Monday night and that Kuralt told him he wanted to talk to him the next day. So far I have heard nothing else from him," Rule said.

By NEIL BASS

Charges of political intrigue have been brought against high Student Party members and former members now in the administration and faculty as a result of the Student Party endorsement of Doug Eisele for editorship of The Daily Tar Heel, and Eisele's official announcement that he would run.

A former Student Party leader reported that Student Body President Sonny Evans, former SP leaders Tom Lambeth, current director of Graham Memorial, and James Wallace, now a member of the faculty, and others met last night to endorse Eisele and encourage him to run, and to encourage the withdrawal of Barry Winston from the editorship race.

Yesterday afternoon, Eisele confirmed his candidacy and candidate Barry Winston replied, "No comment," when asked if he now planned to withdraw from the race in favor of SP-backed Eisele.

Concerning the charged morning rendezvous, former SP leader Wallace replied that Lambeth had visited his house at approximately 12:30 a. m. to pay a social call.

Student Body President Evans acknowledged he was in the car which brought Lambeth to Wallace's home, but denied that any meeting to select a political candidate transpired at that time.

Wallace also vehemently denied that any politic l meeting occured.

Yesterday afternoon, Eisele made his candidacy official and reported that he had been encouraged to run.

Candidate Winston denied that he new of such a meeting, but refused to comment on whether or not he would remain in the editorship race.

The former SP leader who revealed his charges of political conspiracy concerning high SP officials revulegd information with the stipulation that he would remain anonymous.

Others named in the "intrigue" accusation were former SP Chairman Joel Fleishman, now in the University Law School, and Jonathan Yardley, Winston's campaign manager.

UP Will Back Eisele In Editorship Contest

By BILL CHESHIRE

Following lively discussion at a meeting of the University Party last night, Doug Eisele was overwhelmingly selected to be that party's candidate in the recall election for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

He explained that at first he refused to accept the nomination but had a change of heart after consulation with several people. One of these he identified as Jimmy Wallace, member of the UNC Dept. of Social Science.

Eisele denied, however, that there had been a meeting of campus political figures at Wallace's house early Tuesday morning following the SP meeting. He admitted that he had gone to Wallace's house to consult him on whether to run for editor but denied that anyone else met with them there.

Boudreau Is Installed As Dialectic President

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Dialectic Senate last nigh installed Girard Boudreau as it president in the traditional innauguration ceremonies at the Di Hall in New West.

Chancellor William B. Aycock and ex-Chancellor Rober B. House honored the large gathering with their presence anrd remarks. Boudreau was escorted to the front of the Hall by the sergeant-at-arms and sworn in by Larry McElroy, ex-president of the Di.

Boudreau then gave an address on the subject of "The Challenge that the American College Youth Faces Today." He stated: "Our country faces the greatest challenge she has ever been confronted with."

"Our enemies have grown stronger while our Washington bureaucrats have sat complacently on their big plush chairs and thought only of the next election. We must unite behind young, vigorous and dynamic leadership.

This duty falls upon the college group, the leader of tomorrow. We must look to the future with a broad vision and a liberal mind. If we are narrow and petty even hope is lost."

Aycock was introduced by House, who stated in effect that we had mad in Boudreau's address a reminder that we cannot take for granted the liberties that we now enjoy. He then proceeded to introduce Aycock who gave the main address of the evening.

Aycock said: "If past achievement is a true measure of future success—and in many instances it has been—the future of our Literary Societies can be a significant one. In 1795 the Debating Society was organized to develop "... lasting friendship and promotion of useful knowledge."

"The two literary societies became so interwoven in the life of this institution that when the doors reopened in 1875, one of the first official acts was to "reinaugurate" be Di and The Phi.

"The basic principles of student government are found in the history of the two socities. It is understandable if one concludes that these two societies have made their contribution and that the stream of history has washed their original function into larger seas of responsibility leaving them with great pride of achievement, but without a program for the future.

"A suggestion for your future role is to provide a much-needed laboratory where leadership can be developed to the highest degree. We need laboratories in which artificial course boundaries are discarded. In the early years these Societies provided such a laboratory.

"This University needs more than ever a forum in which students can hammer out ideas in the fullest measure through debate, exchange of ideas and careful reflection. I believe this to be your most significant role and hope that you will explore fully its possibilities."

Following Aycock's address, Representative John Brooks of the Phi and the Council of Forensics unveiled a trophy donated by the Council in honor of ex-Chancellor House, to be presented annually to the winner of the Di-Phi debate.

House made the award to the Dialectic Senate stating that he was deeply honored and grateful to hav the award named in his honor.

Leaders Urge Sportsmanship At Duke Game

The following is a statement released to the Daily Tar Heel by Buddy Payne, football team captain, and President of the Student Body Sonny Evans regarding the Carolina-Duke game Saturday:

"The Duke-Carolina football game will take place in Durham this Saturday, and this year the rivalry looms bigger than ever. It is a cherished and well-respected rivalry, characterized by good sportsmanship among the players and students alike and both should work to maintain this relationship.

"In the past, there have been acts of immaturity and thoughtlessness which were distasteful to everyone and undermined the good rivalry instead of adding to it. Vandalism and violence only destroy property and cause unnecessary hard feelings between the schools.

"The Carolina football players are determined and anxious to play clean, rugged football, and we urge the spectators to join in and display the same sort of attitude in the stands.

"With student cooperation from both schools, we can enthusiastically look forward to this game and can project the Duke-Carolina rivalry into an even more healthy one."

SP Picks Unannounced Candidate; Endorses Douglas Eisele For Editor

STAN FISHER

The Student Party—in a very unexpected move Monday night—ran the gamut of the announced candidates for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel in the recall election and picked an unannounced candidate—Doug Eisele—to run under Student Party endorsement.

A large part of the evening was devoted to discussion as to whether the Student Party should support the recall without endorsing a candidate, or stand clear of the recall election.

Student Party member Gary Greer stated that SP was obligated to sponsor the best candidate and that there was "no connection between the Daily Tar Heel and SP as to supporting each other in elections."

Jim Holmes exhorted the group that "the editor's stand is directly between him and the students . . . neither party should interfere with either."

Joel Fleishman told the assembled SP's that . . . "the editorship is definitely a political position . . . the editorship is the third most influential position on campus." He denounced the party for its apparent failure to take a stand.

A number of persons, some of them former SP actives, took the floor to protest the party's apparent trend toward non-endorsement of any candidate.

Al Lowenstein said that the Daily Tar Heel is the major issue this fall. "The Tar Heel, and not cliques, should be the issue of the recall. The SP has no reason to exist if we must endorse candidates to win. The difference has to be that the Student Party should be willing to stick out its neck," he added.

"The Student Party by not saying anything endorses Bass," stated Jim Jordan, an independent attending the meeting. He went on to say that "The Student Party owes it to endorse some candidate."

Gary Greer's motion that the SP go on record as taking no stand relative to the recall election next Tuesday was defeated.

Student Body Vice President Don Furtado then moved that "The Student Party go on record as not endorsing any candidate on the grounds that neither is worthy of SP endorsement." This motion, too, was defeated.

Erwin Fuller then asked the body, 'What has Mr. Bass done so wrong, other than use poor taste?" How has he harmed the Student Party?"

Student Body President Sonny Evans answered Fuller's questions by stating that the issue was oversimplified by a charge of poor taste. He went on to say that Bass had personally attacked individuals, had mis-handled the flu epidemic, and had called football Coach Jim Tatum, a "ruthless monster." He also stated that Bass had editorialized in a front page story on Adlai Stevenson's visit to UNC.

In answer to Evan's charges against Bass, Bill Cheshire, DTH news editor, took the floor to speak in behalf of Editor Bass. He stated that Bass did not attack individuals as such, but rather attacked them in their official capacity.

In answer to a standing charge against Bass for not attending the Chancellor's reception, Cheshire said, "If Neil (Bass) didn't have the flu then he had something so close to it you couldn't tell the difference. Neil has been keeping long hours at the Tar Heel and going to class, too," he added.

In the course of Cheshire's speech he was interrupted and asked to retract his statement that Bass did not attack individuals except in their official capacity. Cheshire said, "I will not retract it, I will repeat it," and emphatically repeated his previous statement.

During the course of his defense of Bass, Cheshire asserted, "Neil has a right and duty to attack officials, as does any editor."

The assembly was then charged from the floor of delving in personalities. "We should try to select someone."

Gary Greer nominated Doug Eisele.

Eisele took the floor and stated to the effect, that though he would like to run in the spring, his grades were not presently up to what he would like for them to be. In declining the nomination he told the body, "I'd like for you to mention this to me again in the spring."

The party then voted to endorse Eisele as its recall election candidate and adjourned.

The Recall Election And Free Expression

Two petty political intrigues have so cloudied the entire recall movement that further editorial comment is necessitated:

(1) Announcement of offered political bargaining to editorship Candidate Paul Rule by recall instigator Wally Kuralt.

(2) Revelation of alleged facts concerning negotiations between highly positioned Student Party members and former SP leaders, now members of the administration and faculty, and editorship candidates Barry Winston and Doug Eisele.

Rule made it public yesterday that Petitioner Kuralt visited his room Friday night to attempt to discourage Candidate Rule from remaining in the race. According to Rule, he convinced Kuralt that his vastly superior experience better qualified him for the position. Thus Kuralt, afraid that two candidates opposing the present editor would so split the vote that neither Winston or Rule would have a Chinaman's chance, offered to withdraw Winston from the race and throw his support to Rule — if in turn Rule would appoint himself (Kuralt), defeated editorship Candidate Charlie Sloan and former Daily Tar Heel Columnist to his staff, were he elected.

Rule refused the bargain, but announced yesterday he was attempting to get in touch with Kuralt.

REVELATION

Concerning the alleged rendezvous between a minority of SP leaders and former SP leaders to select a candidate to run against the present editor, it seems obvious, if the allegations by the former SP leader are true — and Wallace, Lambeth and Evans all acknowleged that they were together at Wallace's house early yesterday morning — that this clique is sponsoring a candidate for political self-aggrandizement. Such a candidate would enter office with political strings attached.

CONFIRMATION

Thus the intrigues by Petitioner Kuralt and alleged intrigues between a minority of SP'ers and editorship candidates Winston and Eisele are finally blasted into the open. This confirms our assertion throughout that the recall is being sponsored by a minority of politicians for self-aggrandizement purposes.

. . Candidates Winston and Eisele, whether they recognize it or not are merely pawns in a giant game of political chess.

The players are an organized and contrived clique of politicians who seek personal glorification through control of the student press.

The issue is clearly freedom of editorial expression as opposed to political domination.

We regret very much that Eisele fell prey to the contrived plot and entered the race. The political clique felt he was more electable than was Candidate Winston, whom it was supporting to the hilt. Thus it decided to cast him aside and endorse the more electable Eisele.

The student body must rise in a mass and vote down the political collusion which threatens to assume operation of The Daily Tar Heel. The vote next Tuesday should demonstrate that Carolina students will not allow their precious heritage of free editorial expression to be sacrificed on the altar of political contrivance through vague and nebulous charges of incompetency.

Should the recall election be successful, The Daily Tar Heel would become a toy, a political football, in the hands of a minority of politicians.

And should any candidate who does not openly adhere to the principles of any particular clique be elected, he would be so severely hamstrung by the threat of another recall election that he would be afraid to speak his mind freely on any controversial issue.

The Carolina student body, regardless of differences on specific editorial stands, must rise up and vote vigorously against the recall movement if editorial freedom of expression is to be preserved.

FLORIDA ALLIGATOR

As Dave Levy, editor of the Florida State Alligator, said in a letter to the editor Monday:

"Any editor, elected to do his job, is bound to arouse some criticism. No conscientious editor who speaks or writes as he feels can help but alienate some segment of the student body.

"If this recall succeeds, and I pray it does not, no Future editor of The Daily Tar Heel will be free of the threat of being removed from office because his policies are disagreed with.

". . . I earnestly hope the student body will not take the chance of throwing away the editorial independence and integrity of The Daily Tar Heel by approving this recall movement.

"The eyes of all college newspapers all over the South will be on the UNC student body to determine the outcome."

PiKa's And Enthusiasm

The dazzling array of feminine pulchritude slated for competition in the Beat Dook festivities last night — a preliminary to Friday's parade sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity — was a sight to behold.

Carolina lovelies from all segments of the campus entered competition. And a more dazzling display we have never seen.

PiKa is to be complimented for its fine demonstration of student enthusiasm.

University footballers should swamp the charges of Coach Bill Murray in Saturday's encounter.

And the student body should be largely in attendance to cheer them to victory.

Congratulations to Pika for its fine domonstration of spirit and organization.

WISE AND OTHERWISE:

Official Pogo & Sputnikers & Winning, Etc.

Whit Whitfield

Some people seem to think that securing a petition to run for office is a simple matter. Not so—especially if you don't have many friends. Just the other day we decided to try our hand at running. (Our contention was that we weren't experienced or capable, but that we needed more office space.)

We circulated our petition around for quite a while but we could only get 15 names. Among them were W. R. Hurst, J. Daniels, W. Winchell, D. Kilgallen, Pogo and Johnny Dark. (Pogo's name must be on every petition in order to make it official) This seemed to us to be an imposing list of names, but after registering my petition with Art Sobel, Chairman of the Elections Board, he informed me that some of these names were not listed in the student directory. This was disappointing to say the least, but somehow unavoidable.

Sometime after Sputnik II had been released, Nikolai Bulganin was shooting off his mouth about Soviet superiority (And we use the term loosely). He mentioned the fact that he had received requests from two American girls, aged 23 and 24, to be among the first passengers on the Russian spaceship to the Moon.

This indicated several things: Firstly, the adventuresome spirit that molded this country from a wilderness is not lost; secondly, that Russians are prone to shoot off their months quite a bit; Thirdly, that Eisenhower is a golf addict; and lastly that applications are now being accepted by the Kremlin.

Send yours in today if you are under ten years old and have a sound mind and a strong body. The reason for the age limit is that older persons probably won't be around for the launching.

If there is anyone around who is still naive enough to believe the expression "Its not whether you win or lose, but how you play the game," then try making a practical application. If a coach has a losing cambination, it is scrapped for a winning one. If a coach is a loser, he is likewise scrapped. Regardless of how you play the game, if you lose often enough, the fans stop paying to see the slaughter.

Or if this doesn't satisfy you, apply the same foolish philosophy to the classroom. Have you ever seen a professor give credit for the way you played the game? If so, let The Daily Tar Heel know so that these courses may be publicized.

"Watch Where You Aim Those Things"

COLUMBIA DAILY SPECTATOR:

America's High School Coddling

If the American people have a genius, it is for efficiency. Starting with Ben Franklin and continuing through Henry Ford, they have gotten more output per ounce of sweat than any previous civilization. In fact, ours is probably the first civilization to make a profession out of efficiency.

This ideal permeates American culture. Politicians pledge efficiency in government, builders incorporate it into apartments and husbands seek it in wives.

The purpose of this essay is not to debunk the goddess. We too worship at her altar—though with certain reservations—in expectation of her rich rewards. But may we point out one area of American life—that of American education—where our goddess has been cast aside for other idols.

In truth, pre-college education is wasteful. Before high school, the bright student is kept back by the mediocrity to his classmates. This tragedy often continues in high school with an added absurdity. Courses such as home economics, driver training and journalism compose much of the curriculum.

* * *

The result, according to a two-year study by the U. S. Office of Education is this:

Of U. S. high school graduates, less than a third have studied chemistry for a year, a fourth studied physics and a seventh advanced mathematics.

Of Soviet high school graduates, all have taken five years of physics and biology, four years of chemistry, one year of astronomy and ten years of mathematics.

It is no wonder the Soviets have sputniks sputtering about the universe. As John Dunning, Dean of Columbia's Engineering School, notes in the New York Times magazine, "the point is that studying mathematics and science does not prevent a youngster's becoming a sociologist or an English teacher. But not studying mathematics will not only prevent him from becoming a scientist; he will not be a very able sociologist or English teacher or minister either, because he will not understand our culture, which is being shaped by technological forces that are still only half-comprehended."

All will agree that American high schools are at fault. But how about the colleges? It is they who set the standards ad train the teachers. Are they doing their job?

With high school curricula dissipated by "frill" courses that tickle the fancy rather than train the mind, John Dewey's philosophy of progressive education is being used to justify intellectual sloth. The product is a graduate well adjusted to American middle class life, but largely ignorant of how science shapes that life. This is inevitable when teachers colleges, led by our step-brother across 120th Street, stress method over content, how to teach over what to teach.

These coddled high school graduates are then accepted by our colleges, where they spend two out of four years learning what they missed in high school. Is it unreasonable to demand that American youths, before gaining admittance to hallowed halls of ivy, write fluently the language they speak and speak adequately the languages of other nations; that they study at least a year of chemistry and physics; that they be prepared to take advanced courses in mathematics?

* * *

In this age of a growing demand for higher education, with the resulting strain on physical facilities, it is criminal to maintain college entrance requirements less rigorous than these.

Within the last few weeks, members of the academic community have been outspoken in their analyses of why American science lags. Perhaps the answer is in their own backyard.

ERIC THE RED:

U. S. Missile Hits The Kremlin

Harry Kirschner

News Item: It was announced today by reliable sources that the United States has successfully fired an intercontinental ballistics missile that landed on target in the center of Moscow's Red Square.

The missile is reported not to have been armed with the usual nuclear warhead. Instead it carried in its nose cone the most nuerotic individual that psychiatrists were able to find living in the United States.

A selection board of psychiatrists worked continuously for six years to discover the most neurotic American. A spokesman said the job took them that long because they had to consider well over 167 million case studies before they could make their ultimate decision.

Harvey J. Muddlehead is the man who was chosen. He was found living in a mental institution in California where he had been placed when authorities discovered him to be the pyromaniac responsible for the great Pusan fire of 1954. He is diagnosed as being a cleptomaniac as well as a pyromaniac, and is best known in this country for his shoplifting theft of the entire stock of a San Francisco department store in one day.

Yesterday Muddlehead was wrapped in a red flag and placed in the nose cone and fired off for Moscow. The Air Force, with its missiles of pinpoint accuracy dropped Muddlehead directly down on top of the policeman directing traffic in the middle of Red Square. It was explained that this was done in order to soften the rocket's descent.

When Russian authorities approached the missile and opened it they found Muddlehead crouched inside, wrapped in his flak. He immediately claimed that he was an American scientist defecting to the east and offered falsified secret documents and the missile to prove himself. After their initial surprise he was accepted joyously by the Russians.

When Muddlehead was first informed of the plan to fire him fof to Russia he readily agreed to it. He was released from the mental hospital and taken by special plane to Washington. After a five minute wait at the Washington Airport the President's limousine arrived to take Muddlehead and his escort to the White House for an interview. At about the time that Muddlehead reached there, the airport reported that it was missing the propellors from six passenger planes, and that fire had broken out in the airports main fuel storige tanks.

At the White House interview the President greeted Muddlehead warmly and expressed hopes that his mission would be successful. He outlined Muddlehead's objective as being that of capturing the secrets of Sputniks I and II, and those involved in Russia's proposed rocket to the moon. He was to bring these documents back to the U. S. if possible, and to create a condition of general chaos within the Soviet Union.

After Muddlehead left the White House the President reported that his wallet, seal of office, golf bag and clubs, and flag were missing. It was later reported that a fire had been started in the west wing of the White House, but that it was under control.

The following day Muddlehead was taken to the rocket launching site and waited an hour before preparations were completed and he could be dispatched. During that time it was noted that four tanks, two missiles, seven trucks and 38 walkie-talkies were declared missing and firemen were called to fight a fire that resulted from 3,000 gallons of rocket fuel being ignited.

Great hopes for Muddlehead's success have been expressed in top circles in Washington. He was described as being perfectly capable for the job assigned to him.

Late Report: Sources within the Soviet Union have disclosed that Muddlehead has been taken to the Russian's rocket lab and asked to help with their projects there. Last night he was seen being feted at a liquor party held in his honor by Soviet leaders in the Kremlin.

Late Report: hTe Kremlin disclosed today that an unknown thief has stolen its dining silver. It was also disclosed that plans for the proposed rocket to the moon are missing, and that the rocket base located near Moscow has been destroyed by exploding rocket fuel.

Late Report: Moscow is in flames.
Late Report: Leningrad is in flames.
Late Report: Arcangel, Riga and Kaliningrad are in flames.

Late Report: Moscow has reported that a locomotive was stolen this evening. It was last seen heading towards Leningrad. Various capitals throughout Europe have also reported locomotives and even entire freight trains as being stolen. The capitals are: Warsaw, Berlin and Amsterdam. They and various cities along what seems to be some sort of train stealing route are reported to be in flames. Sources have it that Poland, Germany and the Netherlands are asking for help in the form of fire-fighting equipment and volunteers from other countries in Europe.

An ocean going freighter has also been declared missing from the harbor of Amsterdam.

Washington disclosed this evening that there is great hope that Muddlehead will make it back to this country safely.

National YWCA Aide To Talk To Coeds Here

Miss Jane McAfee, personal assistant of the National Board of the YMCA, will visit the campus Thursday and Friday under the sponsorship of the Placement Service. She will talk with any senior or graduate women who many be interested in considering a job with the YWCA.

Seniors interested in personal interviews with her should make an appointment through the Placement Service.

Thursday afternoon at 2:15 in 205 Alumni she will show slides and discuss the YWCA program with sociology majors and all interested students.

The chief prerequisites are the ability and desire to work with people of different ages, races and faiths, as well as imagination, resourcefulness and concern for Chirstian and democratic principles.

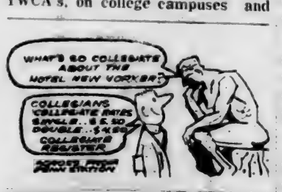
An A. B. degree with some experience in working with groups of people either through camp conseling playgrounds, in campus projects, church or similar programs also is helpful to those who want to work with the YWCA.

Openings in a variety of professional posts are available throughout the United States in community YWCA's, on college campuses and in areas to which the new YWCA program is being taken through decentralization.

Among the staff needs are teenage program.

Service Asks Students Pick Up Annuals

All seniors and graduate students finishing this year who have not picked up their College Placement Annual have been urged to do so right away. The free copies may be picked up in room 206 Gardner Hall. More than 700 senior and women have already picked up copies of the annual, according to J. M. Galloway, placement director.



This directory of companies and governmental agencies of the United States and Canada provides the students with information on employment opportunities.

Each listing includes a brief description of the company, the name of the person to write concerning employment and the jobs for which the company is recuiting this year.

It also indicates if the firm has summer or foreign employment, the kind of training program and if women are eligible for the positions listed.

This annual is a new service of the College Placement Council, which represent college placement officers and company personnel officers.

In includes not only a directory of companies but also helpful articles on letter writing, interviewing, training programs and jobs for women.

John Sprunt Hill Gives 1,000 Shares Of Wachovia Bank Stock To UNC

By PETE IVEY

John Sprunt Hill of Durham has given 1,000 shares of Wachovia Bank and Trust Compay stock to UNC, it was announced today by Chancellor William B. Aycock.

Revenues derived from the stock will support projects in the University's library. In over 60 years of giving to the University, many of Hill's donations of money and property have gone to the library, particularly the North Carolina Collection in the Louis R. Wilson Library here.

"John Sprunt Hill by his candid words and by his vigorous deeds has exerted powerful leadership in North Carolina education, industry, banking, agriculture, conservation and manifold other public improvements during the more than half a century of his active service to the people of this state," Chancellor Aycock said.

"His special interest in the library demonstrates again his keen insight in providing nourishment where it is most likely to be of maximum good."

Hill's first gift to the University came shortly after his graduation at Chapel Hill in 1889 when he gave a history prize of books relating to North Carolina for the best thesis on history in the state.

In 1903 he established a fellowship in history and in 1906 he gave $5,000 as a part of library endowment raised to meet the Carnegie gift for a new library building. In the years since then he has added to the endowment for the library.

In 1935 he gave the Carolina Inn, a hotel of colonial design, to the University with the provision that revenues after upkeep would go to the library.

In the past several years he has continued gifts to the University, including transfer of valuable business property on Franklin Street in downtown Chapel Hill. He has given money and property for the support of music, for beautification of the campus, for student loans, for the Graham Memorial student activities center and for other programs in the University.

The worth of his benefactions to the University would total well over a million dollars.

NOW 88

John Sprunt Hill was born at Faison in Duplin County March 17, 1869 and was graduated from the Faison school at the age of 12 and worked four years in a grocery store before entering Carolina in 1885.

After four years in which he distinguished himself as a scholar and in the social and political life of the campus, he taught school in Duplin County two years, instituted an individual system of instruction which he conceived and obtained thereby a lifetime interest in the processes of education.

He returned to Chapel Hill and studied law a year and in 1892 went to New York and entered Columbia University School of Law where he received his degree in 1894. He joined the law firm of Peckham and Tyler. He was briefly in New York politics and fought in the Cavalry in Puerto Rico in the Spanish-American War.

John Sprunt Hill was married in 1899 to Annie Louise Watts, only daughter of capitalist and philanthropist, George W. Watts of Durham. They lived on 72nd Street in New York until 1903 when they moved to Durham. In that year he established the Home Savings Bank and the Durham Bank and Trust Company.

BANKER

Professor E. C. Branson, long editor of the University News Letter, described Hill's emergence in banking. "As a banker, he proceeded along original lines," wrote Branson. "Service was his watchword. Usury was not only a crime but its practice was not good business. His aim as a banker was to be an upbuilder of the community, not a loan shark or a parasite.

"He put his ideas into execution, and all of his great banking business in Durham was built on these principles. He believed also in the democratization of credit.

"His savings bank has always cultivated the business of people of small means, and has kept the deposits of these people at work building homes for and lending credit to thousands of people of small means in his community."

Recognizing the plight of the North Carolina farmer who was depressed and exploited financially, John Sprunt Hill first investigated rural credits organizations all over the world and then formed the first land mortage credit association in the south, at Lowe's Grove in Durham County, in 1914.

It was the first time that a plan for bringing long-term credit, repayable on the installment plan at low rates of interest, was brought to the door of the southern farmer. Hill became known as the "Father of Rural Credits in North Carolina."

A biographer of Hill was written: "Individual and property rights, John Sprunt Hill has always maintained, should be equally conserved: the rich man should be as safe as, but no safer than, the poor man."

He spoke forcefully and lucidly on many subjects in which he assumed leadership—industry, agriculture, banking, transportation, conservaton, rural credits, education, religion.

A handsome man and persuasive in speech, his personality and intellectual powers were devoted to the public good.

Dummy? Who's The Dummy? Asks Reporter After Double Interview

By MARY MOORE MASON

"My father was a pine tree, and now the girls on the campus dont' want to date me because they are afraid that they will get splinters," said Jimmy Roscoe as he sat on Oliver Bloomer's knee.

This sounds a bit disconcerting, doesn't it? But actually Jimmy Roscoe is a dummy and Oliver is a student ventriloquist who will be appearing in the "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent" which will be Tuesday night, Nov. 26 in Memorial Hall.

According to Oliver, who began his career as a ventriloquist about seven years ago "I am the only boy on this campus who can have a split personality and get away with it."

I believed him as we sat on one of the sofas at the top of the steps at Graham Memorial, and Jimmy Roscoe whistled at the girls who walked by and cheered up several glum looking campus politicos as they came through the hall. Sometimes it was hard to figure out whether I was talking to Jimmy Roscoe or to Oliver Bloomer.

Oliver first became interested in this hobby when he was in high school and a ventriloquist came to the school with an assembly program. After the program Oliver went back stage where the man made him talk with the dummy. Fascinated, he soon bought Jimmy Roscoe and started on his own career.

A 21-year-old senior, Oliver comes from outside Enfield where his father is a farmer. He is majoring in Radio-TV-Motion pictures here at Carolina. Jimmy Roscoe, however, is majoring in "Girls".

When I asked Jimmy Roscoe where he came from originally, he said, "I would say that I was originally made in New York, but if you print that, people will get the wrong idea."

Oliver also has one other little wooden-headed friend. His name is George and he has black hair, a small mustache, and is a singer. However, Oliver prefers vivacious, brown-haired Jimmy Roscoe.

Both the master and the dummy have appeared all over the state, from Charlotte to the coast. Both were stars in last year's "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent."

When asked if they had had any mishaps in their long career of entertainment the two friends said that the most embarrasing time was when the string that operates the dummy's mouth broke. However, the so-called wooden-headed one used presence of mind and went through the whole show that night with his head turned away from the audience.

Afer talking to the fascinating pair for about a half an hour I became thoroughly confused about which was the dummy, me or Jimmy Roscoe. Next Tuesday night, I have a return engagement with the two. Maybe I can win out next time, and not be as wooden-headed as the dummy.

UP

the meeting after Eisele had spoken, was questioned with reference to this morning's lead story in the Daily Tar Heel. Bass said the information contained in that story was given him by a former chairman of the Student Party who requested that his name not be divulged.

The story alleges that a meeting of several campus leaders was held early Tuesday morning at the home of Jimmy Wallace at which time it was decided that Winston would withdraw from the race.

Another issue to draw the attention of the party members was that involved in another story in this morning's Daily Tar Heel. This story alleges that Wally Kuralt—who initated the recall movement—approached candidate Paul Rule with a political compromise.

A ccording to his proposal, the story says, Winston would be withdrawn from the race and Rule would be supported on the condition that Frank Crowther and others would be appointed to the Tar Heel staff.

Crowther, who attended the UP meeting as an observer, told the group that the story was untrue insofar as he had not actively supported Winston as part of any organized "clique."

no way be offended and will hope that Mr. Bass and I might continue in our current relationship—friends though we sometimes disagree."

Editor Bass, on Eisele's candidacy, said, "He (Eisele) is, of course, not working on the paper during his reported campaign, although I have not dismissed him: and he has not officially resigned."

Bass said the announcement that Eisele planned to run came only as a "mild surprise." Eisele told me a week ago that he definitely would not run, but in the light of persuasive argument presented Eisele by certain polificians yesterday morning, I am not surprised at the acceptance."

Covering The Campus

INDEPENDENT WOMEN

The Independent Women will meet at 5:30 p.m. for an open supper meeting in the large upstairs dining room of Lenoir Hall. Miss Lu Ann Thornton, from the Dean of Women's office, will show slides from her trip to Europe and will speak to the group on "Job Opportunities in Europe." All independent women have been urged to attend.

DIX HILL

Members of the YWCA Dix Hill Committee have been reminded to meet at the parking lot beside Hanes Hall at 2 p. m. for transportation to Dix Hill today.

CAMPUS CALENDAR

Due to the fact that instruction ends next Wednesday for the Thanksgiving holidays, there will be no Campus Calendar published for the week Nov. 24-30. The next Calendar to be published will be for the week Dec. 1-7, according to an announcement from the university News Bureau.

ENGLISH CLUB

Dr. Maurice Natanson, associate professor in the Philosophy Department, will be the guest speaker at the UNC English Club meeting on Friday night at 7:30 o'clock in the Wilson Library Assembly Room.

He will speak on "Existential Categories in Contemporary Literatures" with special reference to Dostoevski and Franz Kafka. Dr. Natanson's special field of interest is recent European philosophy.

Before joining the UNC faculty this fall, Dr. Natanson taught at the University of Nebraska and the University of Houston; he was also on the graduate faculty of the New School for Social Research. His scholarly contributions include published book-length studies on Sartre and George H. Mead.

MUSICOLOGICAL SOCIETY

There will be a meeting of the American Musicological Society, Wednesday, 8 p. m., at 108 Hill Hall. The speaker is Dr. William S. Newman, professor of music at UNC, who will present a paper on "The Uses and Spread of the Baroque Sonata."

The BULL'S HEAD BOOKSHOP?

You know, it's a sad fact, but there are some UNC students who leave Chapel Hill without ever finding this pleasant, relaxed spot.

The BULL'S HEAR is in the north west corner of the basement of the Library — which we trust most of the students can find.

Current books are all there to loan as well as to buy plus a large selection of paperbacks and loads of interesting "finds" in books hidden here and there. Come in and sit in our easy chairs and enjoy our books.

Tatum Concerned About Stopping Duke Offense

Jim Tatum's main concern about the Tar Heel's game with Duke Saturday is a simple one, but it carries more meaning than first meets the eye. "We've got to stop Duke," Tatum avers frankly. "Of course that's true with any team, but more so against Duke because they play possession ball."

The Tar Heel chieftain feels that his club will have to get possession of the ball in order to win because, "we're not the type ball club that has many 80-yard drives. We've only driven that far, or even close to it, once this season (against Wake Forest). We have to get them in their own territory and get possession, then capitalize."

Assistant Coach, Pat Preston had this to say: "We expect them to move as they have all season, mostly running, but they've proved they can pass too."

Duke Wasn't As Bad As All That—Tatum

Thus the Tar Heels will have their work cut out for them when they meet the Blue Devils in Duke Stadium Saturday. Nobody is taking this game lightly, least of all Tatum. He thinks the Blue Devils were much better than has been indicated against Clemson last weekend.

"That Clemson line didn't push Duke around so much," he said. "Those Clemson fumbles looked like bad breaks, but you've got to remember that the Duke line wasn't lying down and playing dead; it was hitting hard."

As an example of how tough Tatum feels the Blue Devils will be, he gave this comparison. Physique—equal; Agility—Duke; Speed—Duke; Experience—Duke. But the Tar Heel mentor still feels his club has an excellent chance against the Devils despite the odds, and the team feels the same way.

Affect Of Lavoff Can't Be Determined Yet

How much will the layoff affect the Tar Heels?

"Nobody can tell about the advantages and disadvantages of a layoff until after a game," says Tatum. "It has been a great advantage in getting Ron Koes and Nelson Lo e ready, and it has given several other boys who have had minor injuries a chance to recover."

Tatum said that, at present, only halfback Don Coker might not be in top shape for the Duke fray. Coker has been bothered by an ankle injury for the past few weeks and is not recovering as rapidly as expected. Boys like Jim Schuler and Phil Blazer are back in good shape and should be ready, Tatum says.

Blue Devils Deep In Experienced Talent—Preston

Preston, who has scouted Duke several times this season, had this to say about the Blue Devils:

"Duke has a fine array of talent and is deep in every position. They have such depth, in fact, that Murray(Coach Bill) sometimes doesn't even know who he'll start."

Preston praised the hard-running Duke backfield highly. He pointed out the work of halfback George Dutrow and fullback Harold McElhaney as vital elements in the Blue Devil's success. He also commended fullback Phil Dupler as a good replacement for the oft-injured McElhaney.

As far as quarterback is concerned, Preston feels that Bob Brodhead and Pryor Millner can run the team with equal ability and says that both are fine passers, although Duke depends mostly on a running game.

'Seven Good Men In First String Line'

Preston also expressed respect for Duke's tremendous collection of reserve backs. He and Tatum both agree that the fact that competition for each position is so tough has a lot to do with the fine record of the Devils.

"They're deep in talent," says Tatum. "They have sophomores on the bench and some other holdouts who could make most any team.

Preston declined to single out anybody in the Duke line for special praise saying, "they are all very good." He was especially impressed with the size of the Blue Devils, conjecturing that the smallest man in the line was about six feet tall. "They have seven good first string linemen," Preston said, "and plenty more on the bench."

Today Is Last Day For $2.00 Duke Tickets

Sports briefs.

Another press box is being erected in Woollen Gym as Tar Heel officials prepare for the 1957-58 basketball season which opens December 7. The new box is a welcome sight to sportswriters who remember how tight things were in the other one last season. Two boxes should alleviate a good deal of confinement.

Better get those Duke student tickets right now. Today is the last day they can be purchased for half price. Starting tomorrow, the price will be the full four bucks. Better get that passbook and ID card and hustle on down to Woollen Gym before 4:30 this afternoon.

Jim Tatum still feels that his club's best effort of the season was its victory over South Carolina in the last game the Tar Heels played.

Dale Ranson--Modest Man With Record

By BILL KING

Dale Ranson is a man with a record. And what a record. For those who have never heard of Ranson, and there are some since he doesn't hit the headlines too often, he's the Carolina cross-country and track coach.

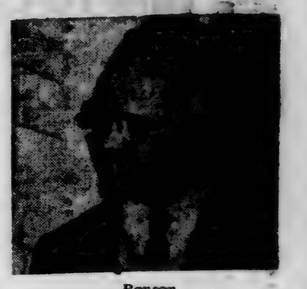
It's true, Ranson isn't one of these fellows who's always plugging himself. But you know he's around when you take a look at Carolina's fabulously consistent cross-country and track success.

STARTED IN '25

The modest, articulate Tar Heel coach has been around the Carolina campus for quite some time. In fact, his entire coaching career has been spent right here in Chapel Hill. It dates back to 1925 when he and Coach Bob Fetzer got together to build the grand old sport of running into something that has lived and progressed here ever since.

Speaking of cross-country only, Ranson has a pretty fair record to put on the line if there's any doubt about his being one of the truly outstanding cross-country coaches in the nation. Back in 1936 a Ranson cross-country team won its first conference title — Monday, a Ranson cross-country team won its eighteenth conference title. Eighteen championships in 33 years—a right good country record in any man's book.

GREAT C-C RECORD



We're not even mentioning the fine track record which he has helped compiled over the years (Coach Fetzer has retired now) and we're not mentioning the numerous state titles, etc. which his teams have captured. His cross-country record is, in itself, indictative enough of his capabilities.

Carolina has belonged to three conferences since Ranson came on the scene and he's chalked up very impressive records in each. None of his cross-country teams have ever finished any lower than fourth, and that goes back to the days when the Tar Heels were in a 23 team conference.

ELLIOT WAS FIRST

All Americans? Ranson has had his share since Galan Elliot received the distinction in Ranson's second year of coaching. The Tar Heel mentor estimates he's had about eight or ten or All-Americans, and for Ranson, that's probably a conservative estimate.

Ranson doesn't have much to say about his records. He gives all the credit to his boys when he says:' 'We've had fine cooperation from all the boys during these years. They've always been willing to work hard for the betterment of our team."

Tar Heel Booters In Finale At State Today

Wolfpack Defense Is Most Potent Weapon

By JIM PURKS

RALEIGH—The Carolina soccer team will try to end the season with with a favorable note today when it takes on the defensively-strong N. C. Wolfpack in Raleigh at 3 p. m.

Today's game marks the season finale for the hardluck Tar Heels, who have been tied in their last two conference games.

While lacking a powerful offensive punch, the State eleven will be the toughest defensive team the Tar Heels have faced all season. The Wolfpack has been stingy with goals to conference rivals this season. Maryland &ot the largest number of goals off State in a 3-1 victory.

THOMPSON PACES

Pacing the high-scoring forward line for the Tar Heels will be center forward Mike Thompson, who has scored nine goals in the six games played so far this season. One of Thompson's biggest goals occurred when he scored the fifth and tying goal against Duke with 30 seconds remaining in the game, to top off Carolina's electrificing comeback against the Blue Devils.

With Thompson on the forward line will be insides Tom Rand and John Ghanim, while Rick Grausman and Coleman Barks will be at the wing positions.

INJURIES HAVE HURT

Defensively, the Virginia and Duke games have proven costly for Carolina as the two rough games reduced the ranks of Coach Allen's first string defensemen due to injuries.

In the Virginia game, first-string goalie Jim Rattay was lost to the Tar Heels for the season when he suffered a fractured cheekbone following a collision in front of the goal.

Ted Youhanna, a key fullback for the Tar Heels' defensive unit, was injured during the Duke game when he suffered a disclocated rib following a collision with a teammate.

HOGABOOM OUT

Pete Hogaboom, who played a good second half during the Duke game sustained a sprained ankle and will also not be able to play in the State contest. Hogaboom, who had not played much this season, promised to be a starter in the vacated right fullback slot for today's game.

Today's game marks the season finale for the hadluck Tar Heels, who now have a 2-2-2 record for the season. In their last two outings, the Tar Heels were tied by conference opponents Virginia and Duke.

Wrestling Team Will Be Better Barnes Thinks

By ELLIOTT COOPER

Sam Barnes, starting his eighth year as varsity wrestling coach, is expecting his team to improve upon last years record of four wins, five losses, and one tie.

Coach Barnes has eight lettermen returning from last year's squad. The eight returnees separate themselves into seven different weight divisions. Dave Wall, the lightest veteran, comes in at 115. Henry Rhyne and Perrin Henderson are expected to hold down the 130 and 137 pound classes respectively. Jeff Pyatte returns at 147, and captain Kenny Hoke is slated to start at 157. Dave Atkinson and Jack Gray both fall into the 167 pound class at the moment; Rob Boyette will be at 177.

CANDIDATES

The present squad numbers 24 men including several members of last years excellent freshman team. Curt Champlin, Charlie Whitfield, and David Corky will join the team after the completion of the soccer season. The squad will also be bolstered at the heavyweight position when Larry Hayes returns to the mats next semester.

Barnes feels that if the team is able to secure some added depth in the heavier weight classes it will have a successful season.

Students, Get Those Duke Tickets Today

Not too many half-price student tickets for the Duke game are left, the Athletic Department said yesterday. The department reminds students that tickets will sell for $4.00 after today.

Students are reminded that the deadline for purchase of the $2 tickets is today at 4:30 p.m.

At Duke Stadium the UNC Card Board will use the Carolina student section to show stunts on a 20-station regional television network.

At last report many Carolina students have bought tickets and are planning to make the trek to West Durham.

EMIL DECANTIS
Carolina's Explosive Runner

Watch Out For Emil!

He usually comes in with Carolina's alternating unit, rather than starting, but when he gets on the field, there is apt to be an explosion, both on offense and defense.

That's Emil (Moe) DeCants, exciting 180- pound junior halfback from Scranton, Pa., who could greatly annoy Duke at Durham Saturday, if he carries on as he played for the most part this season, and especially if he has some carry over from his performance in the South Carolin game.

Some consider DeCantis Carolina's best back. His coaches certainly hold him in high regard and always, talking about him, point out what a fine defensive back he is.

BIG DAY

Against the Gamecocks, DeCantis ran eight times for 39 net yards and pulled in a 33-yard pass for a touchdown. He also threw a touchdown pass to Daley Goff. Moe can thow as well as catch passes and he is about as deadly in one art as the other. Also, he can travel, when he has the ball under his arms.

Down at Miami this year he was a part of a backfield passing conspiracy that killed the hopes of the Hurricanes. He and Ron Marquette teamed up in two superlative running pass plays. On the first Moe pitched to Marquette for 43 yards to set up a touchdown. Then Marquette turned around and threw to DeCantis for 33 and the score.

That night he ran 10 times for 29 yards.

DeCantis stamped himself as a fine runner as a sophomore when he was the team's second best rusher, behind only Ed Sutton. He ran 43 times for 214 yards and a 4.7 average.

This year his rushing average is a little behind that, 166 yards in 55 tries, 3.2 average. But his versatility has been even more outstanding.

No Victory, No Bowl Says Navy Official

WASHINGTON, Nov. 19 (AP) —Capt. Slade Cutter, Naval Academy athletic director, made clear today that the Middies won't go to any football bowl game unless they beat Army.

And this, Cutter emphasized, is the last he wants to hear the word "bowl" mentioned until after the Army -Navy classic at Philadelphia on Nov. 30.

Cutter clarified Navy 's bowl situation at a Washington Touchdown Club luncheon.

"I get sick and tired of hearing all this bowl talk," he said. "We are not going to any bowl if we don't beat Army."

Navy has been prominently mentioned as a possible opponent of the Southwest Conference champion in the Cotton Bowl at Dallas on New Year's Day.

Army announced last week that it would not participate in any post-season game. Navy, more interested in bowl competition, last played in one of the big events on Jan. 1, 1955, when it defeated Mississippi in the Sugar Bowl.

The Middies have won seven of their nine games, losing only to North Carolina in an upset and tying Duke. The Midshipmen are currently ranked seventh in the Associated Press poll.

Cutter again gave an idea of just how crucial the Army game it to inveterate Navy rooters.

"I am perhaps the only athletic director in the country who at this stage of the season is looking forward to his first game," Cutter said. "We have been scrimmaging along at a merry clip, but Army is our first and last football game."

IDC Hears Two Letters At Meeting

By DAVIS YOUNG

The Interdormitory Council met last night under the direction of President Tom Walters and heard him read two letters, one from the President of the Independent Dormitory Council at Duke and one from Dr. Hedgpeth of the UNC Infirmary.

The letter from Duke was written by Tony Turner and stated: "In lieu of the forthcoming University of North Carolina-Duke football game, I am writing to ask for the co-operation of the independents at Carolina.

"In the past there has been an excellent record in regard to the lack of destruction of property and other acts of vandalism on the part of both schools, and I am hoping the situation will remain the same this year.

"There has been a tradition of strong rivalry between Duke and UNC in all facets of university life, but especially in the field of sports.

Let everyone get behind his team and give them the cheering and backing that is so much a part of the game, but let us allow the game to be played on the field in the traditional hard, clean way."

A second letter was read from Hedgpeth thanking the IDC for a letter written by them, which recently appeared in the Daily Tar Heel.

Hedgpeth said, "The sentiments which you expressed were greatly appreciated by all the Infirmary Staff, and I assure you that it will always be our effort to do the very best we can for the student body. It is nice to know that it is appreciated."

Also at the meeting a complaint

Sunday Times Praises N.C. Research Triangle

A twenty-page magazine-type section of Sunday's New York Times was devoted to the industrial opportunities in North Carolina.

In consideration of the advantages for industries in the state, Section 10 of the Times named the "Research Taiangle" as North Carolina's secret weapon to beckon expanding industries.

This Research Triangle has one of its points located here at the University. The other two are at State College and Duke University.

The Triangle, considered one of the nation's most important industrial resources, involves more than 850 research scientists and more than seven million dollars.

This concentration of research people and facilities in the Triangle is one of several in the nation, but is unique in the South.

Here at Carolina, the main concentrations in the Research Triangle are in the fields of the social and natural sciences, mathematics and mathematical statistics.

Governor Hodges, in Sunday's Times, pointed to the advantages of the Research Triangle for industries in urging new and expanding industries to investigate North Carolina for possible locations of their plants.

In the past, most of the research and service necessities of industry have been borrowed from other parts of the nation.

With the Research Triangle in North Carolina, the present economic situation of the South as a whole is expected to benefit, as well as this state.

Serving as a liason between the three institutions and industry and government is the Governor's Research Triangle Committee, Inc.

Director of this committee is Dr. George L. Simpson, now on leave from UNC. Dr. Simpson is a professor in the Department of Sociology and Research and an associate in the Institute for Research in Social Science.

Offices for the governor's committee will soon be located in a newly-acquired 5,000 acre Research Triangle Park, three miles from the Raleigh-Durham Airport.

Land in the Park will also be available to industries.

Experts have hailed the Research Triangle as "a wedding of basic and applied research."

Frank Crowther Joins Kuralt To Deny 'Deal'

Frank Crowther linked Monday with a "clique" engaged in bargaining in the recall election for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel, yesterday joined Wally Kuralt in denying the charges.

Crowther said, "I have never spoken to Rule in my life. I have have not precipitated any bargain through Wally Kuralt or though any other agent."

Crowther said if it is necessary he would gladly go before the Honor Council for an investigation. "I will not allow myself to be put in any position where I can be used for bargaining," he declared.

The former Daily Tar Heel staffer said his position in the recall was simply that he favored it. He added that he believed students are just seeking the best man to replace the present editor.

"I believe they have found this man in Doug Eisele," Crowther added.

He said he planned to help Eisele's campaign, "but I do so through no obligation either on my part or on the part of Mr. Eisele," Crowther said.

"The only clique of which I am a member is the UNC student body," he announced.

SP's Whitfield Denies Charges

SP Chairman Whit Whitfield yesterday denied that there had been any political collusion in connection with the endorsement of Doug Eisele as a candidate to oppose Editor Neil Bass and candidate Paul Rule in the recall election for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Whitfield declared that "everything was open and above board," that there had been no "rendezvous" at faculty member Jimmy Wallace's home following Monday night's Student Party meeting and that no decisions had been reached after the SP meeting.

"The decisions made at the SP meeting were the only decisions made," he said.

Earlier, a news story in the Daily Tar Heel charged that a meeting took place at Wallace's house following the SP meeting. The story said that a former Student Party official had divulged this information but had requested that his name not be used.

Whitfield said the endorsement of Eisele had come following a decision by the party that they could not support any of the candidates then in the race.

"They did not feel obligated to support Rule, Bass or Winston," he said, "but desired a candidate of their own choosing."

Also denying the report was Graham Memorial Director Tom Lambeth, who was reported to have been at the alleged meeting.

"The allegations appearing against me in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel are completely untrue," he said.

Editorship Petitioner Wally Kuralt Refutes Statement By Paul Rule

Candidate Rule Sticks To Guns

By ED ROWLAND

Wally Kuralt, initiator of the recall election for the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel and who Tuesday was linked with a clique ask-

The "former Student Party leader" mentioned in Wednesday's Daily Tar Heel was former party Chairman Jim Holmes of Washington, D. C., it was revealed yesterday.

Former Chairman Holmes was quoted in the story as saying that SP leaders and former leaders—a small clique within the party—including Tom Lambeth, former SP chairman and current Graham Memorial director; Joel Fleishman, former SP chairman and current University law student; student body President Sonny Evans; Jonathan Yardley, editorship candidate Barry Winston's campaign manager, and others met Tuesday morning to endorse Doug Eisele and encourage the withdrawal of Barry Winston from the editorship race.

Winston has since withdrawn and Eisele has officially entered the race.

Eisele, who denied that he was connected with the clique, admitted that he had met at the home of James Wallace, former SP leader and current faculty member, at approximately 1 a.m. Tuesday.

ing favors from Paul Rule, denied the charges today.

"I have attempted to make no election 'deal' with Mr. Rule, nor with anyone else," Kuralt said in a statement issued yesterday. He added that he was connected in no way with Rule, Winston, Eisele or Bass.

Paul Rule stated Tuesday that Kuralt visited him (Rule) in his room and promised the withdrawal of Winston from the race if Charlie Sloan, Frank Crowther and others were named to the staff.

In a statement issued yesterday, Rule said: "I reaffirm my statement as given to the Daily Tar Heel Tuesday." He added that Charlie Sloan had told him over the telephone yesterday that he (Sloan) had no pre-knowledge of Kuralt's visit.

Doug Eisele Declines Challenge

Paul Rule, candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, challenged Editor Neil Bass and candidate Doug Eisele to a verbal duel in Carroll Hall Monday night, Rule said he felt this debate was necessary since Eisele had announced his candidacy after the three-way debate among candidates Bass, Winston and Rule last Monday.

Eisele, however, refused the challenge. "I don't care to become involved in any debate," he said. He added that he would be glad to talk with any individual or campus group but said he did "not want to involve" himself in any "verbal contest" with the other two candidates.

Meanwhile, Editor Neil Bass expressed surprise at Eisele's refusal and said he "enthusiastically accepted" Rule's challenge. He added that recent developments "almost necessitated" another debate.

Since I am primarily interested in seeing that the student body has the opportunity to hear all sides of the recall issue," he said, "I should most definitely like to accept the challenge of candidate Paul Rule."

Rule said that he was challenging the remaining two candidates to the debate "in order that the recall election may be brought squarely before the voters and removed from political cliques."

Rule suggested that the discussion be held at 7:30 on election eve and said he would be glad to meet with the other candidates to set rules of procedure and to choose an impartial moderator.

"I feel that this meeting would enable voters to hear all issues thoroughly discussed and ask whatever questions they desire preceeding the important campus election," he said.

Legislature To Meet Tonight

The Student Legislature will meet tonight at 7:30 on the top floor of New East.

One bill "to establish the North Carolina State Student Legislature Delegation of UNC as an independent organization with its officers and members subject to the approval of the Student Legislature," will probably be debated tonight.

The Ways and Means Committee will make a report on the bill.

John Brooks (SP) introduced the bill. "I don't think that the bill should be very controversial. It is in keeping with all other statutes for organization of this nature," he commented.

Appointments made by Speaker Don Furtado to the ways and means committee, the finance committee, and the rules committee will be announced.

Furtado said he knew of "no special business to come before the legislature."

109 Lovelies To Vie Tonight For Yack Beauty Queen Title

By PATSY MILLER

One hundred and nine Carolina coeds will be presented to judges and a UNC audience this evening in competition for placement in the Yack Beauty Court. Out of that number, one will be chosen queen and 14 other women will comprise her court.

Judges for the occasion impose an impressive list: Miss Elaine Herndon, Miss North Carolina of 1958; Harvey Humphrey, Lt., United States Navy; and Lawrence Wofford, chief Photographer of the Raleigh News and Observer.

Master of ceremonies is Ty Boyd, of radio station WHCL. Boyd will introduce each of the contestants to music furnished by the Bill Byers Quartet. The contest will be held tonight at 7:30 o'clock in Memorial Hall.

Late permission has been granted jointly by the Women's Residence Council and the Office of the Dean of Women to all coeds either participating or attending the contest if it should last past 11 p. m.

However, this is not a campus-wide granting of late permission, and those not attending the contest will not be allowed to stay out past 11. All women have been reminded to return to their dormitories or houses immediately upon the contest's conclusion.

Pika Queen Candidates Entertained

By RUTH WHITLEY

The contestants for the Pika "Beat Dook" Queen honored Tuesday night at a dinner party at the Pika House.

Judges Jimmy Capps of WPTF and Mrs. Kay Kyser selected the queen and her court of six. Their decision will be announced at parade time.

The "Beat Dook" parade, sponsored annually by Pi Kappa Alpha social fraternity, will form on the Raleigh Road in front of Woollen Gym at 3 p. m. Friday.

According to Dick Robinson, parade chairman, 30 floats prepared by men and women's dorms, fraternities and sororities, will be in the parade, in addition to the bands and two drill squads. The UNC cheerleaders will also participate. A feature of the parade will be the Queen's float.

A pep rally will be held at 6:45 p. m. Friday on the East side of Woollen Gym. Football Coach Jim Tatum and Captain Buddy Payne will speak. The cheerleaders and cardboard department will perform.

An informal "Beat Dook" dance, sponsored jointly by GMAB and the University Club, will be held from 8-11 p. m. Friday in Woollen Gym. Ventriloquist Oliver Bloomer and his dummy, Jimmy Roscoe, will provide entertainment. Master of Ceremonies will be Ken Callender.

Presentation of four trophies for the winning floates in the Pika "Beat Dook" parade will be made by the Pika queen at the dance.

IN THE INFIRMARY

Students in the infirmary yesterday included:

GMAB Committee Conducts Poll Of Students' Opinions

By MARY LEGGETT BROWNING

A poll of student opinion on current questions of campus and general interest has been circulated by the GMAB Polls Committee.

According to chairman John B. "Jack" Lewis Jr., 300 copies of the eight-question poll have been sent to students chosen at complete random from the student register.

When the results of the poll are compiled, the committee will be able to publish for the students an impartial concensus of the campus on these questions:

Would you like to see Adlai Stevenson appear on campus for a political address under the sponsorship of the Carolina Forum? (The Carolina Forum is the student-financed organization which brings such speakers to UNC.)

Would you like for the Daily Tar Heel to carry "Peanuts" even if it means dropping "Lil Abner" or "Pogo"?

Would you favor a change in the editorship of the Daily Tar Heel?

Do you smoke? If so, what brand do you smoke most frequently?

Do you think an additional sorority would be beneficial to the UNC campus?

Questions for the poll are chosen from those suggested by organizations on campus and by the members of the committee.

The 300 persons chosen to be polled have been sent a copy of the questions and a letter from the committee explaining the purpose of the poll and the procedure to be followed in returning the questionaire to the committee.

Carolina-Duke Contest And Frequent Vandalism

The University of North Carolina has a football team.

Duke University has a football team.

The University of North Carolina plays Duke University Saturday.

University of North Carolina students should not destroy or deface the buildings or property of Duke University.

Duke University and the University of North Carolina are arch-rivals.

But arch-rivalry should not lead to vandalism on the part of University of North Carolina students.

Rivalry should not lead to vandalism. Vandalism should not be a result of rivalry. Competition is fun. Vandalism is not fun. It is bad. Vandalism is bad.

FROM THE VIRGINIA CAVALIER:

The Opposite Stand On Racial Integration

The Daily Tar Heel has always supported educational integration and we offer no exceptions—except that the process be a gradual one.

But we also feel compelled, from time to time, to present the opposite side of the picture, though we violently disagree with it.

The following reprint from the Virginia Cavalier of the University of Virginia uses quotations from a speech made by Thomas Waring, editor of the Charleston, S. C., News and Courier:

Had there been any question in the minds of Virginians as to how the rest of their state stood on the racial question, the victory of Democrat J. Lindsay Almond, Jr. over Republican Senator Theodore R. Dalton in last week's gubernatoral election, should have answered it rather decisively. A vote for Mr. Almond, by that gentleman's own admission, was a vote for continued resistance to integration in the public schools. Last Tuesday Mr. Almond won a thumping 2-1 victory over his Radford opponent, and the die was automatically cast. The state had made its decision. It would fight integration at almost any cost, up to and including the closing of the schools. . . . .

But why had matters come to such a pass? Virginia has traditionally trod the conservative chalkline. Why so up-in-arms? The answer is simple. Virginia had tried moderate measures. But moderate measures, as it turned out, were to be scorned. Witness the demise of the Pupil Placement Act at the hands of The Seven Angry Men. Obdurate resistance, without violence, now is clearly the only way to stay the hand that is cramming this distasteful pill down our protesting throats. And this Southern editor, a mild-mannered man with iron convictions, tells what the

The present controversy over race relations and compulsory integration of Southern schools is the most serious domestic problem in our country today.

Already it has caused federal troops to be ordered into a sovereign state without the consent of that state's elected officials. It could destroy our Constitution. It threatens the peace and harmony of the Republic more grievously than anything that has arisen since Reconstruction.

In fact, many of the passions this controversy has kindled resemble the state of mind in our country before and after the Civil War. While I am not at all predicting another attempt at secession and armed conflict—indeed, that is impossible today—the danger of prolonged civil strife is clear and present, unless something can be done to relieve the pressures that have built up over race relations.

I want to discuss some aspects of these pressures and problems.

It is much easier, of course, to talk about them before a friendly and sympathetic audience. Several times in the last couple of years I have faced hostile audiences in Northern territory. Because of an article I wrote for Harper's magazine on the South's reasons for separate public schools, I received invitations to speak at various Northern places—among them Cleveland, Ohio; Toronto, Columbia University, Princeton and Williams College in Massachusetts.

Sooner or later, the South must be heard and understood if the American Republic is to survive.

I do not say that the country will die if the federal government of the races at the point of a bayonet. People can live under the most difficult and obnoxious circumstances. Generations have a way of adjusting.

But the Republic as we have known it, a combination of local and national authorities tailored to the needs of every section, will disappear if this race problem is not resolved.

The brain-washing that has taken place in the last 25 years on the subject of race is not confined alas, to the North.

Even some Southerners — people who should know better—are saying that integration of the races is inevitable.

Why inevitable?

If a thing is evil, it ought to be avoided—and when people are determined enough they will find ways of avoiding evil. This race problem is a part of the ancient contest between good and evil.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

Chest Flat & Pat For Frat: Alliteration

Gail Goodwin

One of the dissenter's favorite methods for proving an opponent of context. By doing this he can make black become or an opponent's idea wrong it to lift words, phrases or clauses out while, baseball become football, girls become boys, and editors become incompetent.

This method was employed most skillfully in the Monday night "open house" for those who aspired to the editorship of the DTH.

An eloquent young political whirlwind zoomed through a number of random-picked editorial headlines which, he felt, would display the incompetence of the editors.

This kind of incriminating "phrase plucking" intrigued me, so I immediately went to the back files of the DTH and extracted these sensible slogans, taken mostly from the Kraar-Yoder regime.

1. "The word on kowtow for Snollygosters." This leaves no doubt in the mind of the reader as to the exact content of the editorial.

2. "Say 'Ough' "—What for?

3. "A lance for great worm fafner" is fafner really a worm that crawls on the grass, or is the nasty old editor "picking on people" by calling them worms?

4. "A flat chest? We hope not" this has to do with the community chest, not Dior.

5. "A pat for frats and a boo for bulls." This shows a little ingenuity in headline writing and besides that it rhymes. Therefore it must be written by a childish person. It is not dull enough.

6. "When empiricism won't Bother Aunt Fanny"—here the editor has committed the unforgivable sin of using a word that college students with a ninth-grade level vocabulary will not understand. And who is Aunt Fanny? Nobody knows, so they read the editorial to find out. Unforgivable.

On the basis of judgement that our political orator is using, these headlines are ambiguous, too polysyllabic, and a direct sign of incompetence.

Maybe we should have some kind of a retroactive recall to sort of theoretically kick out all former Tar Heel editors who have dared to be different both in their editorial headlines and in their policies.

Which is more intereting- A colorful, controversial, cheerful, chanting, charming, commanding college communication,

Or a dull, drab, dutiful, demigod run, dry Daily Tar Heel? (How's that for alliteration?)

Who's Next On The B & O?

VIEW FROM THE HILL:

Censorship, Morality & Democracy

By Curtis Gans

Censorship had its ups and downs during the past week, as the Catholic clergy announced that it would step up its fight against "obscenity", and Congressmen and Administration officials pronounced that they would try to cut out some of the restrictive barriers around scientific information. Censorship should only have its downs.

There are two types of censorship involved here. The first, upheld by the Catholic clergy and the state of North Carolina, is of "obscene" literature of every sort. The second has to do with the witholding of government information to the public at large and other allied countries. Both types of censorship are inconsistent with democracy and the free transit of ideas.

In the first case, the upholders of censorship purport to say that literature and magazines material can be categorized as clean or obscene. There is no dividing line between the two, and the dividing line that one individual or group erects in a democracy, may not conform to the conception of a dividing line held by another group.

The rights of each and every individual in a democracy must be protected. The rights of each individual to read, write, and publish what he wants is one of the rights guaranteed in Amendment I of the Constitution in the clause concerning freedom of the press.

Yet, the church has raised literature as a moral issue. The state of North Carolina has done the same. Modern bestseller's such as Peyton Place are banned from the shelves of Durham book stores. Other more serious works have been banned for quite a while from the State Department libraries abroad, for no better reason than they expressed ideas contrary to American democracy.

But it is quite contrary to American democracy to withold any idea from anybody. Only the individual can impose restrictions on his reading and writing.

As for the morality question, it may be fairly common knowledge that morality cannot be legislated, for the time that someone sets up something as forbidden fruit, is the time that somebody else wants to taste. Moreover, there is no one in the world to judge what is moral and what is immoral, for things are only moral and immoral in respect to their consistency or inconsistency with the credo of the individual. There is no thuoght or idea that is inconsistent with freedom of thought, speech, and press ni American democracy.

Moreover, to ban books as obscene, speaks for the immaturity of Americans and the incapability of parents to give their children a set of values that will insure them from any harm that these "immoral" books purport to give. For if the sense of what is right and good is instilled in the people of America, then there can be no danger from Escapade or the Marxist Manifesto. Those who believe in living a life in conformance with Puritanical tradition may read the "obscene" magazine without worry of harm. The person who sincerely believes in democracy will see thet inconsistencies of the Marxist doctrine. It is only for those who are naturally weak in a moral sense that censorship is created, and the creation is a denial of both the rights of the strong and the weak.

In a democracy the free interchange of ideas must be preserved, for it is only through this that democracy can be improved.

It is basic to a realistic education to present all sides not only one, and the confidence of the people of America in themselves can only be expressed if they leave themselves the opportunity to choose between good and bad.

Without freedom of choice democracy cannot exist. It is only through having no bars that the ideas of each citizen may be tested against the ideas of every other citizen

Moral censorship of any sort is inconsistent with democracy. It must be stopped.

OLD NATHAN:

Miracle Of Birth & Wobbly Legs

Walt Thomas

Old Nathan, the colored man, walked up to the house one morning, coming all the way from the barn to the house in the rain. Dad had seen him coming and met him on the back porch. Inside we could not hear them talking but I saw Nathan point to the barn a couple of times.

When Dad came back in he drank his coffee quickly and grabbed his coat, then before he went out the door he looked at me and my brother, Ed saying "Men, come on with me, I may need you." He grinned at us then, the way he always did when he called us "men."

Outside the rain was soft and cool and the wind blew it in smoky gusts across the barnyard and up across the rear lawn of the house past the apple trees, green and shining in the damp. It was dry and warm and hay-animal-smelling under the shelter of the big old shingle topped barn.

My brother and I, both of us just kids, stood there with the old colored man, Nathan, and watched as Dad went inside the stable paddock where the big gentle jersey cow lay, breathing hard. Ed and I knew that a calf was going to be born here but we had never seen it happen and now Dad had brought us here to be a part of it.

I could tell Dad was tickled at the idea of the birth, and he was tickled too at the way we stood so attentively watching: I knew what his cows meant to Dad and I was proud of his wanting us to see this thing as it happened. I knew that he was watching us to see how we reacted to what we saw happening before us there on the piled hay.

I could tell that he was anxious about us and that he would make us leave if he thought it was bothering us at all. But we both were too busy thinking about how wonderful a thing this birth was to be disturbed about it. And when finally the calf was born, and first wobbling drunkenly to its feet, old Nathan laughed aloud and Dad looked at us and said: "Well, what do you think of that, men."

He told us we could name it and that made us feel really good. So we stood there a long time leaning against the paddock gate watching the little calf get stronger and stronger as it faltered and struggled in the clean straw on the floor of the barn. I stood there and was lost in thought about this beautiful bloody miracle that had been performed before me. I watched the still-wet, tongue searching awkward calf stand now with its mother.

My brother, Ed, tried to reach with his hand through the paddock bars to touch the calf. Dad laughed and handed me his dark, old pipe to hold as he easily lifted Ed over the gate and held him inside so that he could stand in the animal scented hay and wonderingly run his hands over the newborn animal.

Ed looked at me and grinned, and Nathan laughed again while Dad just looked pleased with a smile twitching around his wide generous mouth. Dad let me carry his pipe for the rest of the time we were there at the barn and only when we started back through th rain in the truck did Dad take it back smiling and saying that my mother wouldn't like that yet.

I decided then that no one knew better than my Dad how to make a boy feel like a man.

'Thanksgiving Thump'

The fellows over at Cobb Dorm got into the Thanksgiving spirit this past weekend when they entertained at their "Thanksgiving Thump" in the social room and selected Zona Quinn, a WC student as "Sweetheart of Cobb Dorm."

Adding to the festivities were 140 WC girls who made the trip down from Greensboro for the occasion. For entertainment Jim Crisp's combo provided music for dancing with Hoke Simpson featured at intermission.

The nine contestants—all from WC—and their escorts were Sarah Long with Bill Bailey, Louise Schimmellennig with Hilly Goldman, Sally Joyner with Jim Gaskins, Dot Sizemore with Rush Bradshaw, Terry Munford with Jim Barbee, Becky Rhodes with Don Starlings, Catherine Jenrette with Charlie Thompson, Marsha Reynders with Gene Johnson, and the winner, Zona Quinn with Gary Cline.

Zona was crowned by Joy Doughtry, also a WC student, who was escorted by Al Goldstein, last year's sweetheart.

'BEAT DOOK' PARADE—Friday will be the big parade day for UNC students when dorms, fraternities and sorbrities show off their thoughts on the Dook game in the form of floats. Typical of "Beat Dook" parades of the past are these two entries which appeared in last year's event, the day before the Carolina-Duke game in Kenan Stadium. An annual event, the parade and selection of a "Beat Dook" Queen is sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity.

Fellows Give Views On What Every Woman Should Know

By JOAN BROCK

Ye coeds that are alter bound
Be skillful as ye flirt around
It seems these boys have well in mind
The type of girl they hope to find

Have you bought the latest issue of your favorite bridal magazine? Were you seen last week admiring diamonds in local jewelry stores? Are you hoping for a place setting in silver this Christmas?

These are all symptoms of a common disease known as "Altaritis." An unique and sparkling emerald-cut diamond, preferably 2 carats) has been known to cure the severest cases.

To speed up recovery on campus and to increase the sounds of wedding bells, several UNC gentlemen have willingly prescribed the qualities they most admire and hope to find in the girl they marry.

Bill Horner, journalism student from Sanford, wants a "party doll." "She must be sweet, friendly and unsophisticated and have a lot of common sense. She must like to party and she must be fairly good looking."

Jim McLees, dental student from Greensboro, recognizes the demands of his profession and the need for an understanding companion. "I want someone who has a great deal of patience—not a brain, but fairly intelligent. She must be friendly and well-rounded."

For those of you interested in the medical profession, Frank Ramos, premed student from Durham, says:

"She must be independent and individualistic—with an active and liberal mind, capable of seeing the best in things about her. Above all, she must be a good mother to my children."

With the same ideas in mind, Bob Hall, senior from Statesville, ignores looks and says:

"I prefer a girl with diversified interests—one who is a liberal thinker and who is keenly aware of her responsibilities as a future mother and homemaker. I want a wife that is humble, benevolent, and who has a natural love for mankind."

It seems that the most accepted type of girl is one who is friendly, understanding and well-rounded.

Don Hearn, freshman Morehead scholar from Laurinburg, isn't particularly attracted by intelligence. "She must be sweet, lovable and fairly good looking. Specifically, I want a girl who is versatile and with whom I can have fun doing anything."

Joe Heavner, sophomore from Lincolnton, says: "I want a girl who is congenial, versatile and natural. Long hair is the outstanding feminine trait, with the exception of facial features."

Most of the boys have subjected looks to other qualities such as personality and intelligence. It is interesting to note a couple of opinions on beauty.

To lend an European view to the discussion, Jean Pierre Boissavit, graduate student from France, was questioned. "I expect intelligence and moral standards more than anything else in a woman. Beauty is enjoyable, but I am afraid it does not last."

Roger Foushee, sophomore from Burlington, gives his interpretation of beauty: "I must admit that beauty, which Mother Nature bestows on a girl, is the first eye-catcher. However, this soon fades into the background as ability to converse, intelligence and personality become more important in the final decision."

Joe Clapp, business major from Greensboro, says: "I want my girl to be fairly attractive, but mostly neat. She must be intelligent, affectionate, understanding and a good companion."

Well coeds, these are but a few prescriptions which should bring immediate results. They are the wonder drugs! Try at least two of the suggestions and you will be well on the road to recovery. It would be wise to have your case of "Altaritis" under control before the next epidemic occurs in the spring.

Public Health Division Chief Slated To Speak Here Monday

Dr. James R. Shaw, chief of the Division of Indian Health, U. S. Public Health Service, Washington, D. C., will be guest speaker at the Student-Faculty Seminar of the UNC School of Public Health Monday, Nov. 25.

Attending the seminar will be students, faculty and invited guests from official and voluntary health agencies. The meeting will be held at 2:30 p.m. in the Louis R. Wilson Library Assembly Room.

While in Chapel Hill, Dr. Shaw and his associates will confer with faculty members of the School of Public Health concerning the school's contract with the Indian Service. This contract is for the training of Indian village health educators.

This project, conducted under the auspices of the Department of Public Health Education of the UNC School of Public Health, utilizes the Albuquerque, N. M. regional headquarters of the Indian Service and the reservations in that area as a field teaching center.

International Studies Major To Be Offered In The Spring

By ANN FRYE

In pre-registering for the spring semester, members of the junior class still have an opportunity to major in a broad course of study—known as International Studies—introduced just this September to UNC.

Since the course covers curriculum in five departments, a junior majoring in history, anthopology, economics, geography or political science, might easily change over second semester to the International Studies, according to Dr. K. C. Frazier.

Dr. Frazier is chairman of the University committee in International Studies, which drew up plans for the course.

According to Dr. Frazier, there is an increased demand for graduates in international studies. Job opportunities for graduates include government service, certain private businesses with international ramifications, teaching and journalism.

To get an A. B. in International Studies, a student must meet two broad requirements—one referring to department courses and the other referring to a plan of study.

The first "core" requirement covers six courses in five of six fields (anthropology, economics, geography, history, journalism and political science) plus one language course in addition to those required by the General College.

The other requirement in International Studies major must meet is to choose one of the following in a particular field.

At present there are several students majoring in this course. Advisers for the students are picked from the departments participating in the course.

When the University Committee on International Studies was set up in 1954, the development of this undergraduate program was only a part of a general plan to emphasize international affairs at the University.

The committee is currently working on plans for a graduate curriculum, adult education in international affairs, and a coordinated research and publications program.

Adult education includes such activities as encouraging extension courses on international affairs, conferences and eventually a radio and television program.

Dr. Frazier said that a vital part of the committee's work will concern the research and publication program. This program will involve additional opportunities for UNC professors, as well as other people, to do research on particular aspects of international affairs and publish the results of their research.

When these plans are more fully developed, Dr. Frazier said, a University Council on International Studies possibly will be set up to coordinate the various activities.

Approval of the new undergraduate program came last spring from the Faculty Council.

STUDENTS ON BRIDGE

One-Level Contracts Are Often Fiercely Fought Card Battles

In duplicate bridge, one-level contracts often turn into fiercely fought battles, as witness today's hand from a recent duplicate tournament. By playing very carefully, East and West are able to defeat South's one no trump contract by one trick.

South deals; both sides vulnerable

C. 6 5 3 2

D. 10 2
C. 8 7 4

SOUTH
S. Q J 7 6
H. A 8
D. K J 7 5
C. A Q 10

The bidding:

SOUTH	WEST	NORTH	EAST
1 NT	PASS	PASS	PASS

Opening lead: 6 of hearts.

This one-trick difference—the difference between setting the one-level contract and allowing declarer to make it—is quite important at duplicate bridge, much more so than at ordinary rubber bridge.

Holding 17 points in high cards with fairly even distribution, South chooses to open one no trump in preference to bidding a spade or a diamond. West passes, and North's four points are not nearly enough to warrant a bid.

After some thought, East decides to pass and let the hand play for one no trump; however, a more aggressive East player at duplicate might have interjected a competitive bid instead of passing. In this particular case, though, the pass turned out to be best.

West's obvious opening lead is the fourth highes (the six) in his five-card heart suit. Declarer plays a low heart from dummy in hopes that East will play the king or queen. When it comes East's turn to play, he must take time to think, for this is the most crucial play of the game.

Ordinarily East would play the king, due to the rule of "third hand high," but in this case the nine of hearts is the proper card to play. East takes a careful look at the card his partner opened—the six.

East knows that West has three cards above the six, which means that South must have two cards above the six. By considering all possibilities of what these two cards might be, East arrives at the conclusion that the nine is a much better percentage play than the king.

The play of the king of hearts will lose a trick, among other situations, if South has the ace and eight (as is actually the case) or ace and seven, since then the jack on the board can be set up for a second heart trick.

The play of the nine, on the other hand, will cost a trick only if declarer holds the ten of hearts and no higher hearts. This, however, is rather unlikely, since it would imply that West holds ace and queen of hearts.

By the bidding East knows that West cannot hold more than seven points in high cards, and it would be somewhat unusual for six of these points to be in hearts. Thus East concludes that the ace and eight or ace and seven is a much more likely holding for South, than the ten and eight or ten and seven, and so he plays his nine of hearts.

It might be noted that there are some combinations which South might hold, such as the ace and ten or the queen and eight, where it would ultimately make no difference whether East played the nine or the king. In these cases, South will ultimately get the same number of tricks regardless of what East plays.

Declarer refuses to take the first trick and plays the eight under East's nine. At trick two, East leads the king—not the two—and declarer wins with the ace. South then leads a low spade to the board, and West decides to jump right up with his ace.

West now leads out his three remaining hearts, which are good by virtue of the fact that East made the right play on tht first trick. East must make two sloughs, and he tosses a spade and a diamond.

South, who is badly squeezed by the hearts, chooses to throw away two diamonds and a club from her hand for her three sloughs.

After running his hearts, West is careful to exit with a spade rather than a club or a diamond. By leading a spade, West runs no danger of finessing his partner.

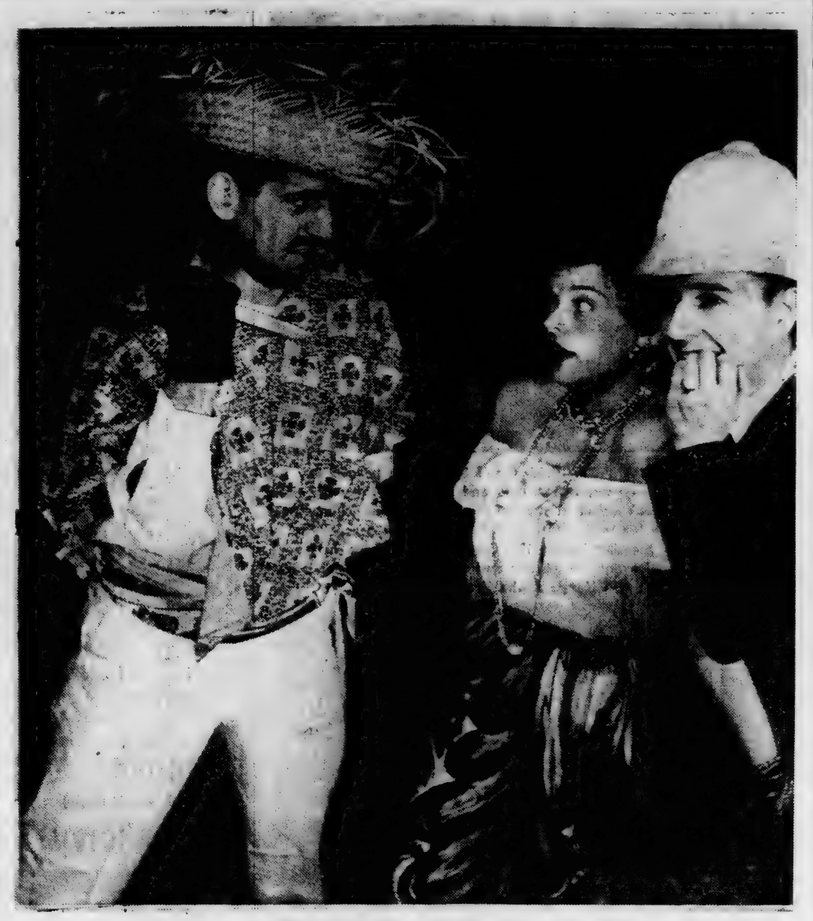
Declarer takes the trick in dummy with the king; she is on the board for the first and last time. She leads a low diamond. In order to avoid being end-played later, East must go up with the ace. He leads back the eight of diamonds, which South takes in her hand with the king.

Declarer then runs her two good spades and plays the ace of clubs, but on the 13th trick her queen of clubs must lose to East's king, assuming that East has discarded properly. This sets the contract one trick.

Commission Will Study Selection Of Trustees

Robert W. Proctor, Marion Attorney, has been designed by Gov. Hodges to serve as chairman of the commission studying the manner of selecting trustees of the Consolidated University of North Carolina.

The study commission met with the governor, who explained the resolution by which the 1957 legislature created the commission and its purpose.



The 100-member University Board of Trustees is selected by joint balloting of the House and Senate.

Tribble's Trouble

RALEIGH, Nov. 20. (AP)—Those opposed to Wake Forest College President Harold W. Tribble won a partial victory today on the floor of the Baptist State Convention.

Their victory came when the convention voted to select nine new trustees for the college from a list of 18 persons.

The 18 nominees include nine who were nominated by the convention's committee on nominations. The nine are regarded as largely pro-Tribble. The other nine names were placed in nomination by Robert Holleman of Durham and are considered as anti-Tribble.

Botanist Contributes To New Plant Volumn

Dr. Victor A. Greulach, professor of botany at UNC is author of two chapters in "Plant Life," one of the five volumes in the second set of Scientific American Books by Simon & Schuster.
which have just been published

The chapters are entitled "Plant Movements' and "The Rise of Water in Plants." The volumes are edited by the editors of the Scientific American and are designed to present science in simple yet accurate terms to the layman.

Publication of this second set of Scientific American books was prompted by the favorable reception given the first set, which appeared several years ago.

Co-Op House Offers Successful Experiment In Human Relations

In a large frame house on W. Franklin St. 15 Carolina students are taking part in a highly successful experiment in human relations.

Bringing together students from various countries and walks of life, the group calls itself the International Cooperative Society.

Formed here two years ago, the society has as one of its basic principles non-discrimination as to race, religion or political beliefs. And this and other principles are seen in practive at the co-op house.

The group also works to secure for its members through cooperation the economic and social benefits that can be derived from cooperative living.

Having the membership open to all who are in agreement with the idea of cooperative living, the society, in its two years of existence, has brought together both graduates and undergraduates, American-born students and several foreign-born persons.

The list of members has included persons of Chinese, German, Hawaiian, Indian, Italian, Negro, Jewish and American heritage.

The arrangement has provided good food, a pleasant home atmosphere and low expenses for members.

Since the group is rather cosmopolitan, the meals that the members prepare vary from international delicacies to American dishes.

New members are always skeptical about their own abilities to cook, but soon find themselves pitching in with the older members in the spirit of cooperation. Each member is called upon once a week to help get together a meal. Two persons work together on each meal, planning the menu in advance, doing the cooking, and cleaning up afterwards.

The kitchen is open at all times and a large supply of food is kept on hand for between meal snacks.

Members share the work load in keeping the house in good condition.

The organization operates on a democratic plan. Every semester the members elect a house manager, business manager and purchasing agent to help the organization run smoothly.

The society was formed two years ago to help the individual enjoy privileges in a group which he could not have otherwise done.

The organization is so arranged as to require a minimum of expense, loyalty, time and other demands on the individual.

There was some doubt at first as to whether the idea would succeed—because of the responsibility involved, ability to cook, and other things. But since the beginning, no one has failed in his duties or other obligations to the group.

Kuralt

Both Crowther and Kuralt have denied the charges.

Kuralt said "I visited Rule in his room to find out if he were a capable man for the job. I told him that he did not stand a chance of winning for the same reason that Winston did not stand a chance of winning;

"With his (Rule's) good qualifications, and Winston's extensively planned campaign, the two would probably split the vote against Bass about even."

Kuralt continued today that if Winston dropped out, the people who would have voted for Winston would probably vote for Rule, and vice versa.

He emphasized, "I made not the slightest hint that I thought Rule should drop out rather than Winston."

He added that he made no indications as to who would be the better qualified candidate. "I did not in any way 'bargain' with Rule to have anyone appointed to the staff if he should win."

Kuralt answered Rule's statement that Rule was promised enough help so that all Rule would need to do would be write editorials by saying: "I told Rule that if qualified staffers were around to fill the jobs, the editor should not have to spend his time working on all parts of the paper."

Kuralt concluded by accusing the Daily Tar Heel and Editor Bass of adopting a "sour grapes" attitude.

He charged, "I think it quite unfortunate that the Tar Heel should print these accusations which, apparently, have been made with the purpose of degrading the opposing candidates, without first searching about to see whether the facts were true or not.

"I think these quite sensational stories are Editor Bass' last, and most abominable attempt to smear the opposition and stay in office."

IDC

in the form of a rumor was aired, originating in Cobb Dormitory. The complaint was concerning the Friday night functions taking place in the basement of Cobb, specifically referring to what was called "excessive noise.". The IDC postponed action until that time when a formal written protest is lodged.

In other action Bob Carter reminded those present that a member of the University Dance Committee must be present at all dances sponsored by a dormitory. He stated that all such dances must be cleared through Ray Jeffries, who will then take the responsibility of getting a representative from the University Dance Committee.

Duke Appeal To Carolina Fans: 'No Weekend Vandalism Please'

An appeal for the prevention of vandalism in the upcoming game between North Carolina and Duke was made today by Duke Student Body President, Thomas R. Ferrall, and Duke football Captain, Hal McElhaney.

The Duke spokesmen said that "the tradition which has arisen as a result of the rivalry is one which few inter-collegiate competitors can boast. The rivalry is also unique," they said, "not only because of its intensity, but also because of the proximity of the two schools."

They urged that, in keeping with the tradition, students of both schools should leave the basic competition to the men of these two fine football teams.

They said that though vandalism has not been common in recent years "we feel that the predicted closeness of this year's game merits our consideration of the matter. Vandalism of any sort, either before or after the game, is completely repugnant to the fine tradition of which we have spoken. It is our hope and belief that no such actions will upset what should be a fine afternoon of football."

They also extended an invitation to the students of North Carolina to be their guests on behalf of the Duke student body. "The students," they said, "are looking forward to another afternoon of good sportsmanship and excellent football."

New Faculty Appointments Announced By Chancellor

A number of new faculty appointments to the faculty of the UNC School of Medicine have been announced by Chancellor William B. Aycock.

The announcement was made with William C. Friday and the Board of Trustees.

Dr. Hans H. Strupp was appointed associate professor of psychology in the Department of Psychiatry. He is a native of Germany and comes to UNC from George Washington University where he received his Ph.D. degree in 1954.

Dr. Billy Baggett was appointed assistant professor in the Department of Pharmacology. He is a native of Mississippi and received his Ph.D. degree from St. Louis University in 1952. Prior to accepting this appointment Dr Baggett was with the Harvard Medical School.

Dr. George R. Holcomb received an appointment as assistant professor in the Department of Anatomy. He is a native of Illinios and was educated at the University of Wisconsin, receiving his Ph. D. degree in 1956. He joins the UNC faculty from Creighton University Medical School in Nebraska.

Dr. Ralph L. Dunlap was named assistant professor of psychology in the Department of Psychiatry. He is a native of Iowa and received his Ph.D. degree from Ohio State University in 1953. He comes to UNC from the University of Maryland Medical School.

Also, two instructors in psychology have been added to the staff of the Department of Psychiatry. They are Dr. Elmud Koch and Dr. W. E. Meaders Jr. Both men received their Ph.D. degrees from the University of North Carolina.

HOW TO STUDY

The makers of Marlboro Cigarettes have bought this space so I can bring a message of importance to American undergraduates each week. There is no more important message I can bring you than this: College can be beautiful. Don't louse it up with studying.

That was my mistake. At first, cowed by college, I studied so much that I turned into a dreary, blinking creature, subject to dry mouth and night sweats. This dismal condition prevailed until I learned the real meaning of college. And what is that? I'll tell you what: to prepare you to face the realities of the world. And what do you need to face the realities of the world? I'll tell you what: poise. And how do you get poise? I'll tell you how: not by sticking your nose in a book, you may be sure!

Relax! Live! Enjoy! . . . That's how you get poise. Of course you have to study, but be poised about it. Don't be like some drones who spend every single night buried in a book. They are not learning poise; what's more, they are playing hob with their posture.

The truly poised student knows better than to make the whole semester hideous with studying. He knows that the night before an exam is plenty of time to study.

Yes, I've heard people condemn cramming. But who are these people? They are the electric light and power interests, that's who! They want you to sit up late and study every night so you will use more electricity and enrich their bulging coffers.

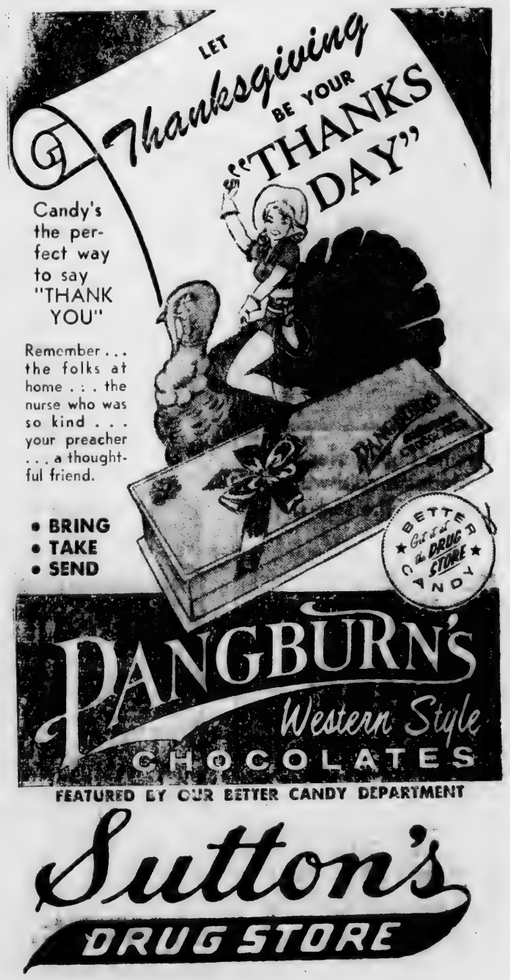
Don't be taken in by their insidious propaganda! Cramming is clearly the only sensible way to study. But beware! Even cramming can be overdone. When you cram, be sure you are good and relaxed. Before you start, eat a hearty dinner. Then get a date and go out and eat another hearty dinner. Then go park some place and light up a Marlboro. Enjoy the peaceful pleasure it affords. Don't go home till you're properly relaxed.

Choose a chair that is not too comfortable...

Once at home, stay relaxed. Do not, however, fall asleep. This is too relaxed. To insure wakefulness, choose a chair that is not too comfortable. For example, take a chair with nails pointing up through the seat.

Place several packs of Marlboros within easy reach. Good, mild tobacco helps you relax, and that's what Marlboro is—good, mild tobacco. But Marlboro is more than just good, mild tobacco; it is also cigarette paper to keep the good, mild tobacco from spilling all over the place. And a filter. And a flip-top box. And a red tape to lift the cigarettes easily . . . It is, in short, a lot to like.

Now you've got the uncomfortable chair and the Marlboros. Now you need light. Use the lit end of your Marlboro. Do not enrich the light and power interests.



Read your textbook in a slow, relaxed manner. Do not underline; it reduces the resale value of the book. Always keep your books in prime resale condition. You never know when you'll need getaway money.

As you read you will no doubt come across many things you don't understand. But don't panic. Relax. Play some Fats Domino. Remove a callus. Go out and catch some night crawlers.

Relax! Live! Enjoy! Remember—any number of people have bachelor's degrees, but precious few have poise!

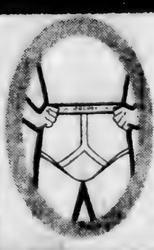
It doesn't take any cramming to learn that the finest filter cigarette on the market today is Marlboro, whose makers take pleasure in bringing you this column regularly.

Men in the know know true from false

College grads employed in science earn more than the grads in Government service.

☐ TRUE ☐ FALSE



False. Surveys show that 38% of the grads in Government work were in the $5,000 and above range: only 26% of those in science shared this income status. At $7,500 and above, Government employed grads scored 2 to 1 over scientists.

Over 75% of U.S. college grads enter professions or reach top management in business.

☐ TRUE ☐ FALSE

True. In fact the percentage is closer to 84%! Census reports indicate that employment with the greatest prestige and income is overwhelmingly held by college grads. Some men without a college education make the grade, almost all college grads do.

Devils Can Remember Some Lean Years, Too

By TED MANN

DURHAM—You hear a lot of talk as the annual Duke-Carolina football classic comes up about the Tar Heels' "seven long years of lean" but old-timers around Duke can remember when it was "eight long years of lean and two scoreless ties" before the Blue Devils could win.

That string of Tar Heel wins started when the two teams resumed relations back in 1922 after Trinity's 25-year football ban and the Duke people got to the place where they figured that any team wearing Carolina blue uniforms could take the field and beat the Blue Devils.

SOME EMBARRASSED

Some of those defeats were embarassing, indeed. Carolina started off with a 20-0 win in 1922, by 14-6 in 1923 and by 6-0 in 1924 but then they took off the brakes in 1925 and won 41-0.

In 1926 it was 6-0 and in 1927 with Duke favored, the Tar Heels won going away 18-0. Duke again was favored in 1928 and again the Tar Heels won 14-7. In 1929, Carolina pulled out the stops again and rolled and rolled and rolled—48-7.

Coach Bill Murray of Duke was on those 1928 and 1929 Duke teams but he was also a senior when Duke got something out of the series—a scoreless tie in the famous "Battle of Lake Kenan" in the torrential downpour.

WADE WON

Wallace Wade's 1932 team brought Duke its first win after another scoreless tie in 1931, his first year at the Blue Devil helm. Then followed years that ran with two Duke wins against one for the Tar Heels until war-time and Eddie Cameron took over. Cameron's first Duke team tied the Tar Heels at 13-13 but then won four in a row (including two in 1943) before Wade returned from the service.

Then it was Carolina for four straight years in the so-called "Justice Era" which was climaxed by the 21-20 Carolina win in 1949 when the game was stopped too early but then resumed for Duke to try a final field goal.

Wade retired after the 1950 win and then started Murray's long string of wins.

So, as this game comes up, Duke followers feel that they still need at least one more win to even up for that long Carolina string back in the '20's.

Jones At Old Spot

Jim Jones, senior from Greensboro, who was an All-ACC guard last year but has been playing end this season, has no gone back to his old high school position, center. Shift was necessary because of ailing Tar Heel pivotmen.

In the winners bracket of this tournament, Alpha Gam I will play Pi Phi this afternoon at 4:45. Tonight at 7:00 Chi Omega will meet Alderman Dorm in the second game of this division. In the losers bracket, Alpha Gam II competes against Carr Dorm on Tuesday, November 26 at 800.

The preceeding game at 7:00 will see the Tri Delts matched against the Nurses. All of the volleyball games will be played in Womens Gym.

Splash Club

All Seniors and old members of the Splash Club are urged to be present at the meeting Monday at 7 p. m. The plans concerning the water pageant will be discussed.

Before the meeting, at 6:45 any girls who wish to try out for membership in the club may do so. At the last meeting, Miss Ka Smith was elected chairman. For any information concerning the club you may contact her at the Alpha Gamma Delta House or get in touch with Miss Gay Hogan, Alderman.

Notice

The Tennis Club will meet every Thursday afternoon at 3:00. All co-eds who are interested are invited to attend the meeting this afternoon.

CAROLINA CARAVAN NOTES

Assistant Coach Barclay Says He Likes Things That Way

By JAKE WADE

The Carolina-Duke football series has run in streaks during much of its history, with first one team and then the other holding the upper hand over lengthy periods.

For the past seven year's it has been the glory road for Duke, the gloomy one for Carolina. The Blue Devils have won seven in a row. Immediately preceding was the Charlie Justice era for the Tar Heels. That exciting young man named Justice led his team to four straight over Duke. And this came on top of our four straight for the Blue Devils.

In the nineteen-thirties the series never became lopsided. Longest winning streak in the entire series, dating from way back yonder when Duke was Trinity and looping over into the days when Trinity first became Duke, the Tar Heels managed eight in succession.

RAY OF HOPE—All streaks come to an end at one time or another, and Tar Heel adherents can find a ray of hope that such might happen Saturday at Durham when this modern traditional rivalry is renewed.

The Blue Devils opened the 1957 season highly touted as one of the best teams ever to represent Duke. They did nothing early in the season to indicate they had been overrated and with brilliant wins were ranked right around the top in the nation. In more recent games they have faded somewhat, but one would have to be blind not to see that they are a powerhouse, superbly blessed with talent and determination.

The Tar Heels, at the outset, were not regarded as a team even in the class of Duke. But their season, to change the complexion a bit, has been enlivened by fine victories over Clemson, Navy, Miami, Wake Forest and South Carolina. Four of those Carolina foes were favorites. Nobody else has beaten Navy.

And the Tar Heels have been an intriguing, exciting team, capable of surprises when least expected. Some of them happy surprises, some unhappy.

LOVES HIS WORK— If ever a man loved his work, it's George Barclay as an assistant coach on Jim Tatum's Carolina staff this season.

George works with the defensive forces and there is a light in his eyes and a spring in his leg every minute he's coaching on the field.

Previously, as a head coach, George never showed such exuberance. His job then, with its higher responsibility, weighed heavily on his shoulders. Normally a pleasant and amiable person, there were times when he seemed gloomy and unhappy.

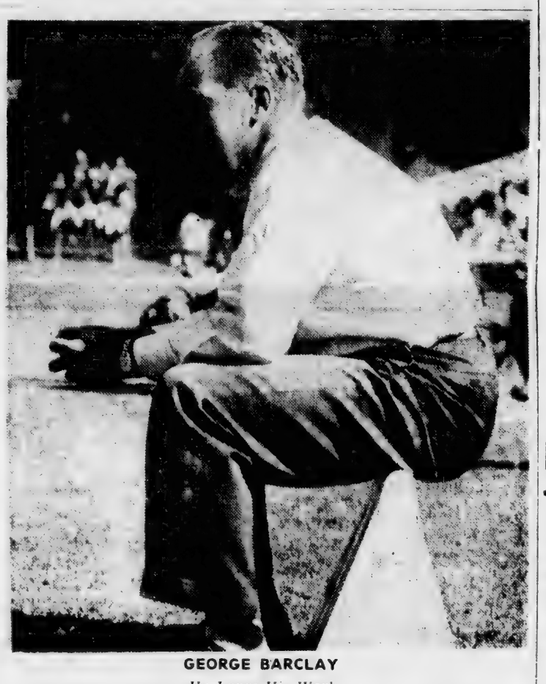
Now he has a prosperous business down town, and he doesn't have to worry about his future. Coaching is a relaxation. No man on Tatum's staff puts more into it. He coaches with a song in his heart, but he coaches to win, and he is as serious as the next one.

POPULAR CITIZEN — Barclay, certainly one of Chapel Hill's most popular citizens and with a great, abiding love for the community and the University, his alma mater, captained the 1934 Carolina team.

A terrific guard, who played with the same zest and verve that is shown now in his coaching as an assistant, George was Carolina's first All American player. During his playing career, he learned of the rivalry with Duke.

His 1934 team won one of Carolina's most exicting victories over the Blue Devils, 7-0. That was the game in which Don Jackson rifled two dramatic passes to Dick Buck that netted the winning touchdown. The year before both Barclay and Tatum had participated in a smashing 21-0 triumph over the Blue Devils.

The two, happily, had departed in 1935 when Carolina had one of its blackest days against the Blue Devils, bowing by 25-0 in a startling upset that derailed Carolina's Rose Bowl bound train.



Raleigh Group Will Oppose Tourney Move

RALEIGH (AP) — Raleigh civic leaders today prepared to oppose a Charlotte bid to have the Atlantic Coast Conference basketball tournament played in the ultra-modern Charlotte Coliseum. Everett Case, State basketball coach, warned yesterday that the capital city is in danger of losing the tournament.

He urged civic leaders to make their stand before the ACC committee stages an early December meeting in Greensboro.

Chamber of Commerce President G. Akers Moore Jr. promised the chamber will "help every way possible."

"I will contact Everett today to find out how we can help," he said, "perhaps we ought to have a delegation appear before the committee."

Goal In Fourth Period Gives UNC 2-3-2 Mark

By JIM PURKS

Raleigh, Nov. 20—An alert N. C. State soccer team scored a decisive goal early in the fourth period to defeat Carolina's Tar Heels 2-1 in an ACC meet held here today. The meet was the season's finale for both squads.

Center forward Gleen Alber provided the margin of victory for the Wolfpack booters when he rippled the net cords with a successful boot from about 18 yards out only moments after the final quarter had begun.

The goal was Alber's second point-producing effort of the day. Midway the second period, he had tallied his first marker from about the same distance out to knot the count at 1-1 after the Tar Heels had drawn first blood.

UNC's lone score came early in the second quarter when Coleman Barks, a stellar performer all year, took a perfect pass from Curt Champlain and powered a kick past the defending NCS goalie. After Bark's successful boot from close in, the Tar Heels found the State defense impenetratable and had few real scoring opportunities during the remainder of the contest.

The defeat left Coach Marvin Allen's charges with a 2-3-2 record for the season, yet Carolina was looking for its first win of the season in conference competition in the NCS battle. The boys in blue had previously dropped a close decision to the defending champion Maryland Terps and were held to ties by both Virginia and Duke in their other conference tangles.

The pair of UNC victories came over two outside foes, Roanoke and Davidson Colleges. A third non-conference opponent, Lynchburg College, administered the remaining defeat to the Tar Heels.

The match ended the college soccer careers of Ted Smith, Captain Bill Blair, and Ted Youhanna for the Blue and White. Smith looked good in the forward line while Blair tuned in his usual fine performance from a halfback slot. Youhanna sustained a dislocated rib in the Duke contest and saw no action tdoay.

Carolina Cavalcade Of Talent Will Feature An All Star Cast

By MARY MOORE MASON

Pee-Wee Batten, last year's "Carolina Cavalcade of Talent" winner, will star again this year in the talent show, according to Eleanor Brawley, director of the show.

The show, which will be on Tuesday, at 8 p. m. in Memorial Hall, will have a star cast of both talent returning from last year's show and new talent.

Hoke Simpson, of recording fame, will appear again this year as will Oliver Bloomer, student ventriloquist, with his friend Jimmy Roscoe, the dummy.

Nick Kerns and his Rock and Roll combo will be featured as will be Carol Jean Suther, one of the stars of last year's Sound and Fury, with a medley of songs from "My Fair Lady."

Other students participating in the show of talent are the following: Cecil Hartsoe and his magic piano; Jerry Farber, Ed Crow and Dick Stoker and their combo ;Judy Huntress; Jim Tally and The Blue Gags; Henry McGinnis and his classical piano; the Chi Omega singing group; Buddy Carden; Gary Nichols and his guitar;

The St. Anthony Hall "Thirsty Thirteen," Shields Flyn and Lawrence Lendon; Les Sutorius and his Dixieland Band; Frank Mayfield; Boots Bennett; Kak Anthony; and Louise Crumley.

A special feature of the show will be the appeareace of the Men's Glee Club with soloist Donna Patton.

G. C. Pridgen is producer of the Cavalcade, which is co-sponsored by the Y and GMAB. Other officials are Daryl Farrington and Graham Claytor, co-chairmen of Y Night.

Ed Crow is in charge of scenery for the show, Mary Moore Mason is publicity chariman and Tex Lopez is ticket chairman.

Tickets are now on sale at the Y building and in Graham Memorial.

Eisele Stand Disappoints Paul Rule

Paul Rule, candidate for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, yesterday expressed "disappointment" over candidate Doug Eisele's refusal Wednesday to accept his challenge to meet with the other candidates for a public debate.

"Intelligent voters will not cast ballots for a pig in a poke," he said.

In issuing the challenge Wednesday, Rule said he felt this debate was necessary since Eisele had announced his candidacy after the three-way debate among candidates Bass, Winston and Rule last Monday.

Yesterday Rule predicted that unless Eisele changes his mind "or it is changed for him, his political support may not be able to save him from a disasterous defeat."

Rule aded that Eisele has yet to comment on "a single issue" of the election. "Editor Bass has at least shown his willingness to face the issues by his acceptance of my challenge," he said.

Candidate Rule said it appeared to him that Eisele's refusal to accept the challenge to a verbal duel "indicates his reluctance to present himself and his policies to the student body."

Rule also clarifield his position on the question of an alleged visit to his room by Wally Kuralt. It a statement released earlier this week, Rule said Kuralt had attempted to make an election deal with him in behalf of then-candidate Barry Winton.

Yesterday Rule stated that the original report concerning the visit by Kuralt as given in the Daily Tar Heel was incorrect.

"My original statement to the Tar Heel said Charlie Sloan and Frank Crowther were mentioned as 'advisable' staff members,'" he said.

He denied that any definite promise was made him.

QUEEN NAN SCHAEFFER — Nan Schaeffer, who has been named queen of the "Beat Dook" parade will preside over the Carolina-Duke football activities during the weekend.

Queen Nan Schaeffer To Reign Over Events

By RUTH WHITLEY

A vivacious Carolina cheerleader and a member of last year's Yack Beauty Court has been named as "Beat Dook Queen" and will reign over the "Beat Dook" Parade and other festivities accompanying the annual Carolina-Duke football weekend.

Queen Nan Schaeffer, sponsored by Kappa Delta Sorority and an English major from Tuscaloosa, Ala., and her court of six will be a feature of the Pi Kappa Alpha "Beat Dook" parade which will begin today at 3 p.m. in front of Woollen Gym.

Miss Schaeffer and her court were selected Tuesday night by judges Jimmy Capps of WFTF and Mrs. Kay Kyser at a dinner party at the Pika House.

The Pika "Beat Dook" parade will include besides the queen's float, 30 floats sponsored by sororities, fraternities and dormitories, the UNC cheerleaders and marching band, the NROTC drum and bugle corps and the Air Force ROTC band.

The parade will start at Woollen Gym, move up Raleigh St. and turn left at Spencer Dorm, continue up Franklin St. to Mallett St. near Carrboro, where it will continue to the Chi Psi Lodge, turn left and go down Cameron Ave. through the middle of the campus past South Building. On arrival at Raleigh St. once more, the parade will make a right turn and return to Woollen Gym.

Awards for the winning Pika "Beat Dook" parade floats will be presented tonight by the Pika Queen at an informal dance, sponsored by GMAB and the University Club from 8-11 p.m. in Woollen Gym.

Ventriloquist, Oliver Bloomer and his dummy, Jimmy Roscoe, will provide entertainment at the dance. Ken Callender will be master of ceremonies.

The pep rally and bonfire, also sponsored by GMAB and the University Club, will begin today at 6:45 p.m. on the East side of Woollen Gym.

Coach Jim Tatum and team captain Buddy Payne will address the students. UNC cheerleaders and Cardboard members will be in charge.

Payne and Sonny Evans, student body president, this week issued a statement urging UNC students to display good sportsmanship during all the weekend events.

"The Duke-UNC football game will take place in Durham this Saturday," they said, "and this year the rivalry looms bigger than ever. It is a cherished and well-respected rivalry, characterized by good sportsmanship among the players and students alike and both schools, we can enthusiastical-relationship."

"With student cooperation from both schols, we can enthusiastically look forward to this game and can project the Duke-Carolina rivalry into an even more healthy one."

Diana Johnson was chosen queen of the Yack Beauty Court last night in Memorial Hall.

Judges for the occasion were: Miss Elaine Herndon, Miss North Carolina of 1956; Harvey Humphrey, Lt., United States Navy; and Lawrence Wofford, Chief Photographer of the Raleigh News and Observer.

Members of the queen's court were: Ann Martin, Cecile Martin, Charlotte Polk, Eleanor Williamson, Carolyn Voit, Ann Robinson, Boots Baker, Ruth Hoffman, Ann Morgan, Nancy Royster, Nancy Baker, Lila Scott, Gail Mennich and Gail Willingham.

Shuford To Manage Eisele's Campaign

Doug Eisele, one of three candidates in the recall election for editorship of the Daily Tar Heel, yesterday announced that Syd Shuford, senior from Asheville, will be his campaign manager.

Shuford has served as circulation manager for the Daily Tar Heel until his resignation from that post yesterday so that he could conduct Eisele's campaign.

In announcing Shuford's appointment, Eisele said his campaign manager "is in no way associated with any 'political clique'" and was selected for his "honesty, integrity and desire to work toward a better student publication."

"Syd will no doubt add immeasurably to the campaign and already has begun an entensive program of student explanation as to the real issue surrounding the recall," Eisele said.

Shuford said yesterday the reason he is serving as Eisele's campaign manager is that he feels "Neil (Bass) has jeopardized student freedom and has endangered freedom of the press through his incompetent and irresponsible journalism."

"I think that by accepting the job as campaign manager for Eisele, I can most effectively present the issue to the students while, at the same time, presenting them with a very capable, intelligent and devoted student and journalist," Shuford said.

Shuford further remarked that he is "confident the intelligent student voters will recognize their plight and will indicate so by replacing the present editor with Doug Eisele next Tuesday."

Shuford said he would like to see a big turnout at the polls and an overwhelming endorsement of Eisele.

Campaign headquarters for Eisele are on second floor of the Y Building.

'Killed Two'

MADISON, Wis., Nov. 20. (UP)—A source close to the Wisconsin State Crime Laboratory disclosed today that questioning of Edward Gein thus far, in a lie detector test that began yesterday, indicates that he killed two of the women whose partial cadavers were found on his horror farm.

Town's Women's Dance

All students remaining in Chapel Hill over the Thanksgiving holidays are cordially invited to a dance sponsored by the Town Women's Assn. The dance will take place in the Rendezvous Room in GM on Friday, Nov. 29, at 8 p. m. A fee of 25 cents will be charged to cover the overhead.

Party Leaders Endorse Eisele

According to a joint statement from University Party Chairman Harry Braxton and Student Party Chairman Whit Whitfield made yesterday, "The Student and University Parties realize the full importance of the recall election. This is shown by the fact that neither of the three original candidates were acceptable."

The statement is representative of the respective parties as decided earlier in the week at open meeting.

It further stated, "We believe that the main issue confronting the student body is not freedom of the press or editorial freedom, but is incompetence as charged by the petitioners."

"A recall election is without a doubt the most serious action that can be taken in such instance as this, so that it is important that each student carefully weigh the questions that have arisen concerning Bass's competency and responsibility.

"It was the firm conviction of both parties in separate open assemblies that it was imperative that the present editor be removed and a new one elected. The parties' choice was almost unanimous--Doug Eisele was the man who was considered most responsbile and most desired as the replacement," he statement conluded.

SP Meeting

The Student Party will meet Monday at 7:30 p. m. in the Roland Parker lounges of Graham Memorial for the purpose of electing party officers and filling legislature vacancies.

news brief

Cop Killer Caught

WASHINGTON, Nov. 21 (UP) — Frank Edward Wetzel, the mental institution escapee widely sought in the killing of two North Carolina State Highway Patrolmen, has been arrested by police in Bakersfield, Calif., the FBI announced tonight.

FBI Chief J. Edgar Hoover reported that a man picked up as a vargrant in Bakersfield, Tuesday night has been identified through FBI fingerprint files as the 36-year-old Wetzel.

Wetzel was arrested in an alley-way by police who found him "acting suspiciously with a flashlight and a hammer concealed in his sleeves," the FBI said.

Wetzel gave his name as Mosher. But through his fingerprints the FBI identified the man as Wetzel and he then admitted that was his true name, the FBI said.

Wetzel had been the target of a tremendous search after he escaped from a New York mental hospital last month. He had been believed headed from Mississippi to free his brother from a death cell.

Christmas Campaign Begins For Families

The Empty Stocking Campaign has now begun with more than 400 families "up for adoption."

All organizations, church groups, neighborhoods and individuals are urged to call Mrs. Charles Dixon, 8-0955, and "adopt a family" by filling a box with food, toys and gifts and taking it to the Sinclair Service Station in Glen Lennox from 1 to 5 p. m. Dec. 9-14.

Cash contributions, which will be needed for unadopted families, may be sent to the Emptying Stocking Fund, Box 374, Chapel Hill, or taken to the booth which will be on Franklin St. Dec. 9-13. All checks should be sent to the Empty Stocking Stocking Fund.

An empty stocking will mean an empty Christmas for the following people:

Mrs. G., whose husband deserted several years ago, is desperately ill and cannot live more than a few months. A mother of five children, she lives on only what the Welfare Department can give her and her mother's small income.

By "adopting" Mrs. G. and her children, someone can make her last Christmas a happy one.

Mr. B. has six children, two girls and four boys, ranging from two-and-a-half to 13 years of age. Since his wife died about a year ago, he has had to be both father and mother to his family. He works as a construction helper when jobs are available and does other miscellaneous work when he can find it. His four-year-old son has an eye disease which may in time blind him.

Thus far Mr. B. has succeeded in keeping his family together, but he finds it very hard to provide for so many on so small an income. A friendly hand at Christmas would mean a great deal to Mr. B. and his children.

"Christmas is to give." Won't you help fill an empty stocking?

Student Supporters Form Editorial Freedom Committee

By BILL CHESHIRE

In the wake of controversy and accusations surrounding the recall election for editor of the Daily Tar Heel, it was announced yesterday that a Committee for Editorial Freedom has been formed to oppose the recall of Editor Neil Bass. This announcement came from Carroll Martin, Korean War veteran and UNC student, who will serve as chairman of the group.

The newly-formed organization will hold a public meeting tonight in Roland Parker lounges 1 and 2 at 7:30. At this time P. K. Sinclair of the UNC Dept. of Economics has been invited to address the group.

Martin said that the committee was organized for a two-fold purpose: (1) to uphold editorial freedom of expression through re-election of Editor Neil Bass and (2) to defeat the political factions on campus "that seek to control the Daily Tar Heel and its editorial opinions."

He added that the group was opposed to the recall election and would definitely support Editor Bass "because of the serious principle involved." He added, however, that the group was purely spontaneous in origin. "Editor Bass was not consulted either directly or indirectly until the group had already been formed," he said.

Concerning the movement, Bass siad he was "very gratified" that these students had seen fit to join together to defeat the recall movement.

"I should like to encourage as many students as posible to attend the meeting which the committe has scheduled for tonight," he said.

Martin said that "many students on the campus are greatly alarmed over the political implications involved in the recall and over the tactics employed by the forces opposing editorial freedom."

He added that "there has been enough conniving in the smoke-filled caucus roms of student politicians. It is time the students were heard from in this controversy."

Martin, who described the committe as "an educated grass roots movement," said the organization was non-political in nature.

"Our only interest," he said, "is to preserve editorial freedom and to put a stop to the operations of an ambitious minority who hope to ride to heaven on the coat tails of dissatisfaction.

"If the editor of the Daily Tar Heel is to be denied the right to speak his mind on controversial subjects, we might as well turn over the management of the student newspaper to the two campus political parties."

He requested that all students interested in having "an interesting student paper rather than an insipid and gutless spokesman for campus cliques" attend the committee's meeting tonight.

Bill To Censure Conduct Of SSL Being Considered

By PRINGLE PIPKIN

A resolution to censure the conduct of the State Student Legislature was introduced last night by Charlie Gray (UP) at the Student Legislature.

A bill to have the winning candidate to have a majority rather than a plurality of votes in the coming recall election was not introduced because it was found that any change in the election laws would have to be made 30 days ahead of election time to be legal.

The legislature passed by special orders John Brooks (SP) bill "to appropriate $2.10 for a copy of Robert's Rules of Order Revised for the Parliamentarian of the Student Legislature."

Al Goldsmith (UP) introduced a resolution "urging the Athletic Department not to schedule home football games during the Thanksgiving Holidays."

If passed, copies of the bill will be sent to Coach Jim Tatum, Athletic Director Chuck Erickson, and Chancellor William B. Aycock.

Pat Adams (SP) and Goldsmith were co-introducers of a bill "to provide $100 to the National Student Association Committee for the purpose of defraying expense to the Regional Assembly to be held at N. C. State on Dec. 12, 13, 14."

The ways and means committee held in commitee Brooks' bill "to establish the North Carolina State Student Legislature Delegation of UNC as an independent organization with its officers and members subject to the approval of the Student Legislature."

Jack Lawing (UP), chairman of the committee, said "there were conflicting opinions as to whether the candidates would be representing the Legislature or just people from the University representing themselves."

The articles of Gray's bill read, "The action of the State Student Legislature in favoring the removal of all constitutional and statutory bans on interracial marriage is hereby censured and condemned.

"II. Any claim asserted by the State Student Legislature to be truly representative of the student bodies of its participating schools is hereby repudiated and denied.

Election Board Requests Filing Of Accounts

Editorial candidates for the forthcoming recall election must turn their expense accounts in to the student government office by 6 p. m. on Monday, according to John Minter, spokesman for the elections board.

Polls will open Tuesday at 9 a. m. for the recall election; closing time for the polls has been set for 6 p. m. Boxes will be placed in every dorm except Kenan and Connor. Residents of Kenan will vote in McIver; Connor residents will vote in Winston.

Town men will vote at the following places: Town Men's I, Carolina Inn; Tom Men's II, Scuttlebutt; Town Men's III, Graham Memorial; Town Men's IV, Victory Village.

Town women will vote in Gerrard Hall.

Identification cards of all voters will be stamped. Dorm voters will sign dormitory rosters at the polling places.

'Mrs. Miniver' Is Free Flick

"Mrs. Miniver," starring Walter Pigeon and Greer Garson will be tonight's "free flick" in Carroll Hall at 7:30 and 10 p. m., according to Mike Strong, chairman of the Free Film Committee of GMAB.

The film will also be shown Saturday night at 7:30. The free film committee has decided to schedule one film a week, to be shown on both Friday and Saturday nights, Strong said.

"This will allow us to schedule top films each week. It will also give everyone a chance to see the film, either on Friday or Saturday night."

GM's Slate

The only activity scheduled for Graham Memorial today is the Graduate Club, 8-11 p. m., Rendezvous Room.

The Solid South And Confederate Flag-Waving

Since Civil War days, the so-called "Solid South" has been much taken for granted—political-wise.

This may be primarily attributed to the indisputable fact that the South—with the prime exceptions of the Dixiecrat movement in 1948 and the "Democrats for Eisenhower" movement in 1956—votes dominantly democratically.

There appears to be a movement underway this year toward creation of another ignominious third party of deep Southerners. Principals behind this movement are ex-Governor Jimmy Byrnes of South Carolina, Gov. "Marv" Griffin of Georgia, and others.

We are from the South. And we resent very much being taken for granted in any way, shape, form or fashion. But we also resent particularly the third party movement and the principals behind such a movement.

Good, old, Jolly Jimm Byrnes from the Palmetto State and Mighty fine. Old Marv Griffin of the Peach State are down-right despicable.

Byrnes and Griffin are of the reactionary blood that would, it seems apparent, find particularly fine a re-staging of the War Betwixt The States—with them sipping mint julips and directing the strategy, of course.

The issue, naturally, upon which Byrnes and Griffin seize is racial integration or segregation. Opposition, reactionary and unrealizing opposition, to racial integration will be used by this pair to split the Democratic Party down the middle and insure Republican success in 1960.

What could be more disastrous than Richie Nixon's assumption of the presidency in 1960. Or, for that matter, what could be more disastrous than another four-year span of Dullesism— the latest "ism" which may be defined as "perpetual bungling, 'brink' carrying or incapacity."

Southern Democrats must cast aside the extremism proupounded by Confederate flag-waving extremists and reactionary, glory-hunting political demigods.

A course of modertaion must be held if the South is to come through 1957's troubled waters without permanent damage to political and educational institutions.

Southerners should regurgitate such sentiment as Jimmy Byrnes is attempting to cram down its throat as a base attempt at capitalization upon in-group ties and patriotism. They should laugh away such Byrnian statements as:

"Notwithstanding the political gloom that now surrounds us, the South may be restored to its place in the councils of the nation if its leaders, forgetting all political differences, will now begin to organize for a united South (A Confederacy?), selecting as leaders only stout-hearted men who just before the selection will not surrender to false promises either for a vice-presidential nominaton or a judicial appointment."

What price unity? Capitalization upon provincial narrow-mindedness?

In lieu of this appeal to base provincialism, we suggest that Southerners listen attentively to the words offerd by Gov. J. P. Coleman of Mississippi. Gov. Coleman, who wholeheartedly supported the States' Rights Movement in 1948, now wisely realizes that Southern Democrats fight out racial differences within themselves without risking a split within the Dmocratic Party.

Coleman openly supports Sen. John Kennedy of Mass. for the 1960 Democratic nomination for the presidency—and his choice is a wise one.

The South is in troubled and turbulent waters.

The extremism propouned by Gov. Marv Grifin and Jimmy Byrnes should go completely unheeded.

OLD GOLD & BLACK:

Nail Bites & Grading

As the nail-biting and hand-wringing time draws near and the year's first mid-semester grades are posted, our thoughts turn to those grades and the factors that caused them.

In many cases the grades depend completely on the result of one or two quizzes. As we turn the spotlight on quizzes we see a strange figure with a red pencil lurking in the background.

The figure is that of the student grader, who sometimes holds the academic life of a student in his hands. In his rightful place the student grader is far from a sinister character. He is a valuable and probably indispensible aid to hard-pressed professors.

The student grader's rightful place, in our estimation, is in th objective-type quiz or pop. When there can only be one right answer to a question or a problem, a student can recognize and mark that answer as well as a professor.

It is when the grader leaves the safe ground of objectiv questions and plunges off the deep end into the essay-type question that we become afraid.

In order to grade a thought-type question, the man with the red pencil should have as comprehensive a background in the subject as is possible.

No college student, we believe, has had time or opportunity to compile such a background. The average student grader knows about the subject only what his teacher last year taught him. He must, of necesity, grade within the bounds of this knowledge.

We are now waiting to see the results of quizzes, some professor-graded, some student-graded.

Being human, we won't complain about the good grades, however undeserved they may be. The ones that worry us, however, we will check for causes.

The Pine Room is a very restful, economical place to eat. Especially when one is forced to economical extremities.

You can be sustained here by a twenty five cent lunch and you can eat like a king for fifty. There is a juke box in the corner that plays nice soft, or not so soft music, and you can wave to all your friends.

Too bad there is only one drawback.

Not all of us are overly fond of removing stacks of dirty dishes, brushing away crumbs that someone else left, and wiping whtaever else is left off the table in order to make room for our possessions.

A thrifty student who breezes in for lunch faces rows upon rows of unoccupied tables stacked to the hilt with coffee cups piled one on top of another, dirty dishes, crumpled napkins and ash trays overrunning on the table.

When you see a wide-eyed youg man or woman walking around the room craning his or her neck and scrutinizing every inch of the place, they may not be looking for a friend. More than likely they are looking in vain for a clean, well-wiped off place.

Surely somebody is responsible for seeing that these tables are kept up-to-date, sanitarily speaking. One man or two may not be enough to keep approximately fifty tables cleared during the rush hours of twelve and one.

Something really should be done about this situation. The Pine Room is strategically located near classrooms, Woollen Gym and the library and therefore need not worry about drawing business — especially with such reasonable prices.

But sometimes one doesn't have the time to perform housekeeping before eating — especially when other people are getting paid to do these important tasks.

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Reader Speaks Of Ingratitude

AN OPEN LETTER TO MR. DOUGLAS EISELE:

I was quite shocked to hear that you too had thrown your hat into the ring for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel. I was under the impression that you were on the payroll as managing editor of the paper; however it has since come to my attention that you had taken a few days from your job to catch up on your studies.

Mr. Eisele, just who are you trying to fool. If you needed to take time off from the paper to catch up on your studies, how do you find time to suddenly change courses in the middle of the stream and take on the time consuming job of running a campaign?

You have in this manner cut off the hand that fed you, by knifing Neil Bass in the back. Bass appointed you to a position of great responsibility, and then you left him during a great personal crisis to "catch up on your studies."

You have shown Quisling traits in leaving the man to whom you owe your present success and joining the opposition in the hopes of defeating him.

I ask you Mr. Eisele, how do you sleep at night?

CARROLL MARTIN

EDITOR:

The recall election for the editorship of The Daily Tar Heel does not concern a question of whether the present editor is or is not incompetent in his capacity. It really concerns political intrigue and conformity for fear's sake.

The American people have been beset by fears generated by the world situation. As a result they have grouped together into what has been called, "The Lonely Crowd," with devotion to the group as the prime value.

Because the present editor has expressed his personal opinions he has been attacked. The student body of the University is coming to reflect the creeping attitude that free speech is a danger to the group. It is not unforeseeable that this attitude will result in the Constitution rewritten, same name, but new context: "The right of free speech is granted only to those who agree with the powers that be. Dissenters are to be suppressed as being considered dangerous to group solidarity.

We are proud that our government is that of a democracy and that our people are still free. A poet has termed it, "Americana."

Twenty years from now, when someone says, "This is Americana," what will he mean, and how will he say it?

HARRY KIRSCHNER

MR. EDITOR:

I have heard a number of students in the past few days say that this is without a doubt the dirtiest campaign that has ever, to their knowledge, been waged on this campus. I agree.

Some of the rumors that are now being circulated about the campus concerning you are contemptible and clearly display the character of the opposition forces. Here are a few examples that I and others have heard:

1) that the Daily Tar Heel contributed to the Empty Stocking Fund in order to enhanee Editor Bass' position in the campaign.

2) That Bass' own roommate despises him so much that he is handling Doug Eisele's campaign.

3) that Editor Bass is a Zionist Jew and has used the Tar Heel to promote the cause of that group.

4) that Bass is a catholic and designs his editorials so as to discredit other denominations.

5) that the Daily Tar Heel has consistently denied news space to other candidates.

Mr. Editor, these attacks, all untrue in entirety are of the vilest and basest character. I call upon my fellow students to rise up against their originators and overwhelmingly re-elect you editor.

"Empire, thou poor and despicable thing when such as these make or unmake a king."

BILL DORRAH

FORMER CANDIDATE WINSTON:

Defends Ousting; And Accusations

EDITOR:

Yesterday's Daily Tar Heel should be the final proof—if, indeed, any further proof is needed—of the incompetence of the present editor.

The paper has developed more and more of a flair for completely disregarding available facts, but this habit reached an all-time high in yesterday's issue. From the seriousness of the charges leveled at me and their obvious absurdity, it would seem to be a clear-cut case of journalistic dishonesty. I would prefer, however, to believe that this is but another in a seemingly endless series of blatant incompetencies. I find it hard to believe that Mr. Bass would be intentionally dishonest.

Some of the more obviously ridiculous charges were as follows:

1) "Thus the intrigues by Petitioner Kuralt and alleged intrigues between a minority of SP'ers and editorship candidates Winston and Eisele are finally blasted into the open."

2) "The political clique felt he (Eisele) was more electable than was Candidate Winston, whom it was supporting to the hilt. Thus it decided to cast him aside and endorse the more electable Eisele."

3) "A former Student Party leader reported that Student Body President Sonny Evans, former SP leaders Tom Lambeth, current director of Graham Memorial, and James Wallace, now a member of the faculty, and others met last night to endorse Eisele and encourage him to run, and to encourage the withdrawal of Barry Winston from the editorship race."

Would any of these unfortunate and altogether untrue accusations have been made were it not for Mr. Bass's unswerving policy of uninformed reporting, regardless of what the facts are?

Because these are the facts: I announced my intention to withdraw from the campaign on Monday night, at a meeting of the Student Party, before Doug Eisele was even nominated. It should not be too difficult for anyone to see that my withdrawal announcement, made at 11:15 at night, must have occured a goodly while in time before a meeting—had such a meeting even taken place—alleged to have been held after midnight for the purpose of "encouraging" my withdrawal, or "casting" me aside. But, as has been the case so often in the past, Mr. Bass wrote with no concern for the facts. (on the front page)

As I have said, I would prefer to believe that Mr. Bass has not been intentionally dishonest, but merely much less competent than any man has the right to be in such a responsible position as he now holds. But if, after he has been presented with the facts, attested to by such impartial witnesses as clocks, he does not print a retraction, what other conclusion can be reached than deliberate distortion of the truth? I sincerely hope that such a retraction will be immediately forthcoming.

In response to the very natural question, "Why, then, DID you withdraw?", I have this to say. My reasons for running in the first place were twofold: 1) I want a good Tar Heel, and 2) no one else had appeared whom I consider more competent than myself. Then someone else did appear. That man was Doug Eisele, and I saw in him a journalist far more competent than I to assume the editorship. It is for that reason, and that reason alone, that I have withdrawn from the campaign, and pledged my wholehearted support to Doug Eisele.

There remains but one thing to be asked: "How much longer must the Administration, Dr. Hedgepeth, Coach Tatum, Sam Magill, student leaders and just plain students be subjected to editorials and news stories about clandestine but non-existent meetings held, to cast aside candidates who have already withdrawn, by people who were someplace else? I hope they don't have to put up with it at all, after next Tuesday.

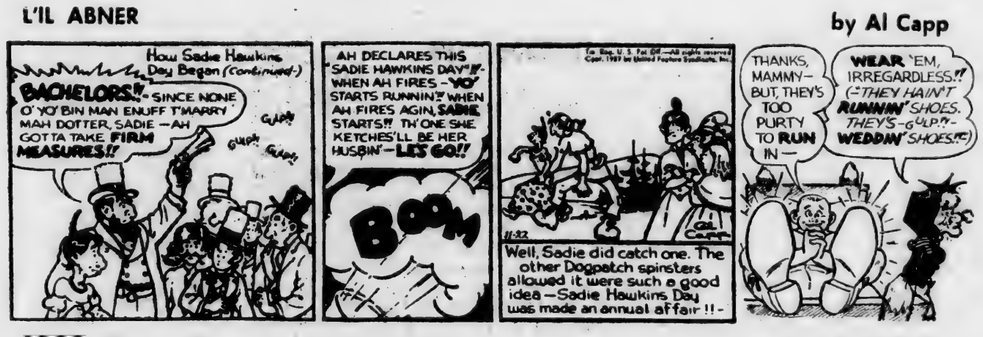
Editor:

Congratulations on a very fine editorial in your Nov. 6 issue concerning fanaticism along racial lines. Almost everything you say I find myself in agreement with—the problem is nationwide; dislike for journalists who deride racial extremists in Dixie; integration is inevitable; the NAACP might not be a "Band of Angels" after all; and gradual integration is the preferred road for this time.



But now, Mr. Bass, let us look for that old reason why? that inevitably crops up in our minds. Have you not previously crucified all political figures in the south who are begging for more time to solve this problem? Have you ever mentioned the problem as being nationwide? Have you ever advocated gradualness in integration? Could this change in your beliefs and principles have anything to do with your upcoming recall election? Will you continue to write such fine, middle-of-the-road editorials as now when you are fighting for your job?

All you have done in the past week or two is praise different student groups and various student politicians, but the question arises again: will you continue to do so after you are re-elected? (if you are) Is the Big Crusade over for good? I even think now to reach the ultimate in appeasement you might write a big spread praising our great football coach Jim Tatum, whom you have unmercifully and I might say ignorantly tried to destroy. Mr. Bass, Jim Tatum is one of the top men in the nation in his profession, and if you ever become a leading journalist it will take the greatest miracle since "water was turned to wine." It might be a good thing to make the vote of confidence unanimous because you are about the only one on campus who feels Coach Tatum is not doing a good job.

Yes, this "Operation Big Snow Job" you and certain members of your staff are attempting to perpetrate I am sure is annoying many other students as it is myself, so please do not sacrifice your great radical principles to win this little old election. And as far as this Freedom of the Press bit, believe you me, Mr. Bass, you are just about to run it completely into the ground.

Student Body Walks Out Of Chapel To Demonstrate Against Dancing

WINSTON-SALEM—Nov. 21—(AP)—The entire Wake Forest College student body—about 1,900 students—walked out of the chapel program at 10:15 a.m. today in a jovial, good natured demonstration against the North Carolina Baptist State Convention's ban of on-campus dancing.

A number of students later gathered on the patio of Reynolds Hall to organize a dance to the music from a radio placed in the window.

The walkout followed on the heels of a demonstration last night during which Dr. J. C. Canipe, president of the convention, was burned in effigy. The walkout this morning was well-organized.

The laughing students were slow getting into the chapel and when they finally were quieted, Dr. Thane McDonald, director of music, who had charge of the program told them:

"We'll have a very brief program because I understand we have a deadline to meet about 10:15."

This was greeted with applause which quieted down for the college chorus to sing the Lord's Prayer.

Before another hymn could start an alarm clock went off. Dr. McDonald commented, "That's too soon." The chorus started "Come Thou fount of every blessing. . ."

As the students left the chapel the chorus switched to "Dear Old Wake Forest" the school's alma mater. The marching students joined in.

Outside the chapel some students began to chant, "We want to dance. We want to dance." Another group started a cheer for Arthur Murray, the dancing teacher.

Many students ran toward the WTOB mobile radio truck where they cheered and chanted at the request of the announcer. Another group of about 300 students went to the patio of Reynolds Hall where a radio placed in a window provided music. A few students danced.

Dean W. C. Archie said he had no comment concerning the demonstration.

He also said it was too early to say if any disciplinary action would be taken.

"The matter will be brought to the attention of the appropriate authorities," he said.

SSL Delegation Sends Faubus Its Resolution

Governor Orval Faubus of Arkansas will receive a copy of the recently passed resolution of the N. C. State Student Legislature to condemn him for his action in the Little Rock crisis.

Introduced by the UNC delegation, the resolution was passed by a 96-43 vote in a joint session of both houses of the SSL.

As instructed by the SSL, Student Body President Sonny Evans and SSL Chairman Pat Adams will send a copy of the resolution to Faubus.

Stating that the governor's action "precipitated one of the most shameful race riots in the history of our country," the resolution condemns Faubus for his "unconstitutional and outrageous defiance of the Constitution which he was sworn to uphold and defend."

The SSL resolution also commends President Eisenhower for his "forceful action, although somewhat belated, in sending troops into Arkansas in support of the Constitution."

Included in the resolution is a reaffirmation of the SSL's position that "segregation in the public schools according to race, color, creed, or national origins, is unethical and unwise, and that it be ended "with all deliberate speed' in the public schools, colleges and universities in the state of North Carolina.

Folklore Group Sets Meeting

The North Carolina Folklore Society will hold its 46th annual meeting in the Sir Walter Hotel, Raleigh, on Friday, Dec. 6 at 2:30 p.m. A public program and a business session are planned.

The president of the society, Mrs. Charles F. Williams of Raleigh, has centered the program in "Our Anglo-American Heritage of Story, Song and Dance." The participants of the program include Richard Chase of Boone, who will tell a number of folktales, Dr. Isaac G. Greer of Chapel Hill, accompanied by Mrs. Greer on the dulcimer, who will sing North Carolina folksongs and Miss Ruth Jewell and the Divieland Square Dance Team with accompanying string band from Raleigh who will illustrate folk dances. The public has been cordially invited to attend.

Other officers of the Society include Donald MacDonald and John Fletcher of Edenton, vice presidents, and A. P. Hudson of Chapel Hill, secretary-treasurer.

Cleared

LITTLE ROCK, Ark., Nov. 20. (AP)—Six persons, arrested outside Little Rock Central High School during integration-inspired disturbances on Sept. 24, were cleared in Municipal Court today.

Five men were dismissed by Judge Harry C. Robinson after a warning. The sixth case was dropped by the state. All six defendants had been booked for disturbing the peace.

Phi Alpha Delta Initiates Twelve

Twelve new brothers were initiated into the Thomas Ruffin Chapter of Phi Alpha Delta Law Fraternity yesterday at 4:30 p. m. in Phi Hall.

Justice Howard Broughton of Hertford officiated at the induction ceremonies.

Those men initiated into the society were:

Dexter Watts, a recent graduate of Phi Alpha Delta and present member of the Institute of Government, presented the alumni welcome to the newly initiated brothers.

Following the ceremonies, the group adjourned to Brady's for a social hour and dinner meeting. William H. Murdock, solicitor for the North Carolina Superior Court, gave the address.

T. Van Hecke of the law school faculty was an honored alumni guest.

80-Member Men's Glee Club To Appear Tuesday Evening

By BEN TAYLOR

"Work," in the form of concerts, tours, return engagements, and long rehearsals seem to be adding up to just what the 80 members of the Men's Glee Club looked for in the University's only touring oganization.

At least that is the impression gathered from attending any of the two rehearsals held weekly of the singing group. And, in case that doesn't convince you, just ask any of its members.

The Glee Club recently returned from a very successful fall tour. Successful, that is, if you discard the "slant-eyed monster" that left its mark on about 80 per cent of those 57 who toured over the Caravan Weekend.

Taking a much larger group on tour than usual, and with only four short weeks of rehearsing behind them, the vcoal group was successful in maintaining its rapidly expanding sphere of influence among music lovers of the eastern United States.

Next Tuesday night in Memorial Hall the "talented tonsils" will resume the pace. They will be the quest vocal group at the Carolina Calvacade of Talent. They will render such numbers as "Whale Of A Tale," from the motion picture "Twenty Thousand Leagues Under The Sea," "One Kiss," fearuring soloist Donna Patton, and the traditional "Carolina Loyalty Song."

After a brief respite via the Thanksgiving holidays, the group will continue preparation for the annual Hill Hall Christmas concert to be held Dec. 17. They will then render the following numbers:

Arcadedlt's "Ave Maria"; "Thou Must Leave Thy Lowly Dwelling place," by Berliez; a French carol, "Bring A Torch Jeannette, Isabella"; Strangeway's The Babe Divine" and a few popular Christmas carols.

Commenting on the forthcoming spring tour, Dr. Joel Carter, director of the Glee Club, termed the progress on plans for the annual event as "fine very encouraging." The club will probably travel into Western, N. C. as far as Asheville.

Proof that a good performance breeds appreciation is currently coming into the Glee Club's office in Hill Hall. Both Goucher College in Baltimore and Marjorie Webester Junior College have invited the Glee Club to return to their respective campuses for performances this year.

Hollins College, Va. plans to come to UNC in April for a joint concert.

This Is Big Weekend For Football Rivalries

This is the weekend when many football teams around the nation momentarily shove aside thoughts of bowl bids, season records and general seasonal recapitualtions and turn their undivided attention to a most important project — beating an arch-rival.

Many football coaches have hung grimly to their jobs by knocking off a much-hated foe in the season's finale after turning in a poor record for the year. And many powerful football assemblages have seen their bowl bids smashed by an ancient-rival in the BIG GAME. Practically all schools have one game which has to be won in order to make the season complete.

Carolina-Duke In 44th Renewal Of Rivalry

Tomorrow afternoon in Duke Stadium one of the nation's oldest and most unique rivalries will be renewed for the 44th time when the Carolina Tar Heels and the Duke Blue Devils tangle. As in the past, this game compares with any of the 'ancient rivalry' games on tap for the weekend.

Anything can and probably will happen when these two old acquaintances get together and tomorrow's fiasco has all the earmarks of developing into one of the best games in several years between the two contingents.

Duke the almost certain Orange Bowl representative (despite rumors to the contrary) will be out to increase its prestige and prove to the nation that it is not as bad as its showing against Clemson last week indicates. The Tar Heels can assure themselves of a winning season with a victory tomorrow and can also put an end to win famine of seven years against the Blue Devils.

Both clubs should be up for this one. The long heritage of Carolina-Duke rivalry will prove a great incentive and both have a lot to gain in the way of recognition since both posses better than average records for the season. Thus a tremendous effort on the part of both teams can be expected.

Largest Crowd Since 1951 Expected

An indication that most fans feel that this will be a "tighter than usual" affair is that an estimated crowd of about 44,000 is expected in Duke Stadium for the contest, and that's the largest crowd in the horseshoe since the two clubs met there in 1951.

Not only that, the game will get regional television coverage from Baltimore to Miami and that will keen many fans at home. Were this game not being televised, a capacity crowd of over 56,000 could be reasonably predicted.

Thus, this game takes on the air of the real Carolina-Duke flavor. That little something which has been missing for several years since Tar Heel football has been below par should be prevelant tomorrow. This game, in fact, could bring back all the color which has been lost since the Second World War days when this rivalry was at its peak.

Comparison Of Mutual Foes—Not Too Valid Here

Comparisons mean very little when these two clubs get together but just for the books, let's take a quick glance at the records and see what kind of corelations can be made on the basis of mutual opponents.

The two clubs have met six common foes and the outcome runs something like this: Both have beaten Wake Forest, Clemson and South Carolina. The Tar Heels lost to Maryland and Duke beat the Terps. Carolina lost to N.C. State and the Blue Devils tied the Wolfpack, but the Tar Heels downed Navy while Duke could do no better than a tie against the Midshipmen.

Duke will be given the slight edge going into the game but the Tar Heels are used to that. They've been underdog in practically all their five victories this season.

Blue Devils Hold Slight Edge In Series

Tar Heel-Blue Devil sports briefs.

In the all-time record between Carolina and Duke, the Blue Devils have won 22 and the Tar Heels 17 with only three ties. Actually that record also contains nine games played between the two schools when Duke was known as Trinity College.

Before Duke won the last seven games (since 1950) the Tar Heels had previously won four in a row . . . The Duke Stadium gates will open at twelve o'clock tomorrow in anticipation of a big crowd seeking to get there early.

The two most one-sided Duke-Carolina games on record were won by the Tar Heels. In 1925 Carolina beat Duke, 41-0 and in 1929 the Tar Heels claimed a 48-7 victory. Duke's best efforts were in 1944 (33-0) and 1952 (34-0). There have been a total of 25 shutout games between the two teams.

Ralph Steele Has Won Himself Starting Birth

More of the same.

The two captains who will meet in the center of the field tomorrow will be end Buddy Payne of the Tar Heels and fullback Hal McElhaney of Duke.

Statistically speaking, Carolina goes into the Duke affair bearing the best pass defense in the Atlantic Coast Conference. But the Blue Devils have been a running club all year and probably will not try to challenge the Tar Heel aerial defense.

Carolina will probably have two sophomores in its starting lineup. One is quarterback Jack Cummings and the other is North Wilkesboro guard, Ralph Steele. Steele, incidentally, was not counted on for too much action before the season started, but has worked his way up into a starting birth.

McGuire Figures Cage Title Lost

By REESE HART
The Associated Press

Carolina Basketball Coach Frank McGuire, whose team has been rated No. 1 in most preseason polls, said today the loss of center Joe Quigg "more or less finished us" as far as the national title is concerned.

The Tar Heels won the national NCAA crown in a breathtaking finish last spring by defeating Kansas 54-53 in a triple overtime in the finals at Kansas City. Carolina wound up the season unbeaten with 32 wins.

McGuire, handsome 42-year-old Irsishman, said "you can't lose a 6-9 senior like Quigg and not feel his loss severely. I honestly believe he would have been All-America. He had reached his potential. I think his loss will knock us out of contention for the national title."

McGuire Realistic

Quigg, a 210-pounder of Levitown, N. Y., sufered a broken bone under his right knee cap in an intra-squad scrimmage two weeks ago.

"You have to be realistic about the loss of a good, big man like Quigg. He was an excellent jump shot and good defense man."

Prior to the loss of Quigg McGuire said "our big headache" was trying to replace All-America forward Lennie Rosenbluth. "Now," he added, "we have two headaches."

"We're not moaning or alibing," McGuire said, "we had good fortune last year but so far this season all of it has been bad."

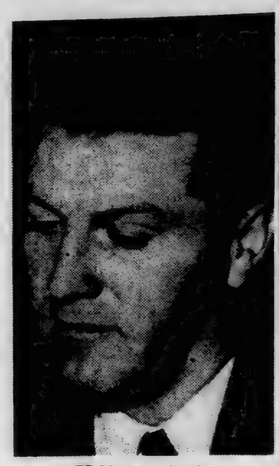
McGuire has no worries at three positions. At the starting guards he has two of the classies performers in the nation in Tommy Kearns, 5-11 hard-driving senior from Bergenfield, N. J. and Bob Cunningham, a 6-4 senior and clever ball handler from New York City.

Sophs Hold Key

At one forward, McGuire has Pete Brennan, one of the stars of last season's club. A fine jump shooter, Brennan is a 6-6 senior from Brooklyn, N. Y.

McGuire said sophomores hold the key to the success or failure of the team this season. If they produce as expected, the Tarheels will have another fine team.

Danny Lotz, a 6-7 junior of Long Island, N. Y, top reserve last season, is the leading canidate for the other forward berth.



Three sophomores are in the running for the starting center spot. They are Dick Kepley, 6-9 of Roanoke, Va.; Lee Shaffer, 6-7 of Pittsburg, Pa., and Ray Stanley, 6-4 of Brooklyn.

Fine Prospects

Two of the finest prospects on the squad are forward York Larese of New Work City, who is recovering from a knee operation, and guard Harvey Salz, 6-1 of Brooklyn. Larese may not see action until late in the season.

McGuire is reluctant to say much about a player until he has shown his ability. He said, "we don't want to build up these boys until they show they can produce."

The Tar Heels open the season Dec. 7 against Clemson here in a game that will be televised regionally.

Soccermen Find Good Breaks Hard To Attain

By JIM PURKS

The good breaks just didn't come for the varsity soccer team this year.

A 2-3-2 record for the season doesn't look impressive for the team, but this record is misleading as Coach Marvin Allen had a young, hustling team which, with a few breaks, might have won the ACC championship.

In the tie or lost games, the Tar Heels outshot their opponents. They passed the ball better, kicked harder and generally outran the opposition.

INJURIES HURT

As with every team, injuries and illness plagued the soccer squad, only the team had more than its share. A key spot, right fullback, was vacated this year when Dave Corkey was forced to drop off the team due to a stomach ailment. Coach Allen had to continuously shuffle his lineup to find a replacement for Corkey.

Also, on defense, goalie Jim Rattay was knocked out for the season when he suffered a fractured cheekbone early in the Virginia game.

In the Duke contest, another defenseman fell as Ted Youhanna, a first-rate left fullback, suffered a dislocated rib. On offense, Ted Smith, a speedy left inside, was hurt early in the season and was not able to play for long periods of time after that.

'58 PROSPECTS GOOD

Prospects look good for the 1958 season and, if all goes well, the Tar Heels will be a definite conference-threat.

In quantity, graduation will not hurt the soccer squad, as only three members will be leaving. But the three players leaving, Ted Youhanna, Ted Smith and Captain Bill Blair, are first-rate competitors who will be greatly missed.

Coach Allen will have a good nucleus around which to work for next year. Hugh Goodwin will hold the center fullback, spot with possibly Dvae Corkey at right fullback, while Bob Borden will be at left halfback.

On the high-scoring forward line, the team will be led by center forward Mike Thompson, who led the team in scoring this year. Coleman Barks, Charlie Whitfield, Rick Grausman, Tom Rand and John Ghanim.

Talent from the 1957 freshman team will also boost the Tar Heels Among the top players on the team are Bob Quackenbush, Doug Fox, Martin Perez, Charlie Lipscomb.

Carolina-Duke Among Top Battles Tomorrow

By The Associated Press

Face to face clashes will settle the Ivy League and Pacific Coast Conference championships Saturday but there will be plenty of other high powered action between the two coasts.

Undefeated, once-tied Darmouth, 5-0-1 in Ivy competition, journeys to Princeton 5-1-0, needing only a tie to sew up the league title. Princeton is a three-point choice.

OREGON IN

Oregon, all set for its first Rose Bowl appearence since 1920, will be out to clinch the PCC pennant as well in its traditional windup with arch-rival Oregon State in a pick 'em game. Oregon is 6-1-0 in the PCC to State's 5-2-0, and a draw at Oregon also could wrap things up for the Webfoots. State is barred from playing in the bowl two years in a row.

Duke, which has virtually locked up the Altanic Coast Conference's berth in the Orange Bowl against Oklahoma, closes at Carolina in a bid for he ACC flag.

STATE VS. UNC

North Carolina State, hoping for Duke to stumble, plays at South Carolina. Duke is 5-0-1 and North Carolina State 4-0-1 in league competition. The Wolfpack can't go a-bowling because of an NCAA ban.

Surprisingly, South Carolina is rated even with North Carolina State. Duke is 7 points over North Carolina.

BOWL BIDS WAITING

The Souheastern and Southwest Conference titles, with rewarding berths in the Sugar and Cotton Bowls, won't decide until the following week.

With Michigan State and Auburn, the on-two teams of the nation, facing easy opponents but don't let their coaches hear you say it, the leading games matching high-ranking opponents pit third-ranking Ohio State 7-1, the Big Ten champs, against Michigan 5-2-1, and eight ranking Iowa 8-1-1 against ninth-ranking Notre Dame, 5-2.

Carolina And Duke Renew Rivalry In Big Clash At Durham This Afternoon

44,000 Will Watch Traditional Battle

By BILL KING

Rivalry renewal is the order of the day and this afternoon in Duke Stadium two of the nation's oldest and most exciting rivals will clash for the 45th time in a series which dates back to 1888.

It's the Carolina Tar Heels, rested and refreshed after a week's layoff versus the Duke Blue Devils, anxious to clear up any doubt about their right to the Orange Bowl representation. A crowd of about 44,000, largest at Duke since 1951, is expected to be on hand for the 2 o'clock kickoff.

This traditional contest will mean a great deal to both clubs aside from the usual exuberance when one or the other is able to conquer its rival of all rivals. For Duke, it means an almost positive bid to meet Oklahoma in the Orange Bowl. For Jim Tatum's club it not only will insure a winning season, but also it is believed in some quarters that a win today and a victory over Virginia might give Carolina the Orange or some other bowl bid.

But the fact remains that this is a must game for both clubs, as it always is regardless of the season record of the two clubs. This is the game that has to be won to make the season complete. The winner gets the symbolic victory bell, the most prized of all Carolina-Duke football souvenirs.

That victory bell, incidentally, has been in the hands of the Devils for seven straight years and the only time the Tar Heels have seen it is at the ball game and occasionally when a group of students go over and "lift" it for a night.

So today Jim Tatum's wariors will be gunning to gain back the prestige which Tar Heel teams have lost since 1950 when the Blue Devils started their dominance over the Tar Heels. A win today would also close the gap in the all-time series to 22-18-3 in favor of the Durham contingents.

The always tough Blue Devils should find this Carolina club a much more formidable one than it has faced in the past seven years. The Tar Heels, 5-3 for the season, have been tough all year with victories over Navy, South Carolina, Clemson, Miami and

HER MAJESTY—Pretty Diana Johnson, Alpha Delta Pi pledge from Asheboro, poses shortly after being named Queen of the Yackety-Yack Beauty Contest Thursday night. Miss Diana Johnson Winner Of Yack Beauty Contest Title

By BEN TAYLOR

If you've never witnessed the paraphenalia and splendor of a beauty pageant, then you missed the best chance you'll ever have Thursday night in Memorial when Yackety-Yack Queen Diana Johnson was chosen from a field of 108 lovelies.

There's nothing quite like sitting on the very edge of the middle seat of the front row and witnesing a parade of beautiful girls. Especially when they're all Tar Heels, true-blue or adopted.

Beautiful Miss Elaine Herndon, currently reigning as Miss North Carolina, Harvey Humphrey, Lt., U. S. Navy, and Lawrence Wofford, chief photographer of the Raleigh News and Observer served as the judges for the annual event. They were able to narrow down the field of 108 down to 15 in less than two hours.

Mellow music by Bill Byers and his quartet, and Pee Wee Batton and a combo intensified the excitement at intervals while the judges smilingly pondered their final decisions.

Diana, a vivacious junior from Asheboro, was sponsored by Lambda Chi Alpha. She is an English major and a transfer from East Carolina College. While there she was an Honorary Colonel of the AFROTC.

Ty Boyd, radio announcer of WCHL, served as master of ceremonies, announcing the young ladies. They appeared from behind the blue felt curtains, walked slowly down to the imitation grass carpet, turned around to give the audience and judges a full view, walked straight across in front of the stage, and returned behind the curtains, ushered out by a round of applause from the audience . . . and always the enchanting smile.

Pika 'Beat Dook' Parade Goes On Despite The Rainy Weather

By PARKER MADDREY

The drizzling rain did not dampen Carolina spirits as hundreds turned out to watch the annual "Beat Dook" Parade yesterday afternoon.

Coeds adorning the floats, dressed from evening gowns to beach attire, managed to keep smiling though perplexed that the drizzle was unraveling their hair.

Reasonable facsimilies of 'Dook' Blue Devils were put in a meat grinder, a clothes wringer, two guillotines and were hanged and buried.

Mangum Dorm's float took first place in the Dorm Men's division. The float was a funeral procession consisting of two robed priests, followed by pallbearers who carried a deceased Blue Devil in an open casket. Dressed in black, a choir sang mournfully "Aye Zigga Zoomba!"

ADPi won first place in the sorority division. Its float, entitled "Carolina Carrousel," featured over a dozen coeds clad in cheerleader skirts and sweaters of both Duke and Carolina. Duke girls were twirled in a merry-go-round and a barker sold "Tatum Tickets" for the ride.

Phi Delt took first place in the fraternity division. Its float featured a man-size meat grinder with a Blue Devil inside shrieking in agony.

Judges of the floats were James H. Davis, proprietor of University Florist; Dean of Women Katherine Carmichael; Sam McGill, assistant dean of student affairs; and A. E. Cameron, math professor.

ROTC drill teams and bands did not participate because of rain.

"Beat Dook" Queen Nan Shaeffer rode on the Pika float. She was protected from the rain by sitting under a replica of the Old Well.

Other floats were two guillotines by SAE and Pi Kaps, a whale that exhaled smoke from his spout ("Swallow Dook") by Sigma Nu, two Blue Devils with heads in stocks by Phi Delts, Miami Beach setting by TEP, Blue Devil going through the wringer by KA, and a dozen coeds dressed as hornets by Pi Phi.

The Tri Delt's weather vane house ironically had a fair coed out in the drizzle and the Blue Devil inside.

Cardboard Will Perform On Television

Cardboard stunts especially designed and colored for television, will be performed at today's regionally-televised football game with Duke.

Contrasting colors will be used so that the designs will show up well. The slate of the stunts will center around the "Beat Dook" and holiday themes.

One flip series will show a Carolina player defeat Duke player for a touchdown. To insure continued friendship between the two student bodies, a "Carolina gentleman" shakes the hand of a friend from Duke.

Thanksgiving will be saluted by a reminder of its date, Nov. 28, and the cardboard representation of a brightly-colored turkey.

Fans across the field will be urged to buy Christmas seals and will receive a "Jingle Bells" Christmas greeting.

Cardboard President Pete Evans urged the students to pay careful attention to their instruction cards and the stunt called to insure accurate pictures.

The Cardboard is very pleased, according to officials, with the cooperation of everyone in making this a successful season. Its long-range planning committee is now at work making plans for an even better organization and half-time show next year.

YRC Hears Kuralt; Votes To Back Eisele

Wally Kuralt, originator of the move to recall the editor of the Daily Tar Heel, addressed the Young Republican Club at a formal meeting of that group Thursday night.

Following Kuralt's address, the campus Republicans endorsed candidate Doug Eisele as "the most capable candidate" in the recall race for editor of UNC's student newspaper.

At the same meeting, Jim Steele was elected president and Dave Suckow was chosen vice president. Thirteen members attended the meeting.

Editorial Meeting Is Announced

Candidate for editor Doug Eisele announced yesterday that there will be an "Eisele for Editor rally Monday night at 7:30 in Gerrard Hall. He said the purpose of this rally was to present to students" the true issues of the recall." Eisele will address the rally.

Meanwhile, candidate Paul Rule, who earlier expressed "disappointment" over Eisele's refusal to accept his challenge to a public debate Monday night, said that the time of the verbal duel would be postponed until 9:30 so that it would not conflict with the "Eisele for Editor" rally.

"Mr. Bass and I have both agreed to change the time for the discussion," Rule said.

Eisele was unavailable for comment on Rule's postponement of the debate and his campaign manager, Syd Shuford, said he could make no comment as to whether Eisele would accept Rule's challenge.

"This is a decision Eisele will have to make for himself," Shuford said.

Earlier Eisele said he had refused Rule's challenge because of the possibility of the rally Monday night. "At the time of his proposal," he said, "plans had not been completed and I could make no statment concerning my plans for that evening."

He added that there will be no debate at the "Eisele for Editor" rally but rather the meeting would be organized along pep rally lines.

Crucial Implications Of Recall Election Aired In Interview With P. K. Sinclair

What are the real implications of the recall election for editor of the Daily Tar Heel? How important is it to a free student publication? Is it just another election?

These questions and others were discussed in an interview yesterday with P. K. Sinclair of the UNC Dept. of Economics, whose experience on college publications dates back to his days at McGill University in Montreal, Quebec, Canada.

Mr. Sinclair, do you as an experienced journalist feel that the recall election is wise?

"The recall election may be said to be analogous to the situation in France, where there is a change in government about every six months. Under such a situation, you just can't settle down to a decent job of work.

"The students might do well to reflect upon why it is that the President of the United States is elected to serve for a term of four years."

Do you feel, sir, that freedom is involved in the recall? "Certainly, but what is freedom? We hear a lot about Freedom of Worship, Freedom from Want, and so forth. One we don't hear about often is the Freedom from Harassment. Would it not seem the wiser course to employ the recall only after having exhausted all other means of dealing with the problem."

Do you feel that an editor should be allowed to speak out on controversial issues even if the student body disagrees?

"If an editor is courageous, he is going to speak out on controversial issues about which he is sensitive."

Mr. Sinclair, do you feel that the editor should attempt to represent student opinion on these issues?

"If the students merely want a reflection of their own views, then there is really no need for a newspaper editor.

"This brings us to the question of what constitutes the editor's function. Is he merely a functionary? Must he take a statistical poll of student opinion before he can make statements on controversial issues about which there may exist student disagreement?

"If this is so, then the editor could only express views on which at least 51 per cent of the student population agrees.

"I will repeat: if an editor is courageous, he is going to speak out on controversial issues about which he feels sensitive."

You spoke of Freedom from Harassment. What exactly do you mean by that?

"I mean this: the freedom to be let alone: to be allowed to do a good job without being constantly harassed. This type of harassment is equally injurious to editors, professors and judges.

"I am shocked by the ease with which people signed the recall petition. People should be made much more aware of the seriousness of the recall principle; they should realize that it should only be used sparingly.

"Finally, I shall say this. If the present editor is defeated, at least he can hold his head up in the knowledge that he has made his stand. I would like to add, however, that I am completely non partisan. I support no candidate."

He made it clear, however, that he did not entertain any personal animosities toward either of the two candidates opposing Bass.

"I have only the greatest regard for both the young men seeking the editorship," he said. "It is a combination of the fundamental issue involved in the impeachment of the editor and the underhanded political intrigues involving those high in student government that give me pause."

Cheshire said that it was "inconceivable" to him that the students would "condone by implication the actions of these trusted but untrustworthy political schemers by their votes in Tuesday's election."

He added that "if the recall succeeds, student democracy will have proved itself incompetent on the campus of the South's greatest university."

Bill Cheshire To Head Campaign For Neil Bass

Editor Neil Bass announced yesterday that Bill Cheshire, senior journalism student, will manage his campaign for re-election in the recall vote for editor of the Daily Tar Heel.

Cheshire, a Korean War veteran and member of the Zeta Psi Fraternity, will assume complete control over the entire campaign program and will operate apart from any connection with the Daily Tar Heel or its editor.

Commenting on Cheshire's acceptance, Editor Bass said: "His willingness to handle my campaign demonstrates a tremendously admirable ability to overcome fraternal and personal ties, and to stand up forthrightly for the issue involved—freedom of editorial expression." (Cheshire is a fraternity brother of candidate Doug Eisele.)

In accepting the appointment, Cheshire pointed out that he thought the issue involved in the recall transcended his personal regard for either of the opposing candidates.

He added that he had hoped at the start that the issues and personal qualifications involved in the recall would be kept clear of any "purely political" maneuvering.

"Now, however," he said, "I think it safe to say that the campaign has taken on such political overtones that an organized election campaign has become necessary in order to bring the obvious and unclouded issues before the public."

Methodist Services

Bob Johnson, chaplain to Methodist students, will deliver the sermon at University Methodist Church at the 9 a.m. and 10 a.m. services. His topic will be "Ideas Have Consequences."

At the Wesley Foundation supper program, Dr. Arnold Nash of the Dept. of Religion, will participate in a question and answer session at 5:45 p.m.

Cavalcade Tickets

Tickets to the Carolina Cavalcade of Talent Tuesday are now on sale at the Y and at GM Information Desk.

Dancing Prohibition And Rip Van Winkle..

Wake Forest College students have finally rebelled against the archaic and unrealistic prohibition of dancing on campus.

Thursday's demonstration, during which approximately 200-300 students bunny-hopped across Winston-Salem, was a well-ordered and well-disciplined affair.

And it served to emphasize that college students are not the type to sit back and pay homage to unrealistic and antidated regulations and prohibitions.

The Baptist State Convention should reconsider its ban against social dancing. And the student bodies of Meredith and Wake Forest should be allowed participation in a pleasurable and accepted social custom—on campus.

The Baptist State Convention is too-filled with reactionaries who would, if such were possible, turn back the clock to horse-and-buggy days—the days of parlor courting, bustles and high-top shoes.

Time is a fleeting thing. And the ban against dancing on the campuses of Wake Forest and Meredith Colleges is an anachronism —an unforgivable lag in the natural order of things.

The unrealistic ban should be revoked immediately. And the state's Baptists, of which we are in membership, should stop playing Riu Van Winkle and adjust to the times.

The Twentieth Century is an age of adjustment and necessary adaptation.

Baptists and the Baptist State Convention should wake up to the times.

'Beat Dook' Enthusiasm; Good Student Response..

Festivities preceding the 'Dook' game today have been well-organized and have been blessed by strong student support.

We offer our most hearty congratulations to the winners of the 'Beat Dook' Parade float competition:

Fraternities—Phi Delta Theta.
Sororities—Alpha Delta Pi.
Men's Dormitories—Mangum.

There were other outstanding entries in the parade, including floats from from Delta Delta Delta Sorority—which met unfortunate mechanical difficulties—Tau Epsilon Phi, Chi Omega Sorority and others.

To the winners, we offer editorial congratulations.

And to the 'Beat Dook' queen, lovely Miss Nan Schaeffer of Kappa Delta Sorority, we offer our most enthusiastic congratulations.

Pi Kappa Alpha Fraternity, sponsor of the event, has again, this year, demonstrated admirable planning and enthusiasm.

Editorially we say, Now 'Beat Dook'—The Victory Bell has a resonant peal.

GUEST EDITORIAL:

N. C. State Technician Hits Recall Election..

A college newspaper which never mentions controversial issues—this could be the future facing the University of North Carolina's Daily Tar Heel.

The recall election on November 26, may set the stage for such a situation at Chapel Hill.

The petition circulated among Carolina students charged Editor Neil Bass with being "incompetent, irresponsible, and incapable of functioning any longer in his present capacity." The real issue which will be decided by the recall election is not Bass' qualifications for editing the Daily Tar Heel but whether or not a college newspaper editor may editorialize on issues in opposition to the students' or the administration's viewpoint.

If the Carolina student body elects a new editor, will he be able to exercise the same editorial freedom practiced by Bass and previous Daily Tar Heel editors, the same editorial freedom which should be practiced by college newspaper editors everywhere? Future editors may hesitate to write editorials on subjects which may be in opposition to ideas held by the student body or by any campus groups for fear of losing their office through a recall election.

The editorial page of a college newspaper is considered to be the editor's page on which he may express his opinions. It should not be a mere reflection of the opinions held by the student body, the administration, the alumni, or any other group connected with a college.

Legionnaires And Realism

We have always opposed much of the rah-rah patriotism promulgated by the American Legion.

Thus it gives us particular pleasure to see Legionnaires vote to approve the teaching of courses explaining Communism in American schools. The Legion's National Executive Committee approved the teaching of courses explaining Communism in order that the "fallacies" involved in such governmental organization might be pointed out.

Godless Communism appeals less to us than an offer of a night's quartering in a rattlesnake's den. But the American public can not assume an ostrich-eye point-of-view in regard to the Communist threat.

The Legionnaires' action is admirable.

CAROLINA CARROUSEL:

'Elliteracy' And The Recall Election Job

Gail Godwin

Some energetic little buzz-bomb, evidently a member of the "Down With Bass" movement, has been plastering a new type of propaganda on dormitory walls and bulletin board. The propaganda is in the form of a 3"x5" notecard with words written something like this:

"Attention fellow students. The real issue of this recall is not freedom of the press. It is Elliteracy."

And so on. I didn't stop to read the rest. And when I got back from lunch and was going to read the rest, it had already been taken down.

Wonder who is writing these little masterpieces. I wouldn't know since they didn't sign their name.

While walking down the street, students would be wise to wear some kind of head protection. Some more avid recall backers may start dropping propaganda sheets with bricks attached out of airplanes.

Overheard at the Yack Beauty Pageant last night: A bewildered young man, obviously dazed by the abundance of beauties before him, turned to a companion and remarked, "Where do all these good looking girls go in the daytime?"

Well, of course he must realize that in order to be beautiful, these good-looking girls sleep during the daytime to get their necessary beauty rest. And unfortunately the ones who get up and go to classes find evening dresses and makeup and jewels to be uncomfortable while wedged between desk and chair.

So they surrrounder to the not-so-beautiful loafers and socks, little brown polo coats and shapeless ivy league sweaters.

Just remember when you see one of these commonly-clothed coeds: Here is a potential Cinderella. She just turns into a pumpkin in the daytime.

The Pine Room showed miraculous improvement today. Three boys kept tables spic and span during the rush hours of twelve and one. People would get up and no sooner had they gathered together all their belongings, whisk, whoosh, wipe! The tables were ready for new occupants.

POLL RESULTS

GMAB Polls Committee Chairman Jack Lewis released results of their recent poll last night. The figures, according to him show opposition to the recall favored by a vote of approximately two to one. The GMAB Polls Committee makes periodic surveys of campus opinion on topical issues and is a completely non-partisan organization.

READERS' REPOSITORY:

Have The Electors Failed?

EDITOR:

Before I express my views concerning the curent recall election so prominently in focus, I feel that an examination of the very functions of editorship must prefare.

According to the well-worn dictionary, an editor is, "The supervising director of a newspaper", and his functions are to "Edit material for publication and present his opinion or comment on some subject or material." In short, the editor is one who directs the policy of his organ of printed expression and endeavors by various mean to set forth his own position or opinion in, or as if in, the editorial column of his publication.

This means that by very definition the editor should, and in most cases, will, express himself on a variety of subjects concerning within his scope of publication—and will not in every case please all who read him. For that matter, who could? — and for another matter, who should?

For better or for worse, then, the main responsibility of the editor is that of "editing material for publication, and presenting opinions or comments on some subject or material."

This idea of responsibility, so widely in question these days of the Daily Tar Heel Editorship, seems to be to lie within the student's themselves - as electors - and it is necessary that we realize where we as electors have failed, (if that the case) and not where our duly elected editor has. It is the prime responsibility of the students, during the spring election to familarize themselves with the candidates in order to decide that candidate for whom they will cast their ballot. And, it is up to the students as a body before this time to take upon themselves the responsibility of selecting proper candidates In all too many cases it is the same sad story of "He who did not bother to vote is he who cries the loudest."

This recall election show, I believe, a weakness not so much within the framework of the Tar Heel Editorship (although I firmly believe much could be improved), but within the nature of student electoral responsibility itself.

It is then, I say, the students who should bear the weight in selecting a compatible candidate, and in this case, an editor. And before the election realize the functions of the editor, so that after the elections the great clamor will not be for recalling the very man whom they have just put in office—but accepting the editor for what he is, and of basic importance, for what he stands: student autonomy, and freedom of the press.

As much as many may not be in favor of a great deal Mr. Bass has to say, we must be cognized of the damning precedent that is in danger of being set if this recall election is successful in removing the present editor. And too, of the temptation of University officials to incorporate the organ of student expression into their control and out of student hands. Since it seems that the students are not able to successfully run their own daily publication—and that conflicting factions within the publication system itself are constantly causing upheavals in the editorship.

It would be sad indeed to have to turn the Daily Tar Heel over to the School of Journalism, so that editorial policies would be dictated and controlled by a source outside of students themselves.

As much as some groups of students do not like the editorship of Mr. Bass, and do not favor the way in which he is guiding the Daily Tar Heel, we must accept the fact that he is the duly elected representative of the students —elected last spring by a majority of seemingly responsible student electors, and not to be recalled at will, puting in his place another man who may , or may not be just as unacceptable to other groups.

Finally, concerning the opponent's claim of incompetent editorship on the part of Mr. Bass, and on the other hand, Mr. Bass' claim of conspiracy against him—

DEMOCRATIC LATITUDE:

Ballot Casters And Suppression

EDITOR:

Besides the everyday rigamaroll of 8 a.m. classes, Y-Court, labs, and teacher's dirty looks, it appears that the UNC student body has been experiencing a firsthand course in "democratic latitude." Let's hope all, sober and drunk alike, have paid attention.

The final lesson in this course will be the upcoming recall election concerning Daily Tar Heel Editor Neil Bass. Machinery has been set in motion to necessitate the vote by the students and the expected promises will bounce upon the ears of the 7,000 here. Yet, the very nature of this election should serve to educate the Carolina student in the basic properties of a democracy under which he has lived, survived, and highly prospered since his mother smiled at his first innocent "Goo-Goo."

The candidates have presented themselves. The students have heard their respected platforms aired via the printed page and public debate. Student Body officers have geared the electioneering machinery into a high pace, preparing for what they hope will be a big turnout. Slogans, literature, carefully rehearsed accusations and promises are churning through the campus. So, right along about now, we have reached the middle section of our course in "democracy latitude."

The course started, I believe, with the election by the student body last spring of the present Editor of the DTH, Neil Bass. Apparently, the students were satisfied with their choice, because none thought of recalling Mr. Bass on the day he accepted the job. Having forced themselves to trudge down to the first floor of their dorms or other appropriate voting places and make a few marks on a ballot besides names that were just names, the populace of UNC settled back into their lumpy beds and forgot everything.

Then September rolled around, their course in "democratic latitude" had resumed its momentum. Raring to give their lungs for "dear 'ole Carolina" in Kenan Stadium each Saturday, the students were appalled when Bass had the "audacity" to imply that Coach Tatum wasn't completely pure in his associations with athletics here at Carolina. Having no other media for retort, they attacked Bass. No "teacher" was going to tell their innocent young ears any news that wasn't pretty; because they wished to hear only those news items sweet and truthful. But, apparently, Bass didn't pay too much attention to his 7,000 pupils. He kept up his impulsive writing against Tatum. He even began to delve into other controversial subjects, even if somewhat recklessly, not particularly caring if anyone agreed with his words, just as long as said words generated a little thought. Here he ran into trouble . . . trouble personified in "Letters to The Editor" which began to appear on Page 2. They weren't very complimentary, but neither was Bass.

Any good teacher knows that it is generally wise to follow through on a subject in which your students are very interested, even if that interest is of a reactionary nature. In this respect, Editor Bass touched upon numerous campus organizations, individuals and trends. Time and again his comments and ideas drew much reaction from every corner of the campus. But, it was, nevertheless his opinion—warped or otherwise.

And now the final phase of the course has presented itself to the students . . . the election Nov. 26.

As I see it, it is not a question of whether or not Editor Bass is representing the opinional pulse of the campus. It is a question of whether we, as students, will allow our rights to express opinions on a controversial subject to be jammed down our throats through a stifled student newspaper.

This recall election should not ever have to take place at a school as independent as Carolina. It reflects the incompetency of the voters who cast ballots last spring. Perhaps, more important, it will reflect the deterioration of the DTH long considered one of this country's top university newspapers. But it is too late for any retraction . . . only hindsight is left.

I have not intended to voice either support or denial of Editor Bass or his opponents. I have simply tried to awaken all of us to the importance of this upcoming recall election. Its very evolvement and its results are being watched with anxious eyes all over the South. It is no longer a matter between a few opponents of Bass and the Editor. It concerns every student here. It deals with a concept of democracy . . . freedom of expression . . . not with a personal gain or anxiety.

However, the results of this recall election will reveal just how many of us have slept through this course in "democratic latitude."

Retraction:

The letter attributed to Bill Dorrah in yesterday's Daily Tar Heel was actually written by Miss Claire Pike. Through simple error, Dorrah"s name was attached to Miss Pike's letter.

Dorrah had this to say concerning the mix-up in names:

"I can understand how the names might be reversed since I actually sent a letter to the editor, whom I support in the recall election."

Artificial Meteors Believed To Have Been Fired In Space

BEDFORD, Mass., Nov. 22 (AP) —American scientists are believed to have fired artificial meteors into interplanetary space, the Air Force Cambridge Research Center here said today.

The meteors were shot from an Aerobee rocket fired over the Air Forces launching center in New Mexico, the night of Oct. 16.

The artificial meteors were aluminum pellets fired into space 54 miles above the earth.

Air Force scientists estimated the charge blasted the pellets into space at a velocity of 33,000 miles per hour. This is nearly double the 18,000 miles per hour velocity of the Russian satellites now moving around the earth.

Since scientists estimate the velocity needed for an object to escape the earth's pull of gravity is only 25,000 miles per hour some of the artificial meteors are believed to be still orbiting through interplanetary space.

The experiment was carried out by the Geophysics Research Directorate of the Air Force Cambridge Research Center.

Scientists said the blast itself was very bright, having an intensity of nearly minus 10 visual magnitude or more than 5,000 times brighter than the Soviet satellites.

The blast, 54 miles above the earth, was observed at Mt. Palomar about 600 miles away with a brightness greater than any star or planet.

The shot was fired at 10:13 p.m. Mountain Standard Time and was clearly visible to observers on the ground, scientists said.

Dean James L. Godfrey Speaks To Librarians

James L. Godfrey, Dean of he Faculty at UNC, told members of the State Library Association attending a Thursday meeting in Raleigh that there will be less teaching and more learning in colleges in the future because students will do more for themselves.

"It seems quite clear that the number of college teachers will not increase as rapidly as their students," he said. "Classes must become larger and each student will receive less personal attention. In this situation, it is inevitable that the student must rely more upon himself. In short there will be less teaching and more learning."

"This learning," he continued, "can go on only if the student is capable of self instruction and this in turn will depend upon his ability to read difficult material with understanding and appreciation . . . it seems certain that all along the educational ladder the emphasis upon reading must increase and will increase."

Dean Godfrey concluded, "The librarian and the library here become more than ever before the proper adjunct of the educational process. In a very real sense the capacity of this nation to make educational progress in the conditions of the future will depend upon the increased and effective use of library resources in every school and town throughout the country.

BUTTON-DOWN WINSOCKI!

College students love shirts with button-down collars, but we've never known exactly why. So Van Heusen's research department asked around and got the following answers.

L.B. Senior at Mass. Institute of Entomology. "The buttons keep things from crawling under your collar. Or, if things do crawl under your collar, the buttons prevent them from crawling out again."

D.D.E. Freshman at Horatio Alger Tech. "You get more buttons so I figure the shirt is more valuable. Is it?"

B.P. Junior at the Pate School of Tonsorial Arts. "They're cooler! Wisps of air blow through the little hole in the button and keep my clavicle at a refreshing temperature.

P.S. Senior of Makemoney's Correspondence School. "I'm a neurotic. With Button-down shirts I can wear one side buttoned and the other side unbuttoned, thereby giving the effect of wearing two types of shirt at one time. Oh help me, help me!"

Z.J. Graduate student at the T.S. Swinburne School of Beautiful Experiences. "Buttons remind me of pearls. Pearls remind me of oysters. Oysters remind me of indigestion. Indigestion reminds me of my doctor. My doctor reminds me of his nurse. She's gorgeous. Gorgeous! So the more buttons the better."

Yes, there's agreement that button-down collars are the thing. And there's further agreement that Van Heusen is the king of Button-down stylists. Just take a look at Van Heusen Oxfordians next time you're in the market for shirts. You'll see immediately why they're famous. $5.00.

Suspect In Police Slayings To Be Tried In Rockingham

ROCKINGHAM, Nov. 22 (AP) —Frank Edward Wetzel, accused of killing two North Carolina Highway Patrolmen, may go on trial for his life in the Richmond County Courthouse here early next year.

Wetzel, 36-year-old escapee from a New York mental institution, now under arrest in California, is charged with murder in the slaying of patrolmen Wister Lee Reece of Hamlet and J. T. Brown of Sanford the night of Nov. 5.

Reece was slain by a motorist he had stopped for speeding near Ellerbe in Richmond County, and Brown was killed about an hour later in Lee County. Murder warrants for Wetzel have been issued in both counties.

However, authorities said today that Wetzel likely will be tried first for the Reece slaying because it happened first and because an eye-witness is available to testify in the Reece killing. If Wetzel is convicted in the Reece case, he probably will never be tried in the Brown killing.

District Solicitor M. G. Boyette of Carthage said that "so far as I know" Wetzel would be tried first at Rockingham for the Reece killing. He said a one-week term of criminal court is scheduled to begin here on Jan. 6 and "I see no reason why it can't be tried at that term." Judge J. A. Rousseau of North Wilkesboro is scheduled to preside over the term of Richmond Superior Court.

Boyette said he has not studied the evidence in the case yet, but "I would say definitely that a first degree verdict will be sought." A first degree murder conviction carries an automatic death sentence unless the jury should recommend life imprisonment.

The FBI announced last night that Wetzel had been apprehended in Bakersfield, Calif., ending a nationwide manhunt. It said Wetzel was arrested by Bakersfield police Tuesday on a vagrancy charge and identified through fingerprints.

The FBI says it found Wetzel's fingerprints in a car found abandoned in Chattanooga, Ten., the night of Nov. 7. It has been identified as the car used by Reece's killer.

Meanwhile, arrangements were being made for Wetzel's return from California to North Carolina.

Motor Vehicles Commissioner Ed Scheidt, whose department includes the highway patrol, said plans are for the FBI to bring Wetzel back to the state under federal court processes which would eliminate the necessity of North Carolina seeking to extradite him from California.

Scheidt also said he expected Wetzel to be tried first for the Reece slaying because in that case "We have a witness who was there when it happened."

The witness was Robert Terry, 30, Negro, of Norman who hitchhiked a ride from Asheboro with the man who killed Reece. He told officers he saw the man reach for a gun after Reece had stopped the car for speeding. He said that as the man fired at the officer, he jumped from the car and was found by officers at the scene.

World In Brief

Will Not Prosecute

WARWICK, VA., Nov. 22 (AP) —Alleghany County, Pa., authorities notified Warwick police today that they will not prosecute a 53 year-old local businessman who has admitted to slaying two persons in Pennsylvania 31 years ago.

James Lawrence, a Negro, strolled into police headquarters late Nov. 3 and said he was Robert Lee Payton, wanted for killing two persons in a Pittsburg suburb in 1926. Lawrence operates a flooring firm here with his two sons.

Buying Power

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22 (AP) —The average factory worker is going into the Christmas shopping season with about 3 per cent less buying power than he had a year ago.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported this figure today on the basis of its living cost data.

Living costs did not rise last month, the Bureau said, but previous price advances and a sharp drop in working hours in October reduced the take-home pay and the "real spendable earnings" of factory workers.

Acquitted

WASHINGTON, Nov. 22 (AP)— Federal District Judge Edward M. Curran today reversed himself and acquitted Dr. Otto Nathan of contempt of Congress charges but said he disagreed with the Supreme Court ruling which caused the reversal.

Nathan, 64, executor of the estate of the late Albert Einstein and an associate economics professor at New York University, had been convicted by Judge Curran last May 30 on the charges, but never sentenced.

Right along about here we ought to mention two of the luckiest gentlemen on campus Thursday night. James Dunn and Jack Thompson had the "chore" of providing stationary escort for the 108 lovelies as they stepped down the stairs in presenting themselves to the judges. Strange how little they complained about their job after the contest was over.

With a bouquet of flowers in her arms and a crown upon her head, Miss Johnson stood regally as the cameras flashed; her winning smile mingling with the gleam in her eye.
